New York Evening Sun: The girls themselves kept very quiet about this. They belonged to the graduating class of a certain preparatory school. To meet the class expenses, the members determined to give an entertainment before commencement week, to which all the other students might come and bring their friends, and, incidentally, pay an admittance fee. To make the more money, a lemonade stand was put in operation, and the two girls who had charge of it were expected to reap a large harvest for their class from the sale of the cooling drink. Carefully tucked away under the table they had the reserve supply of lemonade, and while one of them saw to it that the glasses were washed out and that the pitcher on the table was kept filled, the other sold the lemonade and took charge of the money. But the first one was called away for a time, and that left the other girl in charge of the whole affair. She began to feel hurt when she overheard different persons saying that that was very weak lemonade, and to revive the old jocular remarks about the one lemon that may have been used. But a bystander understood it all when girl No. 1 returned and gasped: "You haven't been taking it from that pail! That's the one I rinsed the glasses in."

Leslie Bassett, thirteen years old, is riding across the many miles of prairie between Colorado and the Missouri river. The idea of making this jaunt across three states struck the boy last winter. Attempts to persuade him to abandon the trip were useless. Anticipating that highwaymen might attack him, he practiced with a revolver, and on his departure carried a gun. The boy wears a bicycle suit, carries no baggage and only a little money. He is an accomplished amateur entertainer, and relies on his ability in this line to win the shekels of the Kansans and obtain accommodations en route.

The Philadelphia Times publishes the following letter from a perplexed reader: "Can you inform me whether the shirt waist proposed for the male sex is to be the sport of fashion and to pass from cambric to silk, having pompadour sleeves at the shoulders, or is it for this season to fit snugly to the arms? Can percales be worn, and is organdy permissible? Is it to be belted at the waist and end there, or is it to preserve a masculine continuity indorsed by older practices? Of course, if we must wear shirt waists, we want to wear the right thing, and we seek authority. Yours faithfully, Doubt and Anxiety."

A writer in Bird Lore says: "Several years ago, when in a Western town, I was taken to a neighbor's to see his birds. Four cages swung in the shelter of a commodious porch. One contained a redwinged blackbird that had been taken from its nest when very young and brought up by hand. His associates were a canary, a bluejay and an oriole. The canary had been purchased in a bird store, and had there learned its song. The bluejay and oriole had been taken from neighboring nests, and had, no doubt, picked up the characteristic notes of their species from the many other members of their kind that inhabited the vicinity, but it was many miles to the nearest swamp or lowland where one might find a red-winged blackbird. This red-winged had learned perfectly the notes of his caged companions, and had picked up some notes of other birds in the neighborhood, but not one note of the red-winged blackbird did he know."

"You Americans call things by such queer names," said the Englishman.

"What's wrong now?" asked the New Yorker.

"Why call these things elevators when they take people down as often as they take them up?"

"Well, what do they call them in your country?"

"We call them lifts."

"Well, I can't see that the word 'lift' expresses their use any better than the word 'elevator.'"

"Oh, yes, it does. Don't you know you can lift persons down as well as lift them up?"—Yonkers Statesman.

CAN'T BALK REFORM

BUT GOVERNOR LIND WILL REORGANIZE THE GRAIN DEPARTMENT.

"Forward, March!" the State and National Word of Command—The Fiasco of the Re-Election of Grain Inspector Clausen—Summary of Results of the Great Chicago Meeting—Next Year's Campaign Forecast in Burning Issues That Will Move the People—Dubbing McKinley "Emperor"—The Secret of W. J. Bryan's Power—Sir Moreton Frewen and News from Hon. C. A. Reform Press Bureau.
St. Paul, July 31, 1899.

The state political event of the week, and of the whole administration in fact, to this point, has been the open attempt of two members of the grain and warehouse commission to thwart reform in that department by the re-appointment of Chief Inspector A. C. Clausen. The issue of reform has been drawn at this line for so many years, and it had been so taken for granted that Clausen would go, especially after his condemnation by the Republican legislative investigating committee, and by the state press regardless of party, that his sudden reappointment created a sensation in most quarters. The exception was with those having inside knowledge of how futile would be the efforts of the enemies of reform.

While at this writing definite results cannot be stated, it is perfectly safe to reassure all who might fear that Governor Lind would not be able to reorganize the department. To those who know the governor it will be sufficient to say that he promptly informed the grain and warehouse board that under no circumstances would he consent to Mr. Clausen remaining at the head of the department. If the two members had reappointed Mr. Clausen, in order to express their personal feeling toward him, as a mere compliment, the governor had no objection; but he informed them flatly that he should insist upon the displacement of the Inspector by one at least in sympathy with the purposes of the administration.

Governor Lind's determination to permit nothing to interfere with the pledge to the people for this reform, if within his power to accomplish it, recognizes the fact that this has been the political aim of the reform forces of Minnesota for a number of years. In 1892 and 1894 it was represented in the campaign made by Hon. S. M. Owen, whose defeat was then accomplished by means resembling those to which current report ascribes the present effort to retain Inspector Clausen. That Governor Lind recommended and Commissioner Ringdahl supported ex-Senator Reishus for Clausen's place, besides recognizing his ability and fitness, was no doubt largely in recognition of his connection with the long struggle that has been made for such reform.

Our friends, the enemy, have given circulation to all manner of misleading reports, but they will all react upon their own heads. And when all the facts can be made known, which will depend upon how far Mr. Clausen's supporters may have the courage and bad judgment to go, the whole story will be entertaining to the people.

Governor Lind's letter to Senator Miller demonstrated, as nothing else could, with what careful scrutiny and deliberation every bill was considered that came up for executive approval. It demonstrated, too, that in John Lind the legislative schemers had to deal with a man of eminent ability, a lawyer as well equipped to determine the scope and pass upon the merits of a public measure as any in the state. No mere passage through two both houses went with him. It had to be good law and good legislation or it wasn't signed. Now does anyone think the people are going to fail to appreciate the value of that kind of a man?

To put into a few lines an adequate summary of the spirit and results of the Chicago meeting of last week, would be a difficult task for the most gifted. Suffice it to say that there was a representation of the allied forces, outside the Democratic organization, representing quite as many states as the national Democratic committee was represented by, the latter being general. While not a dissenting voice was heard throughout the committee's deliberations, the other forces, equally harmonious, expressed their sentiments toward the new Democracy, by unquestionably tendering their aid and co-operation. This was done by a committee of the Silver men, consisting of one from each state, Minnesota being represented. The great popular event was the Auditorium meeting, which for numbers, character, enthusiasm and spirit, is said to have rarely, if ever, been equalled, even in that city of great meetings. In fact the meeting ran away from its managers, overturned the set programme which provided for covering the various sections, including Minnesota, and feasted on the national celebrities present. Our great leader, Bryan, was the grand, central figure, while ex-Governor Altgeld, as the author of the Chicago Platform, received such an ovation as would repay years of almost martyrdom in a holy cause. Thanks to the masterly tactics of Mr. Bryan, the great Altgeld-Harrison factional fight shrinks into small consequence, with each faction pledged to the same thing for next year—to deliver Illinois.

Unswerving devotion to the Chicago platform, declaration of war on trusts, uncompromising opposition to imperialism, militarism and all foreign alliances and entanglements, the fixed determination to hold the McKinley administration to strict responsibility for mal-administration and inefficiency, with an enthusiastic devotion to Bryan which accepts his leadership as God-given; such is the forecast of the campaign of 1900.

Among falsehoods industriously circulated by the Republican press, none are more vicious than imputations against ex-Governor Stone of Missouri. He is loyal to Bryan, as he is loyal to the Chicago platform and to the issues that have since arisen. Expressive of the confidence in him he was made vice chairman, the office having been created for that special purpose. Governor Stone is one of the ablest men of country, and when the time comes for calling a Southern man to lead Democracy, the governor's friends will be heard from.

It is a just but strange comment, that not a daily paper in the Twin Cities, except the Globe, has correctly presented the spirit or action of the Chicago meeting. To such extent are the reports of the associated press misleading.

The same is true regarding Editor Devlin of the Press Bureau. He was neither deposed nor censured except by implication for taking sides in the Altgeld-Harrison troubles, and continues to issue the National Bulletin. Upon the return of Chairman Jones a press committee will be appointed to have charge of all such work. Plans for the whole are now under consideration by Hon. George H. Shibley and Willis J. Abbott, the able journalist, until recently editor of the New York Journal.

Never did Mr. Bryan seem so great, in the opportunity of comparing him with other able national characters. What is the secret of his power? The National Watchman well answers that it is his absolute honesty. He makes no mistakes because he resorts to no subterfuge of speech. It is the power of truth eloquently spoken, by one who is as pure of heart as he is able and courageous, that brings the hearts of millions in rapport with Bryan.

"Well," said our great leader, in parting with several of us, "you go back to your fighting, and I'll go on with my preaching."

The epigrams contained in Mr. Bryan's Auditorium speech challenge comparison with anything the times have produced in political polemics. Thus condensed was given the arraignment of the trust and description of its evils, the suggestion of direct and certain remedy, the impeachment of the party under whose legislation and administration the trust has risen, and the demonstration that the people can hope for no relief from the party in power, because its success in retaining power is to be attained by money furnished by the trusts and specially protected interests.

Speaking of imperialism, the Auditorium audience was convulsed, and cheered the hit, when a stentorian voice greeted a reference to McKinley with the shout of "Emperor! Hurrah for the Emperor!"

One of the personal pleasures of the Chicago gathering was meeting with Sir Moreton Frewen, the great English bimetallist. Mr. Frewen's personality is as delightful as his battle has been able and brave for the cause of bimetallism. Mr. Frewen said that he had been in company with Hon. C. A. Towne for some time before leaving England; that Mr. Towne is now in Brussels, and may be expected home early in September.

Mr. Frewen, who is a large stock raiser on his English estates, commissioned one of the Minnesota delegation to ascertain rates and prices for shipment of refuse wheat from the Minneapolis mills which he may export as feed for his stock.

While St. Paul gold standard "Prosperity" is two more banks less than it was, that of Minneapolis is marked by a decrease of $2,000,000 in the valuation of personal property for taxation over what it was in 1898. The latter is due, The Times says, to "changed business conditions." The Journal doubtless boasts that, along with strikes and other disturbances, it is only another sign of "prosperity."

For one who is expecting a nomination for congress by the party of trusts, and their gold standard, J. Adam Bede is publishing some strange anti-trust matter in his Budget. Watch the Trust party lay out Jadam.

Hold you breath! Attorney General Douglas is about to pull the Tawney gun on the millers' trust. Watch it kick!

Embalmed beef, Shafterism and Sampsonism, Eagan, Cuban jobs, contractor stealings, poodle doctors, Corbin, Alger, Otis and the truth supressers—whew! Take that garbage pail into the next alley!

In order to proceed, let us all concede that Knute Nelson, junior senator, came here "at the age of six."

Was ever partisan fanaticism in calling white black, and black white, better illustrated than in the Minneapolis Journal's editorial disquisition, that strikes and labor troubles are an evidence of good times and prosperity? This was even too much for its co-laborer, The Times, which impales the false logic thus:

"For the victims of monopolizing trusts which have raised the flag of enforced idleness in towns and whole communities in order that moneybag may be piled on moneybag by curtailing production and forcing a demand greater than the supply? Good times for these people?

"May God pardon such logic in the face of such troubles as are brewing in a state of ebullition, for nobody else will."

BACK FROM MANILA

NEBRASKA BOYS ARRIVE IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Untimely Arrival of the Transport Upsets Elaborate Preparations That Had Been Made for the Reception of the Fighting Volunteers—Boys Are Mighty Glad to Get Home—Delay in Landing Troops Disappoints Thousands Who Had Assembled to Greet Them.

San Francisco, July 31.—The untimely arrival of the United States transport Hancock, having on board the Nebraska regiment and two batteries of the Utah artillery completely destroyed the arrangements which had been made for a royal reception and an enthusiastic welcome to the fighting volunteers returning crowned with their laurels.

The Hancock dropped anchor in the stream shortly before midnight Saturday night. The committees here from Nebraska and Utah had given up all idea of the vessel arriving earlier than Sunday morning and had prepared to be up at daylight to greet the expected ship. Tugs and launches had been chartered and Gov. Poynter of Nebraska had planned with all care and detail to be the first man aboard the Hancock and welcome the heroes from his state back to American soil.

But there was no reception committees afloat at midnight, and only one small delegation of Nebraska people, headed by Judge Robert Ryan of Lincoln and C. O. Wheaton of the same city, accompanied by the customs house officials and the correspondents made the race down the bay. Quarantine and customs regulations prevented even this little band from getting nearer the deck of the ship than the approach to the gang plank. The returning soldiers have no criticism to offer their silent reception. They cheered themselves hoarse at sight of the little fleet of launches, and from the decks of the transport shouted greetings and messages to the people on the dancing craft below. Col. H. B. Mulford, of the Nebraskas, who is in command, soon appeared at the railing. By his side stood William Grazen, of Company D, the sentinel of the Nebraska regiment, who fired the first shot in answer to shots from the Filipinos which started the war with the insurgents. He killed the first Filipino who died by an American bullet, and it was this shot which was the signal for the advance of the entire American line and the great route of the rebel army on the night of Feb. 4.

"I don't think you will see any of us returning to Manila very soon," said Col. Mulford in response to a question. Just one man in the entire regiment re-enlisted. Only twenty-five remained in the Philippines to engage in business. The Nebraska regiment had as much rough work in this war," continued Col. Musford, "as any regiment, volunteer or regular. Our death roll in the Philippines from gunshot wounds, accidents and disease, is sixty-two. Including the sick and wounded who are recovering, we dropped, all told, 204 men. On the Hancock are more than 100 wounded soldiers. The entire regiment is glad to know that it is to be mustered out in San Francisco.

The men on the Hancock number 1,136, and include the two Utah light batteries and six discharged men from the Twenty-second regiment, U. S. A. At an early hour yesterday the quarantine officer of the port boarded the Hancock, and after careful inspection, gave the vessel a clean bill of health. Soon afterward the sick and wounded were taken in ambulances to the hospital at the Presidio. It had been arranged that those of the men able to march should be landed at noon and march to the Presidio by way of the Principal streets. As an attendant guard of honor six companies of the Second Oregon, with the regimental band, were detailed at the dock. It was found, however, that the men could not conveniently be landed earlier than 3 o'clock, and that even then some of their paraphernalia and trophies of war which they desired to use in their triumphal march were down deep in the hold and would not be available.

Gov. Poynter made these representations to Maj. Gen. Shafter, and at the urgent request of the governor, Gen. Shafter ordered that the landing of the Hancock's passengers be delayed until this morning at 9 o'clock. Ignorant of the amended arrangement thousands of San Franciscans in holiday attire lined both sides of Market street and Veness and waited for hours to shout a welcome to the returning soldiers. It was not until the Oregon companies who had been assigned as an escort marched back alone that the waiting crowd understood that they must bottle up their enthusiasm for twenty hours longer.

ST. LOUIS PROTESTS.

Appeal to McKinley Against Chicago's Drainage Canal.

St. Louis, July 31. — Mayor Siegenhein has addressed a protest to President McKinley in the name of the citizens of St. Louis. The mayor lays particular stress on "the danger to the people of St. Louis and the lower Mississippi valley should the sewage of Chicago be changed into the Mississippi river, which furnishes drinking water to thousands." He asks that the permit recently issued by the secretary of war to the trustees of the sanitary district of Chicago authorizing them to cause the waters of Lake Michigan to flow into the Chicago river and the drainage canal be revoked.

Big Blaze at La Crosse.

La Crosse, Wis., July 31.—Fire broke out in the paint shop of the factory of the La Crosse Carriage company and the entire plant was destroyed. Much finished stock was destroyed. The plant will not be rebuilt. Loss, $65,000.

DECLARE MARTIAL LAW.

Cleveland, Ohio, July 31.—Notwithstanding the fact that big crowds were upon the streets yesterday there were no outbreaks of violence and apparently very little attention was paid to the Big Consolidated cars which ran on all lines on schedule time.

West side and out Broadway is empty, but the East side lines, especially those running to the parks, were well patronized, though they carried fewer passengers by far than usual on fair Sundays.

Adjt. Gen. Axline, speaking of the fear of the people to ride on the cars in certain districts, said:

"This state of affairs is likely to continue several weeks or months if a settlement is not reached. The only way to put a stop to it is to declare martial law. That would require 4,000 or 5,000 soldiers and every street would be patrolled. Everybody would be required to remain indoors after certain hours and all who were out on the street then without a permit would be arrested. Martial law would end the trouble."

The only trouble on the South side was the hold-up of an ice cream wagon by a crowd of soldiers, who took from it a four-gallon freezer full of cream. They offered to buy, but, the driver of the wagon refused to accept it, saying he could not sell. The officer of the soldiers said he ordered the cream several days ago, but the dealer, who promised to deliver it, did not do so, probably because of the boycott. When the soldiers saw one of the company's wagons coming they stopped it, took the cream and promised to pay for it. The people in the neighborhood looked on this as a great outrage, but the soldiers only laughed and treated it as a joke.

ABSOLUTE INDEPENDENCE.

Havana, July 31. — A mass meeting was held yesterday of the Societad Democracra, a branch of the Cuban National Society of Independence. A procession paraded the streets for two hours, headed by a band and bearing banners with the inscription "Cuba is and by right ought to be free," and "Peace work." Two girls dressed to represent Cuba and America rode in the procession. Cuba libre was represented by a girl with broken chains on her wrists. Few American flags were to be seen on the streets, but hundreds of Cuban emblems were displayed. A number of the speeches were made at the meeting, all in favor of absolute independence and union, and urging the furtherance of work to secure this result. Senor Barriau said some had spoken of the assembly as one party and of Maximo Gomez as another. "The cry now is 'Death to either if that be necessary to secure the union of the people.'"

FIRM STAND TAKEN.

The Mayor of Havana Determined to Stop All Gambling.

Havana, July 31.—Maj. Lacoste has determined that gambling in Havana must stop. Hitherto only Chinese gambling houses have been raided by the police, but now the war has extended to aristocratic gambling circles. Fourteen arrests were made Friday night and a large quantity of money captured. Four sergeants of police and fifty policemen petitioned Maj. Lacoste to reinstate a certain police captain who was discharged for failing to do his duty. The sergeants were fined $15 each and the petitioners were warned that they would be discharged should they repeat their offense.

Difficulty in Coaling.

Washington, July 31. — There has been great difficulty in coaling the transports at Manila, which has caused delay in sending home the volunteers. There is now on the way to Manila hoisting apparatus which will enable the ships to be coaled at the rate of 600 tons a day. Quartermaster Pope has been instructed to have old hulks loaded with coal so that they may be brought alongside the transports and the coal transferred by the new machinery.

Men Thrown Out of Work.

Joliet, Ill., July 31.—Fire last night destroyed the great fan room of the converter in the Federal Steel company's plant. The destruction of the fan room, which supplied the air for the plant, will necessitate the closing of the mills for two or three weeks and 2,500 men will meanwhile be idle. The loss on the building and machinery is $10,000, but the loss to the company will be many times that amount on account of delay in getting out the work.

Russia Is Irritated.

St. Petersburg, July 31.—The tendency manifested by France toward rapprochement with Germany is causing great irritation and suspense in Russia. The newspapers express in strong terms their great dissatisfaction and try to demonstrate that Russia and France could not admit Germany to their intimacy without prejudice to themselves, as the Franco-Russian alliance is based upon objects diametrically opposed to the aims of Germany.

A TERRIBLE WRECK

ENGINEER AND FIREMAN KILLED AND MANY INJURED.

Accident Caused by a Landslide Which Occurred During a Cloudburst and Storm—Section of the Bank Fell on the Track and Was Run Into by a Freight Train—Then a Passenger Train Crashed Into the Wreck—Several Cars Destroyed by Fire—Many Cars Are Wrecked.

Port Jervis, N. Y., July 31.—The accident on the Erie railroad, growing out of the landslide, a mile east of Lackawaxen Saturday night, was not as serious as at first reported. Only the fireman and engineer of the derailed engine of the west-bound Chicago express, which turned over on the track, were killed, though a number of passengers on the express, the vestibule passenger train for Buffalo and Cleveland, which left New York at 7 o'clock, were injured. The wreck, which occurred shortly before midnight, was preceded by a cloudburst and storm which lasted two hours. A section of the bank fell on the east-bound track, directly in front of the freight train. Several trees went down with the rocks and earth and the freight cars and engine were turned over directly across the west-bound tracks of the Erie road. Sixty freight cars constituted the train. Only twenty-two were derailed and the debris was piled on the west-bound tracks just as the Chicago express put in an appearance, running at the rate of fifty miles an hour. The engine of the express train crashed into the wreck and the baggage car, combination and buffet car and Pullman sleepers piled upon the tracks immediately in front of the wrecked cars. The first sleeper was split in two parts as a result of the accident and the passengers were thrown thirty feet down an embankment. Fire at once broke out and four cars of the express train and nine of the freight cars were burned. Baggagemaster Becker, who found himself under the baggage car door, recovered consciousness only to discover that he was all alone in that part of the wrecked passenger car. He managed to crawl from his position only to find the blaze starting a short distance off him, while the cars were heaped somehow over him. He called for assistance, but there was no response. Then he saw the passengers who had been buried down the thirty-foot embankment endeavoring to extricate themselves from the debris and make their way up the bank. All were clad only in their night clothes and they were shivering with the cold. Some were bleeding and all were dazed. Members of the crew at once started to search different portions of the wreck and assisted those who were trying to escape. Blankets were brought in from the Pullman cars and wrapped around shivering women and half-conscious men. The relief train soon reached the scene of the accident and nearly all the injured persons were removed to the hospital.

FOOLISH FEMALE.

She Sent Poisoned Candy to Herself in the Hope of Keeping Her Name Out of a Scandal

San Francisco, July 31.—The mystery of the sending of a basket of poisoned fruit on June 29 to Miss Florence Campbell of 610 Ellis street, has been solved by Chief of Police Lee, and the result shows that no attempt was made to take life and that no one was made ill by the poisoned fruit. It appears that Miss Campbell sent the poison to herself in furtherance of a little plot by which she hoped to keep her name from figuring as co-respondent in a divorce suit. An investigation was made by Chief Lee, who later confronted Miss Campbell with the accusation of having sent the fruit to herself. She then confessed the plot. There will be no prosecution, as the law does not cover the case.

SCHURZ IN DANGER.

He Narrowly Escapes Death From Ptomaine Poisoning.

New York, July 31.—Carl Schurz narrowly escaped death Tuesday evening by ptomaine poisoning. He was made violently ill by eating bass. On Wednesday there was grave doubts of his recovery and members of the family were summoned to the city. Thursday morning he became still worse, but afterward rallied and speedily grew better. He is still confined to his bed and is very weak, but will recover.

A WOMAN'S LIFE IN UTAH.

No Mormon woman will talk from her heart to a stranger, notably and essentially when that person is a gentile, (in Mormondom, every one who is not a Mormon is a gentile,) for she knows by sad experience that this would but increase her sufferings. Of all sacrifices that have ever been exacted of the single, loving heart of true wife and mother in the name of religion, none can equal those of polygamy, which these women were taught would be practiced through all eternity, as it was "the celestial order of heaven," an eternal law.

Under its baneful influence a wife lived in the same house with her husband, surrounded by their children, a lonely, disconsolate woman. The confidence and respect that should have united their hearts, made one their interests, is first defiled and then destroyed. She early learns to be silent and observing. After their evening meal, if she sees her husband make as careful and elaborate a toilet as their circumstances permit, she dares not ask him where he is going. But that fear that ever abides in the heart of every Mormon wife eats, cankerlike, at her vitality

She may try to drive these thoughts away, she may say to herself, "No; whatever other men may do, however they may deceive their wives, my husband will be honest and true. He will not deceive me." Up almost to the hour that she is expected to go to the "endowment house" and place the hand of the second wife in that of her husband she gives her hungry soul this soothing balm. But ultimately she must awaken to the fact that no man can practice polygamy without becoming a hypocrite. Many of these women believe, or try to believe, that polygamy is a revelation from God and consequently must be obeyed.

But if any gentile woman will try to think how she would feel if her husband were to tell her that he is soon to bring into their home a second wife to usurp her place in the family circle, share her husband's affection, come between her and the man who had been her all in all for so many years, that woman will have arrived at a full, perfect, exact comprehension of what a Mormon woman suffers.—Arena.

WEATHER FROGS.

Small Living Barometers Which Are Imported From Germany.

Attached to a glass sided box seen in a bird store window was a placard marked "Weather Frogs." Within the box, perched on two long wooden rods, placed lengthwise of it and nearer the top than the bottom, like the higher perches in a birdcage, were a number of the weather frogs themselves. Some just then were brown, and one was green. They were little tree frogs of a kind found through Europe, those in the window having been imported from Germany.

When full grown, these tiny tree frogs may be little more than an inch in length. They take the color of whatever object they may be resting on—brown for wood, green if on a leaf; placed in a blue glass jar they will become blue. They may be heard but not seen, so closely in color do they resemble whatever they may have perched upon. They are called weather frogs because at the approach of rainy or changeable weather they jump into the water, at the approach of clear weather they come out again.

In captivity the weather frog is kept in a glass jar or globe, which is covered at the top with a wire screen. Water is put in the bottom of the jar, and at a convenient height is placed something for the little frog to jump up on. The weather frog in captivity is fed on flies in summer and in winter on meal worms. Its food must be alive. Weather frogs sell here at retail for 30 cents apiece. Considerable numbers of them are brought to this country.—New York Sun.

Wood Compressed by Water.

"Have you ever seen a bit of wood that you couldn't burn?" said an old sea captain to me the other day.

"Why, lots," I replied, "the brier root, for instance—at least, if it's good—ironwood, too, and one or two others."

"I don't mean those," he said. "But have you ever seen a lot of common deal that fire had no effect on?" He pulled from his pocket a morsel of what looked like white Norwegian deal and handed it to me. I was surprised at the weight. "Put it in the gas flame," he said.

I did so, but beyond a blackening of the surface there was no effect.

"That bit of wood," went on the skipper, "was part of the gunwale of one of my boats. We were whaling in the South seas and harpooned a big right whale off the Cape of Good Hope. The creature sounded, the rope fouled and the boat was carried down. Probably it was taken half a mile or more below the surface. The whale rose again and was killed, and a portion of the boat was recovered from the line which still hung to it. It was the pressure of the water hardened it like that."—Baltimore Herald.

The Letter to John.

A curiosity in the shape of a letter was mailed at a rural postoffice recently. On a sealed, stamped envelope was the following:

"DEAR JOHN—I write you this to say I got your letter on a Tuesday mornin, an this is wrote to you on a Wednesday night. I will expect you shore on a Sunday. As you told me you didn't want folks to know where you was at, I have wrote an sealed your address on the inside, so's the postmaster won't be none the wiser. No one on earth will know whar you are now. Write as soon as you git this."—Atlanta Constitution.

YOU CAN'T BEAT 'EM.

THIS WAS JOBSON'S CONCLUSION ABOUT WOMEN IN GENERAL.

It Was Prompted by a Midnight Experience With His Wife, in Which the Revenge That He Had Planned So Well Went Sadly Astray.

Mr. Jobson got home from his office at 4:15 one afternoon not long ago and found a note from Mrs. Jobson saying that she had gone to hear the performance of a long haired pianist and that he'd find his dinner all ready for the girl to serve it.

"That's a good thing, too," mused Mr. Jobson sulkily when he had read the note. "It's a wonder these mattress headed geniuses that come over here to this country and rake in American dollars, hating Americans all the time, wouldn't call their game at an hour that 'ud permit a toiling man's wife to be on hand at home to give him something to eat when he wants it," etc.

The opportunity was too good for Mr. Jobson to miss, so he declined to eat any dinner when the servant put it on the table. Instead he slammed on his hat and went down town

He wanted to give Mrs. Jobson a lesson. He ate an unsatisfactory dinner at a restaurant and then poked around until it was time for a variety theater to open its doors. He had to watch a lot of poorly played billiard games in order to put in this time and to talk with a lot of bachelors, from whose ways of thinking he had departed.

He was bored exceedingly by theater time. The show bored him still more, but he stuck it out, for he wanted to get home as late as possible, the better to rub it in on Mrs. Jobson. By 11 o'clock he reflected that he had had a pretty poor sort of an evening—his evening paper unread, his favorite pipe neglected for a lot of cigars that gave him heartburn, a poor dinner, idle talk with a slew of men that he didn't want to talk to, and finally a tawdry, cheap variety performance that might have got a laugh out of him ten years before, but was only so much ribaldry to him now.

He took in a couple more billiard games, however, after the show and threw a couple of cocktails into himself, not because he cared to drink, but because he wanted Mrs. Jobson to smell his breath and thus perceive the awful consequences of her conduct.

Mrs. Jobson was comfortably tucked in bed when Mr. Jobson got home about half an hour after midnight. She had not even left a light burning in the vestibule or in the bedroom. She woke up very leisurely when Mr. Jobson started one of the gas jets going. She didn't say anything, however.

Mr. Jobson had expected to find her up, fully dressed and in tears. He was disappointed. He was more disappointed that she didn't greet him with repinings. Mr. Jobson saw that she was likely to go to sleep again and that he wasn't causing any grief at all by being naughty and keeping still. So he cleared his throat and said:

"Did he play the buck dance concerto in Z minor with his hair, and how was it?"

There was a lot of sarcasm in the way Mr. Jobson asked this question.

Mrs. Jobson didn't turn over at all.

"What are you talking about?" she inquired sleepily.

"I want to know if that Dutchman that kept you away from your duty of serving a meal to your husband after his day of grinding labor gave you your money's worth; also if you think you're making any kind of a hit with anybody by these methods, hey?"

"Oh, the recital; that's what you're speaking of, isn't it?" said Mrs. Jobson sweetly. "Well, I didn't go. I had intended to go when I started out shopping in the morning and left the note for you telling you so, but I thought it might annoy you to have me away from dinner, and so, when I concluded my shopping, about 4 o'clock this afternoon, I decided not to go to the recital. The Fourteenth street car that brought me up town passed the car that took you down town. I saw you on the car and wondered why you were going in that direction. I suppose you had to go back to your office to work. It's shameful the way they're overworking you, you poor old thing," and then Mrs. Jobson, who knew that Mr. Jobson hadn't been working at his office, turned over and subsided into dreamy slumber.

"You can't beat 'em," thought Mr. Jobson when he got into bed. He was thinking of women in general.—Washington Star.

Her Turn.

Guests were expected to dinner at little Flossie's home the other evening, and she was in consequence bustled off to bed and milk and bread an hour earlier than usual.

"Here you grown up folks" she sighed as she was laid away, "are going to sit up in your best clothes all evening and eat all those nice things, while I've got to go up stairs with nothing to eat but old bread and milk and go to bed early. Never mind," after a reflective pause. "After a while I'll grow up, and then I'll have all the nice things, and you'll all be dead."—Kansas City Star.

A Catfish In a Fix.

Last summer while seining I caught a catfish that was literally starving, with food in his mouth. He had attempted to swallow a smaller catfish, but its fins had caught in his mouth and pierced through on both sides. Nearly all but the head had been digested. I think this is going Tantalus one better.—Forest and Stream.

THE MAGIC LAMP.

'Neath a moonlit sky in the days gone by,
As the ballads of old relate,
When a lad was bold and his lady shy
He would wait at the postern gate.
For she feared as he strummed her a drowsy lay
He would waken the sire that slept;
So she fastened her casement, hid in spray,
And out to the postern crept.

Now, I know not that postern gate of yore,
I see not the casement's light,
But I've watched with the crowd at the dingy door
That leads to a stage bedight.
The hoofs of the manager's horses stamp,
For they long for the great man's "Home!"
While the others must wait by the guttering lamp

The fairy who danced in the spangled dress
Must change, for the night wind's cold,
Though I fear me she loses her comeliness
In her overcoat warmly rolled.
It's sometimes a mother that waits this same
Great goddess who [illegible] the shrine,
And you hear with a shudder her Christian name
Pronounced as "Matildar Jine."

And it's sometimes a youth with a big cigar
And a hat at an evil rake.
It's a youth who is feared by Matilda's "mar;"
Hence she comes for Matilda's sake.
He is dressed in a vast Newmarket "sack,"
Where the seaming is overlaid,
And the goddess familiarly calls him "Jack;"
For she isn't a bit afraid.

And it's sometimes a dear little gallery boy,
Who dreams in his dizzy heights.
It would be the hope of his highest joy
To speak to the girl in tights.
But the painted curtain falls, alas,
And the dancers fade from view,
So he waits in the glare of the stage door gas
To watch till his girl comes through.

A BLOOD STAINED HORSE.

The Effect It Had In Subduing a Party of Ruffians.

For sheer, cool nerve and absolute, inspired genius in dealing with men, commend me to Clarence King, the geologist, if a story that is told about him be true. Mr. King, the tale runs, was in the field all one summer with a government expedition. The field happened to be in the far west, and the men he was compelled to employ as assistants were a band of cheerful ruffians, half breed desperadoes and "greaser" scamps. Bad as they were, they worked well, and they were indispensable.

One night one of them deserted. Mr. King knew what that meant. It meant a stampede and an empty camp if the deserter were allowed to go unpunished. He chose a companion on whose silence he could depend, mounted and took the trail. On the third day the deserter was overtaken, captured and landed in a convenient fort. The runaway had subsisted for the three days of his liberty on such game and birds as he could kill. His horse was white, and as he rode often with prey slung to the saddle, the animal was streaked and stained with blood.

The man being in safe keeping, Mr. King and his companion rode back to camp leading the crimson streaked horse, with all the deserter's belongings strapped to his back. They spoke no word of the missing man to his former companions, but dismounted in grim silence. The men endured the pangs of curiosity as long as they could. Then they sent a committee to Mr. King to make inquiries about the fugitive. Mr. King gave a meaning glance at the blood stained horse and made answer briefly.

"He is gone," he said impressively. "He is gone where anybody else who tries to desert will go too."

Half breeds and "greasers" gasped, and from that day on no one of them all ever tried to desert.—Washington Post.

The Tables Turned.

Birds, we know, are sometimes trained to fire off pistols, as well as to perform other unusual feats, but it is not often that a wild bird in the woods shoots a man with his own gun, as related in "South American Sketches" by Robert Crawford.

A pava del monte, a bird of Uruguay not unlike the turkey, had been winged by a hunter. It fell to the ground, but was not once on its feet and ran away.

Throwing his gun hostily aside, the hunter started in pursuit, and a game of hide and seek ensued.

In one of its doublings and turnings the bird passed over the gun, which was lying on the ground, and its foot chanced to strike against the trigger of the undischarged barrel, the hammer of which, in the hurry of the moment, had been left at full cock.

There was a loud report, followed by an exclamation of pain from the man. The bird escaped, and the luckless hunter had an ugly wound in the fleshy part of his leg to remind him for weeks afterward of the adventure.

No Jay Rows In Theaters.

The reason why Washington has no street letter J is perfectly to be understood, for J and I are written so much alike that endless confusion would result. There is another place where the letter J is slighted, and not at all because of its similarity to I. None of the plans of the house to be seen in box offices shows a row of seats lettered J. Theater patrons don't mind sitting with the gods in the gallery, nor yet in row 13, but sit in the "joy" row they will not, and for that reason there is no row marked with that letter.—Washington Post.

NEW YORK WORLD.
THRICE-A-WEEK EDITION.

Practically a Daily at the Price of a Weekly.

The striking and important events of the last year have established the overwhelming value of The Thrice-a-Week World to every reader. For an almost nominal sum it has kept its subscribers informed of the progress of all our wars and, moreover, has reported them as promptly and fully as if it were a daily. With our interests still extending throughout the world, with our troops operating in the Philippines and the great Presidential campaign, too, at hand, its value is further increased.

The motto of The Thrice-a-Week World is improved. It strives each year to be better than it was the year before, and public confidence in it is shown by the fact that it now circulates more than twice as many papers every week as any other newspaper, not a daily, published in America.

We offer this unequalled newspaper and The St. Hilaire Spectator together one year for $1.65.

The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2.50.

ASSAULTED.

There was a ball game last Sunday at Red Lake Falls between that town and Thief River Falls. The writer in company with 175 others from St. Hilaire went down on the special train to see the game. St. Hilaire has several times entertained the citizens of our neighboring cities and have always tried to treat them in a courteous manner and have so far succeeded. Of course, we are not cursed with a "dead tough gang" who terrorize our citizens and run the town; neither have we ever felt like slugging our neighbors for a fancied wrong. In these matters we differ from Red Lake Falls. We were told upon arriving to be careful as a citizen of that town was heard to remark "If those —— —— from St. Hilaire don't keep quiet to-day we will stir up a row; sling them and then have them run in. This program was very carefully carried out. The chief of police headed by a crazy mob shamefully assaulted seven or eight of our citizens without the least provocation and would have put one in their miserable little jail only ten dollars was too much for the policeman. He took the ten and let his prisoner go. We did not see a man from St. Hilaire who did not act in every way as a gentleman while at Red Lake Falls. None of the party who were assulted had drank a drop that day although the front door of the saloons were wide open. We did see citizens of Red Lake Falls intoxicated and we heard them insult the ladies present by blasphemous obscene and vulgar language. It was the craziest mob that ever disgraced the quiet of a Sabbath day and out citizens were lucky they did not fare worse. The conclusion is obvious. It is not safe for a citizen of St. Hilaire to go to Red Lake Falls and all should keep away in the future.

Messrs. Hilligoss and Hershberger of Polk county, who went to Alaska about two years ago will return next month. Nothing had been heard of these two gold hunters since early last fall until Saturday.

S. A. Swanson of the firm of Swanson & Grady, Red Lake Falls, was here yesterday a short time enroute home from a business trip at the upper Falls. Notice their change of ad in another column of this issue.

Some people have a habit of speaking ill of others. Don't do it. Not even confidentially to a friend. This same friend will distrust you. He'll reason within himself that if you speak ill of one you will of another and his turn will come next.—Exchange.

Hereafter if a person giving a check on a bank neglects to affix a stamp thereto, the cashier of the bank will not, as has been the custom, attach the stamp and charge it to the drawer, but return the check to him. This is the instruction of Commissioner Wilson.

The name Itasca is generally believed to be of Indian origin. This is a mistake. It is derived from the sentence veritas caput, the last syllable of the first word and the first of the last word and being combined—Itasca,—its significance meaning the true head of the Mississippi river.

Mr. and Mrs. J. K. Hannay entertained a company of friends last evening in honor of Miss Bertha Hunstock of Minneapolis. The evening was spent in playing progressive sinch and all report of having a pleasant time. Miss Hughes and H. E. Ives won the head prize and Miss Stranahan and J. Nelson the foot prize.

Mr. David Collins, our popular photographer, is the person we referred to in our last issue as being one of the principals in a marriage ceremony. He went to Crookston last Wednesday and in the evening proceeded to the St. Ann's church where he and a charming young lady in the person of Miss Katy Powers were pronounced man and wife. They returned Friday and are now nicely located in the beautiful residence recently vacated by R. A. Engen on Minnesota Avenue. The Spectator joins with their many friends in wishing them a happy and prosperous journey through life.

Sand Island, a thirty acre tract of land about two miles out from Werroad on the Lake of the Woods was completely swept away by a heavy storm last week. A few years ago the Coaclough Fishing Co., had large buildings on this island and did an extensive business, having forty-five pound nets and catching as high as two and three car loads of fish per day.

The Crookston lodge of Knights of Pythias will give an excursion to Bemidji August 11th. Everybody invited. The round trip will cost you $2.00.

The Minneapolis Tribune says that about 75,000 watermelons were received in Minneapolis the past week, which counting a thousand to a car, means seventy-five cars. That would mean two long freight trains loaded with the juicy and toothsome Texas, Georgia and Missouri watermelons—and much business for doctors handy at breaking up belly aches.

The shipment of frogs from this point this season has been enormous. From one to three wagon loads have been shipped to Minneapolis, St. Paul and Chicago every day since the ice went out of the lakes. The shipment is light now, but from the first of September until the lakes freeze up jumpfish will be a burden to the baggagemen of the G. N. Ry.—Litchfield News-Ledger.

Lieut. S. M. Decker, of the 34th Infantry volunteers arrived in Crookston Monday and opened up a recruting station which closes to-day. The men enlisted will be sent to Fort Logan, Colorado, to be drilled and sent to Manila. Sam Bardelson of Thief River Falls, 2nd Lieut. of Co. L, 14th Minn., passed through here yesterday for the purpose of taking the examination and see his old captain—Decker.

August Ladies' Home Journal.

Hamlin Garland, Anthony Hope, John Hendrick Bangs, Harold Richard Venne, Anna Robeson Brown, Josiah Allen's Wife, Clara Morris, Kate Whiting Patch and Anna Farquhar are among the half-score of writers of fiction who contribute stories to the August Ladies Home Journal. The Midsummer Fiction Number of the Journal is in many respects a notable magazine. It has brought together in a single issue some of the most popular story-writers, and the most capable black and white artists to illustrate their work. Fiction, of course, predominates, but there is an abundance of timely, practical articles especially appealing to home and family interests and tending to lighten and brighten women's work.

The Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis, D. D., has an interesting article in this issue on "The Diffusion of Happiness Through Conversation," the third of his "Secrets of a Happy Life" series, and Mrs. Burton Kingsland and Emily D. Striebet write of "With the children on Sunday"—their deversions and instruction; "What can be done with an Old Farmhouse" pictures how an old building may be artistically remodeled at small cost. On two other pictorial pages are shown the most cozy and attractive "Houses in Woods, Valleys and Mountains," and "The Sweetest of Summer Charities" pictures the work of the flower mission in several cities. The latest feminine fancies in dress are set forth in "The gossip of a New York Girl," and Emily Wight writes of the "Newest Styles in Hairdressing" and "Laces for Dress Trimmings." Mrs. S. T. Rorers cooking lesson is on "Cold Dishes for Hot Weather," and Mr. and Mrs. Edward B. Warman's health talks are on timely themes. For the boys Dan Ceard explains how to make "A Backyard Fish Pond." The editorial departments are more interesting than usual, and touch upon every phase of home life. By the Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia. One dollar per year, ten cents per copy.

Hard to Believe.

Stephen, Minn., July 27.—Harry Hurl a farmer living five miles east of here, came to town Tuesday and reported that Monday, while two of his hired men were digging a well on his farm and had got down to the depth of 44 feet, the bottom suddenly fell in. One of the men was thrown into a whirl of water and dissapeared, and has not been heard of since. The other man when he felt that the ground was giving away under him caught onto the rope that was used in hoisting the dirt up, and was drawn to the top. Mr. Hurl then got a rope and chain about 100 feet long and attached a weight to it and dropped it in the well. It did not touch bottom, but was washed rapidly west, showing that a large body of water was underneath.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Regular Correspondent.

The Navy Department seems also to have some fake experts. In order to prevent the battleships Ohio, Missouri, and Maine, now being built, drawing so much water that they could not enter half of our largest seaports. It has been found necessary to change their plans, by substituting 11 inch for 12 inch armor and 12 inch guns for 13 inch guns.

The newspaper censorship of Gen. Otis cannot be duplicated in this country, but perhaps Mr. McKinley intended to show his sympathy for the method when he ordered that no newspaper men should be allowed in the special train which carried him and his party from Washington to the shore of Lake Champlain, where he will remain for an indefinite period. This is the first time that any President has objected to being accompanied by newspaper men, when going from Washington on a pleasure trip.

If Secretary Root is to be only the legal adviser of the War Department, who is going to direct its military affairs? That is likely to become an important question when active operation in the Phillippines begin again. Gen. Miles would be the proper official, but there is nothing in sight to indicate that he is to be allowed any more authority than he has wielded since Adjutant General Corbin began, at the opening of the war with Spain, to perform the duties which properly belonged to the Commanding general of the army. It was supposed that Alger directed Corbin, and it has been intimated that Mr. McKinley will do so in the future. Mr. McKinley was doubtless a brave soldier, but the historians neglected to record the campaigns in which he commanded an army. Of course, every school boy knows that the Constitution makes the President commander-in-chief of the U. S. army and navy, but that authority has usually only been exercised to direct a general policy, leaving military operations to be directed by trained soldiers. Perhaps Mr. McKinley intends giving the country an innovation by actually assuming command of the army and navy.

That the admistration fears Alger and the disclosures he may make after next Tuesday, when he will turn the war department over to Mr. Elihu Root who will become Secretary of War on that day, is shown by the frequency with which leading supporters of Mr. McKinley's policy are giving interviews to newspapers jollying Alger along as the victim of persecution, and predicting that time will vindicate him and his administration of the War Department. The object of these interviews is to keep Algers mouth shut. Whether the ruse will succeed only time can tell. For months Alger's personal friends and hangers-on have been making threats as to what he would do if he was forced out of the Cabinet, and intimating that he could tell things that would shift responsibility which he has been made to bear to other shoulders. It is now up to Alger and he must show whether there was foundation for those threats or whether they were merely a part of a bluffing game he played to try to remain in the Cabinet, after he knew that he was expected to get out. Another scheme is also being worked to keep Alger quiet through the pockets of himself and friends. It has been hinted to him that some Cuban and Porto Rican business deals in which he and his friends are financially interested will be knocked out if he attempts to smirch the administration, while they will be let alone if he keeps mum about administration secrets.

Deadly Modern Warfare.

Nothing shows more clearly the deadly nature of modern warfare than a few facts about the light gun of small caliber in use in the German army. A bullet from one of these weapons passes through a stone wall at a distance of 400 paces. At 300 paces it penetrates a thick oak tree. If six men are standing one behind the other, the first man a distance of 400 paces from the German line, the bullet discharged from the latter passes through the first five men, inflicting in each case a mortal wound, and makes the sixth man hors du combat. The full range of the ball is said to be 5,000 metres, or about three English miles.

A BELATED REVOLT.

Simeon Walker sat on the top rail of the fence. He had stopped there in the act of getting over. His rubber-booted legs were tired, so he rested and roosted there.

The snow was a foot deep on the level, and in places it was over the stone walls. Simeon's tracks trailed off across the field behind him. He had come that way because it was nearer, but when he had gone half the distance he regretted it, and was tempted to retrace his steps and go by the road. After standing still and reflecting for some little time, he had decided to continue.

When he reached the fence he was glad he had taken the field, otherwise there would have been no excuse for resting on the top rail of the fence. He had a shovel with him and was going a mile up the road to help dig out a drifted place.

Simeon sat on the fence till he began to be a little chilly; whereupon he concluded that he was rested enough, and jumped down on the other side, into the road.

He had covered nearly half the distance to the place where he was to work, when he stopped suddenly in front of the schoolhouse.

"Time-nation!" he ejaculated under his breath. He was staring at a woman who was making strenuous efforts to dig a path up to the schoolhouse door.

As she paused a moment for breath she caught sight of Simeon. If he had caught her stealing his chickens she could hardly have looked more frightened and guilty.

"Oh!" she panted, "I thought I could get it done before any one saw me."

"Keziah Thatcher," he said, solemnly, "I thought you had more sense."

He took the shovel from her. It was a small fire-shovel. He looked at it scornfully, tossed it into a convenient bank and set to work with his own.

"Don't some of the big boys dig the paths for you?" he asked, sternly.

"Yes," she remarked, "but they are always so late, and then the fire does not get to going and the little children suffer and take cold."

Simeon smiled grimly as he thought that, at the rate she was going, she would not have got the schoolroom much warmer than if she had left the work to the boys.

"You are cold," he said, gently. "What have you got on your feet? Whew! Nothing but rubbers." He looked dubiously across the drifted yard to the schoolhouse door. Then his face cleared. "Where is the key?" he asked.

Keziah felt in her pocket and drew it out. He took it and without a word turned and began plowing slowly through the snow. When he reached the door he unlocked it and opened it wide, then returned to Keziah who was watching him wonderingly.

"Now," he said, as he reached her, "I am going to carry you to that door."

"Oh, no, please don't! I can wait till the path is made, perfectly well. I'm not very cold, truly I'm not.

"I am going to carry you," said Simeon, and there was a strange note of command in his voice. "Put your arm around my neck—so. There, now I can carry you easily."

"Oh, Mr. Walker! I wish——" she protested, feebly.

Slowly and carefully he walked through the snow, reached the steps and deposited his burden inside the entry.

"There!" he said. "Now you can start the fire while I finish the path."

It took but a short time to finish that path, for Simeon worked as he had never worked before. He smiled as he looked up and saw the smoke ascending from the chimney. When he went into the schoolroom, after stamping the snow off his boots, he found that Keziah's fire was a roaring success. But perhaps neither the heat of the fire nor the previous cold quite accounted for the bright color in Keziah's cheeks.

Simeon glanced around the room. "It looks natural," he said, "but awful small. I don't believe I've been here since I went to school, but you've spent a good part of the time here since then. My! that fire feels good."

He drew two chairs up to the stove and after Keziah had taken one he seated himself in the other. "Isn't this cozy!" he said, in a tone of satisfaction. "I was on my way to Benson's Corner to shovel snow; but I guess the snow will keep and it isn't often I get a chance to speak to you. Why, how long is it since we were allowed to see each other "

"I don't know." Keziah's eyes were cast down. "It is some years. I don't know what Cynthia would say if she ——" She paused abruptly.

Simeon smiled good-humoredly. "I know that sister of yours doesn't approve of me, but that's no excuse for her holding over you the way she does."

"Oh, Cynthia has so much more sense than I have," Keziah murmured, depreciatingly.

Simeon looked at her quizzically. "I suppose she has told you that so often that you have got so you believe it. But I don't believe it."

There was an awkward pause. Keziah looked at the clock and half-longed for, half-dreaded, the arrival of the first scholar. Simeon frowned at the stove, and wished he knew how to say what he wanted to say. At last he cleared his throat.

"Keziah, let us have one good, long talk together. We may never have another chance, and there are some things I'd like to know about. Will you tell me the real reason why we didn't get married that time—fifteen years ago, wasn't it? Was one reason Cynthia?"

She nodded.

"Well, I thought. What were the others? I know you told me at that time, but somehow they didn't seem like reasons you would give."

"There weren't any other—besides Cynthia."

"She must have told you things about me. I wonder what they were?"

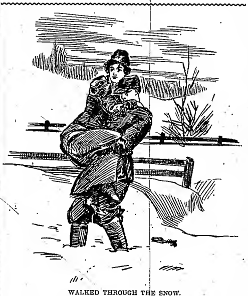
Keziah turned away her head. "She said that you were shiftless," she faltered, "and never would get on in the world."

He made a wry face. "And I suppose she has kept her eye on me, and has had the satisfaction of saying, 'I told you so,' every little while, and congratulating you on her good sense and your escape. Well, I guess she's right. I wonder if you cared?"

"Yes, I did care," she said, almost vehemently. "I wanted you to succeed and justify my opinion of you and when you didn't she would exult and sometimes I wanted to go away and never come back."

"I wish I had known—I wish I had known," was all Simeon said.

She looked at him pityingly, then she laid her hand timidly on his arm.



WALKED THROUGH THE SNOW.

"You know it now," she said, gently. "It isn't too late."

He rose to his feet suddenly. "No," he said, in a voice that startled her, "it isn't too late and I'll justify your opinion of me yet. I will go now and shovel that snow. Good-by. I'm glad I saw you." He grasped her hand so hard that she winced, then strode out of the room.

She listened to his retreating footsteps, then turned in her chair so that she could lay her arm on its back and bury her face in the crook of her elbow. In a moment she heard some one coming, and stood up hastily, giving quick dabs to her eyes with her handkerchief.

"That snow will have to wait just a little longer. Something more important comes first," said Simeon, coming into the room. "Why, Keziah! you are not—— Why, what is it dear?" for Keziah was crying softly in his arms.

A little later, when they were more calm, Simeon said: "What I came back to say was this: I am going to get away from the pernicious influence of that lazy, good-for-nothing Sim Walker, and I thought it would be a grand, good idea if at the same time you would break away from the pernicious influence of Miss Cynthia Thatcher."

Keziah's eyes sparkled. "I will do it," she said, and there was that in her look which told that she had at last freed herself from the domination of her sister.

There were other things that had to be said and by that time the fire had gone out and the room grown cold.

"Why, where are the scholars?" cried Keziah, when she saw that it was 10 o'clock. "They must have stayed at home on account of the snow."

Kept Busy Digging Cellars.

"I ain't only got but one objection to bein' moved about, house an' all, by these 'ere cyclones," remarked the veteran farmer. "What is that?" asked the eastern tourist. "Why, I've got t' dig a new cellar under my house about ever' two months."—Ohio State Journal.

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Beet Cultural Directions.

In the early cultivation of the sugar beet, says Dr. Wiley of the department of agriculture, who has had charge of all the government beet analyses and has made a careful study of beets and beet sugar both in this country and Germany, the ground should be stirred as deeply as possible. To accomplish this without covering the plants the ideal implement would be a cultivator with numerous long, hooked teeth, not more than an inch wide, one which might be called a cross between a harrow and a cultivator. Such cultivators are now on the market. After the beets have become larger a cultivator with broader shovels may be used in order to cut the weeds more effectually, but deep working of the soil should be carefully avoided after it has become filled with the feeding roots of the crop. The after cultivation should consist in keeping the ground free of weeds and keeping the surface loose, both points being necessary to the preservation of the soil moisture.

When the young plants have 4 leaves they should be thinned so as to stand 4 to 6 inches apart in the rows. They may be roughly thinned by chopping out part of the plants with a narrow hoe, but the final thinning must be done by hand; leaving, of course, the most vigorous plants. The interspaces should not exceed 8 inches. When there are gaps they may be filled in by transplanting, but transplanted beets are apt to be prongy and inferior. The ripening of the beets is indicated by the leaves turning yellow and this will not ordinarily begin until October. The beet will stand considerable frost, and the percentage of sugar increases up to full maturity. In harvesting, the tops may be scalped off with a sharp hoe, as they stand in the row, or the beets may be dug first and topped with a corn knife as they are loaded into wagon. In digging, unless a special implement for this purpose is at hand, turn a furrow next to the outside row of beets, running the landside of the plow close to the beets; they may then be easily pulled out, or thrown out with a spading fork, and the next row loosened in the same manner.

Legumes Make Rich Manure.

The high manurial value of nitrogenous feeding stuffs is a very important factor in their use. This is especially true on old ground where the original fertility of the soil has been reduced by long cropping. Nitrogen is the most expensive constituent of commercial fertilizer. It costs over three times as much per pound as potash and nearly three times as much as phosphoric acid. The real value that the farmer is able to get out of his fodders in the form of manure, depends largely upon the composition of the fodder, the manure containing practically the same proportions of fertilizing elements. The kind of animal through which the fodder passes and the way in which the manure is cared for are of course important factors, especially the latter, but everything else being equal fodder which is rich in nitrogen will of course yield a manure far more valuable than fodder containing mostly carbonaceous matter. The leguminous coarse fodders, such as clover, vetch, cow peas, soy beans, etc., have a much higher manurial value than similar fodders of grasses, corn, sorghum, etc. According to some of the experiment station investigations such fodders as clover hay, for instance, produce a manure nearly twice as valuable for fertilizing purposes as do common grasses. By making unliberal use of feeding stuffs rich in nitrogen (protein)—which nitrogen, by the way, has been drawn from the air without cost—the fertilizers purchased on the farm may consist mainly of the cheaper materials furnishing phosphoric acid and potash.

Canker Worm Traps.

From the Farmers' Review: Last spring the department of entomology at the Kansas State Agricultural College fastened to a number of trees Pratts' Canker-worm traps in place of the ordinary carpet-paper bands. These traps are nothing more than a narrow width of the common wire screening with slits along one side so that the screening can be fastened to the trees with a flange at the lower side. By using carpet tacks of a good size, the traps can be made very firm and tight, so that there are no passage ways collar, through which the female moths can continue their ascent up the tree. Last year the orchards in which the traps were placed were not infested to any extent by the canker-worms, so that we were not able to give the traps a good test. They caught quite a number of the moths, but did not prevent them from depositing eggs either on or just above the screening. The worms from the eggs so deposited were of course able to ascend the tree. The mesh of the wire screening does not prevent the young worms from going through. The traps are quite durable; those put on last year in but a few instances needed attention this spring; a tack here and there was all that was necessary to put the traps in good condition. They will probably last for three seasons. Where these traps of wire screening are used, it is necessary to visit the traps quite often to collect and kill the female moths, and to spray once or twice with kerosene emulsion the region about and under the traps to kill the young worms, and the eggs deposited by the entrapped females. The time for spraying must be determined by the fruit grower himself.

When and How to Sow Millet.

The greatest confusion exists with the great group of grasses coming under the general term of "millet." Doubtless this is because the millet plant is grown over a large part of the world and is one of the oldest used by man. The plant runs through a great variety of forms and what is called millet by one person is often called Hungarian grass by another. The true Hungarian grass is a smaller and finer plant than most varieties of millet, though there is little difference between what is commonly called "German millet" and Hungarian grass proper, says Prof. W. A. Henry in Breeder's Gazette. Use either German millet or Hungarian grass for producing hay of the best quality. The extensive experiments conducted by the North Dakota Experiment Station show that when millet hay is fed exclusively to horses it may affect the kidneys seriously. Farmers who feed the hay in moderate quantity along with corn stover and other varieties of hay, and give some grain, need have no fears of evil results following the use of good millet or Hungarian grass hay.

None of the millets, including Hungarian, grass should be sown until the soil is well warmed up, which is after corn-planting time. Any time up to the first of July will do in the latitude of our correspondent. Sow from one to two bushels of seed per acre. The more seed sown the finer will be the grass, and consequently the better the hay. On poor soil less seed should be sown than on rich soil. It is very important to cut millet for hay purposes just when the heads are coming into blossom, for the reason that millet seeds are very fine and have a hard coating. This renders them indigestible, for they are not crushed by the teeth of horses or cattle.

Why Shorthorns Are Popular.

Ex-Governor G. W. Glick of Kansas, writing in Farmers' Guide, says:

What is the best breed of beef cattle to breed? Men may differ, and honestly, too, as to the best breed of males to use to breed up the common cattle of the country, and I have no quarrel with the friends of any breed. Circumstances, conditions and education often have much influence in these preference. But any of the thoroughbreds are far better than the scrub, and the breeder who uses thoroughbred males is far in advance of the one who uses scrubs. My own preference is for the Shorthorns. There are many reasons why I prefer the Shorthorn to other breeds. The Shorthorn improves and breeds up all other breeds of cattle on which it is crossed. It improves all classes of cattle to the highest point of bovine excellence. They take on flesh rapidly and mature very early and can be fatted off at any age and sell in the market for the block at top prices. The reason for this excellence is that the Shorthorn puts on flesh on those parts of the body where the high priced, tender, juicy steaks and roasts are found. The scrub steer may make as much weight for the food consumed as the thoroughbred or high grade Shorthorn, but no other class of beef animals produce such a wealth of high-priced steaks and roasts as are found in the upper third of the well-fatted Shorthorn steer. The Shorthorn always shows evidence of good breeding. It has a pleasant countenance, a mild and tractable disposition, a broad, level back, that carries a wealth of the best finely marbled steaks and roasts that bring the highest price in the markets, with thickly fleshed loins, long and well-finished quarters, while it has the well sprung ribs that give it a style and finish, and which are covered with thick, juicy flesh, mellow to the touch, and, though firm, is well marbled and tender.

This great, broad back is one of his distinguishing qualities. This broad back furnishes all the high-priced meats. It gives assurance that in cutting up and selling out the carcass that the largest percentage of good and valuable meat will be found and the largest percentage of good beef to live weight will reward the purchaser. It is the high price of the rib, the porterhouse, the sirloin and the round steaks that give the greatest value of the well fed beef steer, and in the production of these valuable parts the Shorthorn steer has no equal when the whole carcass is considered in connection with its market value. While it is true, once in a while, that a small number of another family of beef cattle may sell as well or better on some particular day in the market, it only attests the skill of a good feeder and does not disprove the fact that the Shorthorn is the best beef steer, and as a beef producer has no rival and is by far the best seller every day, that goes to the market.

The Clover Crop.

This has been a hard year for the clover fields, and for that reason some farmers will need all the encouragement they can receive to prevent them from giving up the growing of clover. Where it is naturally difficult to get a catch the farmer will argue that the clover crop is a thing so little to be depended on that it is safer for him to put his money and efforts into some more certain crop. But the full value to the farm of the clover crop should be considered. Frequently the clover crop is the only practical means of providing nitrogen to the soil. We say practical because to buy commercial nitrogen in any form for our great western grain farms is out of the question. The dairy farmer will not generally make the mistake of being compelled to use for feeding his dairy cows a less valuable hay than that made from clover because it can be more easily grown. The reports from the new sowings of clover indicate that the rains of this spring have proved beneficial and we may expect to have a good stand of new clover this summer and fall.

The Gritty Pioneer.—It was grasshopper year in the northwestern counties of Iowa. He was trying to hold on to his farm in spite of discouragements which were almost overwhelming. His house was a sod shack, his barn a few poles and a pile of straw, his grain fields stripped clean by the grasshopper scourge. He was ragged, unkempt, and his wife and little ones, his team and entire outfit seemed paralyzed with poverty. He had nothing to offer us but some cold johnny-cake and a cup of cold water when we sought to get some refreshments at his place. He was withal gritty, and said he was going to stick it out somehow. This was about twenty years ago. Last year we were at his place again. There was a nice, large house, a big red barn, a wealth of cereal crops, flocks and herds; the grasshopper tree claim had became a $50-an-acre-farm, and the grit and courage of the pioneer was at last splendidly rewarded.—J. S. Trigg in Exchange.

"At last inflammation of the womb and ovaries resulted and then I suffered agonies, had to give up my profession (musician and piano player), was confined to my bed and life became a terrible cross. A PAIR OF HANDS AND A PAIR OF HORSES Are all that are required to Operate a Deering Corn Binder.

The Deering Corn Binder affords the best plan for harvesting corn with economy and expediency.

The Deering Corn Binder alone handles corn on the practical, horizontal principle, as a grain binder handles grain.

The Deering Corn Binder has a butt adjuster with great scope of adjustment for handling long or short corn.

The Deering Corn Binder has Roller and Ball Bearings and less draft and neck weight than other corn binder made.

The Deering Corn Binder has all levers within easy reach of the driver.

The farmer who gets his corn from field to shock or silo with the smallest outlay of time, and with the services of only A Pair of Hands and a Pair of Horses is the farmer with a Deering Corn Binder.

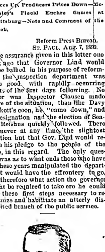
Reform Press Bureau.
St. Paul, Aug. 7, 1899.

The assurance given in this letter one week ago that Governor Lind would not be balked in his purpose of reforming the inspection department was made good, with rapidly occurring events of the first days following. No sooner was Inspector Clausen made aware of the situation, than like Davy Crockett's coon, he "came down," and his resignation and the election of Senator Reishus quickly followed. There was never at any time the slightest question but that Gov. Lind would redeem his pledge to the people of the state, in this regard. The only question was as to what ends those who have all these years manipulated the department would have the effrontery to go, and therefore what action the governor might be required to take ere he could take these first steps necessary to reorganize and habilitate an utterly discredited branch of the public service.



Edwin S. Reishus, State Grain Inspector.

Inspector Clausen's successor, Edwin S. Reishus, is of Norwegian parentage, though American born, having been born in Dane County, Wisconsin, March 4, 1852. When 2 years of age his parents removed to Filmore county, this state, where his boyhood was spent. He was educated in the public schools and the state university, which he left in 1873. Three years later he married and settled in Lyon county, where he has since resided, and become a prosperous farmer and successful business man. His family are wife and two children. For years prominently connected with public affairs, he has been a leader of his section of the state upon those economic questions which have received most attention. He held the office of county clerk of Lyon county for four years, and subsequently served two years in the state senate, session of 1895-7, representing the Peoples Party. All who know him commend him as an able, active, honest man, and he comes to the position with the confidence of all such that he will give the grain raisers, as well as the market men, a satisfactory, because an able and an honest, administration.

The general Republican theory that no one but A. C. Clausen could conduct the state grain department, has reminded a good story teller at the capitol, of the shrewd German, whose manager "struck" for more pay.

"But John," said the proprietor, "I was buying you pretty vell, already, eh, John?"

"Yes," said the manager, "but I have been with you a long time and made your business do well. I feel that I ought to have more pay now."

"Ya," said the other, "but you have had goot money all the dime, John. Is it not so?"

"I am not complaining," said John, "but you know I commenced as office boy and have risen to manager, and I feel that I am worth more to you than any other man you could get. I feel that I am worth more than I am getting."

"Vell, but John," said the boss, "subbose that you should tie, some day. Vat den?"

"Oh," admitted John, "I suppose the business would go on, all the same."

"Vell den, John," said the proprietor, "ghust consitter dot you vas dead."

And the business went on.

The consolation drawn in so copious drafts from Governor Lind's over-generous compliment to the "ability" of Inspector Clausen should not be marred, perhaps, by the reflection that it is the trait of a noble man to be generous to a fallen foe. Everyone concedes Inspector Clausen's ability, but the difference between possessing the ability to do and the actual doing of a duty is as wide as the boundless sea. The lack of confidence which Governor Lind expressed is but that felt by the whole state. Clausen's administration was condemned. Governor Lind redeems his pledge to change it, and he awaits the outcome with perfect confidence as he believes the people may also do.

The vigor with which Game and Fish Executive Beutner is administering his department is shown in the fact that he has turned loose a force of nearly 100 extra deputies to patrol the state during the present month to protect against killing of prairie chickens in advance of the regular period, Sept. 1. Agent Beutner is making a good record in his office.

And, in line with action of the other departments, in enforcing laws for the protection of the people, comes Insurance Commissioner O'Shaughnessy, with a raid on bogus and other unworthy insurance schemes. One of these, the Farmers' and Merchants' Protective Union of Glenwood, formerly the Commercial Life, struggling along with twelve live policies, was found to have collected some $3,000, of which all but about $1,000 went for "expenses" and commissions. Connected with the concern is the celebrated Realty Revenue Company, which recently sued Farm, Stock and Home for $70,000 libel. Through Commissioner O'Shaughnessey, the attorney general is expected to commence suit against the insurance company for violation of state laws. The other concern has a species of crop insurance, but claims to be doing no business in Minnesota. It was recently barred from North Dakota.

Now hear the G. O. P. press roar at the "injury to the Insurance business," as it howled at the refusal of Examiner Pope to permit rotten banks to continue to absorb the good money of depositors.

Minnesota's Democratic National Committeeman, Hon. Thomas D. O'Brien, in an interview in the St. Paul Globe, sees in the stand taken by Senator Burroughs, criticising the Philippine policy of the administration, a foreshadowing of a feature of the coming presidential campaign, when the test will be applied as to responsibility for the sad business into which the nation has been brought under McKinley. It appears to Mr. O'Brien that while no true Democrat has changed his mind on the issues of 1896, still it may very easily happen that the people may be concerned still more, at the moment, with other questions. This will come, as he suggests, in holding the Republican administration to a strict accountability. This would also apply to the trusts as well. Mr. O'Brien confirms the belief now fast becoming general, that the administration has no intention of stopping short of the absolute ownership of the entire Philippine archipelago, regardless of the extent to which the subjugation of the present owners outrages our boasted American principles.

Among the week's echoes of gold standard prosperity are a fifth boost for lumber, by the combine, continued advance of all trust controlled merchandise, further drop in wheat, cotton, corn, oats, potatoes; continued strikes, those beautiful Republican evidences of the happiness of the people, government troops still administering local government in Idaho, as state troops continue to edify the people of Cleveland, while in that city the boycott rages, and discontented labor continues to send cablegrams to Boss Hanna in his Parisian retreat. As a mere incident the Chicago railroad lines have met and increased the eastbound rates on wheat, corn, oats, etc., by way of emphasizing the continued fall in those, and other products of the soil. In the Philippines, where nothing but the land stage of water and lack of soldiers hinders progress of our war of foreign conquest, the said stage was only four feet or so on the level, though more rain was falling.

But let no one be discouraged. For Alger is out and the "Emperor" is recuperating his "nerve" with the seductive game of euchre at Lake Champlain.

Wonder if while "Emperor" McKinley is playing euchre at Plattsburg, it ever flashes across his Hannaeized thinking apparatus that it was at Plattsburg in 1812 that some of our forefathers gave British soldiers an exhibition of our faith that "government derives its just powers from the consent of the governed."

The revenue stamp has come to stay. Without it we must necessarily be deprived of the misleading bulletins from Otis, and to fail of receiving these would indeed be a hardship. They constitute an expensive luxury to be sure—some $200 or $300 a bulletin—but just think of what they give us in return for our money! Glorious accounts of wonderful battles without material results! Confirmation from day to day of the rumor that Manila is still ours! Estimates as to the strength of the natives sufficiently low to furnish surprise at the ginger they put into the fight on the following day! Casualty lists, long and interesting! Other reports, deceptive, perhaps, as the bulletins sent out on the night of election, but for all that exciting and full of cheer to the blinded advocates of a benevolent and Christianizing expansion! Let us not complain, therefore, if the end of the revenue stamp is not yet in sight. We must have news though we have to go to the trouble of making it.

Twelve hundred men walking the streets of Anderson, Ind., are a trust incident of the closing of four of the large nail mills. Eight hundred of the 1,200 had wages reduced from 12 to as much as 42 per cent during the past year. When they struck, the trust yielded, but the men are waiting the time of resuming work, until they got ready.

"When they get ready." That is the way the retail merchants are treated by the combines, in filling their orders. They must put up the cash on the spot when ordering, and the trust delivers when they "get ready." How do you like it, Mr. Shoe dealer, Mr. Dry Goods merchants, Mr. Hardware man, and all the rest?

"When they get ready." It is the way with the lumber combine. Up go the prices for lumber whenever they get ready, and the "readys" number five or six, already this year. And in the last raise, while it was to have been but fifty cents per thousand, the thing was so easy to do, that they made it a whole dollar, and done with it. How do you like it, Mr. Builder, Mr. Carpenter, Mr. Farmer and all the rest? G. S. C.

M. MERCIER FIZZLES

DREYFUS' ARCH ENEMY FAILS MISERABLY ON WITNESS STAND.

He Leaves the Court a Thoroughly Discredited Man and Amid the Hoots and Jeers of Hundreds—Ex-President Casimir-Perier Gives a Manly, Straightforward Deposition—Will Confront the Wretched Mercier—The Military Judges Will for the Sake of Decency, Acquit Dreyfus, but They Will Do It Grudgingly.

Rennes, Aug. 14. — Saturday was a tremendous day. M. Casimir-Perier gave to the court-martial a history of the Dreyfus case. He spoke in an animated manner with a strong emotion. He appeared to great advantage and was honest and truthful, though not free from pose, unless when anger about lies told about him rendered him quite natural.

M. Casimir-Perier declared he would not leave the court until the imputations against him were cleared up. He repeated the testimony given by him before the court of cassation.

Gen. Mercier was allowed to sit while giving his deposition, if long-winded, flat explanations and remarks can be called deposition. There was hardly any incident in his testimony beyond the assertion that he sent secret documents to Col. Maurel with a not strict order, but an implied order, to show them to the other judges of the 1894 court-martial. Apart from the administration his deposition, like that of Gen. Roget before the court of cassation, was full of innuendo, of phrases and of "it is not impossible" or "it may be," and such like verbal ambiguities. Failing to demonstrate the guilt of Dreyfus, Gen. Mercier turned toward the prisoner at the conclusion of a very dull speech and, with Pecksniffian softness, he—appearing to be at the time on his knees as he spoke said:

"If I had the slightest doubt of the justice of the 1894 sentence I would now say to the prisoner, 'Captain, I have wronged you.'"

Dreyfus, for the first time, burst the bounds of his strict self-control. The blood rushed into his face, and starting to his feet he cried: "But that is what you ought to say!" This brought down the house, and the bar, the press and the public applauded. Dreyfus stood while the "bravos" were repeated, quivering with anger. Then the cowed look returned and he sat down rapidly in the square military position he thinks respectful to the court.

Gen. Mercier's deposition was in such contrast to the graphic, powerful story of M. Casimir-Perier, which had throughout the ring of truth, that the general was booted as he left the stand. Gen. Mercier and M. Casimir-Perier will be confronted to-day. Today's session will be as was Saturday's, thrilling, a sign that the tide is turning. Col. Jouaust, the president of the court, who was so stiff with Dreyfus, ignoring his salutes, Saturday returned them.

There were other depositions of great importance, though they were not sensational. Their importance lay in their covering the anti-Dreyfusites with confusion by nailing their lies to the counter. M. de la Roche-Vernot, a typical attache of the embassy, now serving at Berlin, had been greatly boasted about by the anti-Dreyfusites as able to smash M. Palaologue's testimony given on behalf of the foreign office before the court of cassation. Well, De la Roche-Vernot was summoned to Rennes as a witness for the defense. Everything he said confirmed M. Palaologue and confounded Gen. Mercier. His evidence related to interpretations sent to the war office of Panizzardi's cipher telegram to the Italian government about the arrest of Dreyfus. MM. De la Roche-Vernot and Palaologue were confronted with the result of mutual confirmation.

The military judges will for decency's sake have to acquit Dreyfus, but they will do so reluctantly and with hearts filled with gall. They are not to be contented with the evidence, but it will overbear them.

DREYFUS' COUNSEL SHOT.

Maitre Labori Receives a Fatal Wound.

Rennes, Aug. 14. — Two men ambushed Maitre Labori, counsel for Dreyfus, and one shot was fired, hitting Labori in the back. M. Labori fell in the roadway. Maitre Labori left his home alone for the court at about 6 o'clock this morning. His residence is situated in the suburbs of the town, about a quarter of an hour's walk from the Lycee, the route being along a solitary road beside the River Villaine. He had reached a point half-way on his journey when two men who had evidently been lying in wait for him, rushed out of a narrow lane and one of them fired a single shot from a revolver. The murderers were only a couple of yards behind their victim and the bullet struck Labori in the back. The wounded man uttered an agonized cry and fell flat on his face. The murderers immediately fled through the lane and both escaped. At 7:30 o'clock it was announced that the bullet had entered the stomach, that there was no outward bleeding and that the physicians believe that M. Labori will die from the wound.

Another story is told that M. Labori was shot in the temple by a man who fired a revolver at him outside of the court and that the miscreant was arrested.

TWO POLICEMEN MURDERED.

Drunken Recruit Runs Amuck With a Gun.

Denver, Colo., Aug. 14.—Two police officers were murdered here yesterday by a recruit belonging to Company L, Thirty-fourth volunteer infantry, now stationed at Fort Logan. Three soldiers had been raising a disturbance in Louis Klipfel's saloon at the corner of Market and Twentieth street during the night, and Officer Tom Clifford was notified of their action and was asked to watch him. He followed them for an hour or so and came upon the men at the corner of Blake and Twentieth streets. He was about to arrest the soldiers when one of them turned on him and, placing the muzzle of a revolver to his breast, sent a bullet through his heart. Clifford died almost instantly. All three of the soldiers then ran but two were overtaken and captured. The one who did the shooting, however, continued running, with officer W. E. Griffith, on a bicycle, in pursuit. After a chase of several blocks Griffith sent two shots after the fugitive. The latter returned the fire, mortally wounding Griffith. He died a few minutes later. The entire police and detective forces of the city were sent out after the man but he succeeded in eluding pursuit. It was learned that the name of the man who did the killing was Wellington C. Llewellyn, and that he came from Globe, Ariz. A reward has been offered for him dead or alive.

BRUTAL SHERIFF.

High-Handed Outrage Perpetrated by a Mexican Official.

Austin, Tex., Aug. 14.—Gov. Sayers received a telegram from W. N. Sparks, an attorney of Hidalgo county, dated at Reynosa, Mex., reporting inhuman treatment of Mexican prisoners in the county jail there by the sheriff and his deputies. The telegram alleges that five Mexican prisoners who have been naturalized as American citizens, were arrested last Monday and thrown into jail by the sheriff without his stating what they were charged with. Since that time none of their friends nor any one else has been permitted to see them until yesterday, a young attorney who had been engaged by their friends to represent them, had an entrance to the jail. There he found a terrible state of affairs. Five prisoners presented an awful appearance, with all the flesh torn off their necks and their bodies covered with cuts and bruises. He reports that one of the Mexicans had been hung by the neck and thumbs until life was almost extinct in the hope of extracting a confession from them, but as to what said confession was to be no one knows as yet.

WHITE CAPISM IN MONTANA.

Rancher of Paradise Valley Is the Victim.

Great Falls, Mont., Aug. 14.—The first whitecap outrage in Montana occurred Friday night near Chinook, a small town in the Milk river valley. George Henson, a rancher of Paradise valley was the victim. He was to have been a witness for the state in an assault case to be tried the next day, and it appears that there was a strong sentiment in favor of the defendant. A crowd of several men, dressed in white cap disguises, visited Henson about midnight, broke into the house and dragged him from bed, took him outside, tied him to a tree and administered a severe whipping. Then they tied a rope around his waist and threw him into the river and dragged him out repeatedly until they made him promise not to appear at the trial on Saturday morning. The crowd left after threatening to kill Henson should he fail to make his promise good. Henson's failure to appear at the trial led to an investigation by the county attorney, when these facts were disclosed. The victim has disappeared and no one seems to know his whereabouts.

CORPORATIONS CINCHED.

South Dakota Raises Railroad and Telegraph Assessments.

Pierre, S. D., Aug. 14.—The state assessment board practically completed its work, but it will be several days before definite figures can be secured, no footings having been made. The Western Union Telegraph company was given a raise of 25 per cent, from $60 to $75 per mile, and telephone companies were given the same treatment as other property. The highest raise per mile on any railroad in the state was $1,600 per mile on the Sioux City & Northern. The total raise on the Milwaukee was over $1,000,000, and on the Northwestern over $500,000.

SMELTERS RESTARTING.

End of the Colorado Labor Difficulty Apparently in Sight.

Denver, Aug. 14. — It is announced that the roasters at the Omaha and Grant smelters were quietly started with fifty men and the former employes in the plants are rapidly applying for work. The union voted again last night to continue the fight, but the men are said to be breaking away. It is predicted that all of the old men will be back at work within a week. The furnaces at the Globe plant are also being put in shape for operation.

THOUSANDS DEAD

REPORTS OF THE HURRICANE DID NOT TELL HALF.

One-Fifth of the Dwellings on the Island of Porto Rico Are Totally Destroyed and Their Owners Are Without Shelter or Food—Crops Were Completely Destroyed—Deaths Number More Than a Thousand and May Be Several Times This Number—Gen. Davis Makes a Strong Plea for Provisions.

"The true state of affairs throughout the island is not known because of total destruction of all telegraphic connections and great destruction on all roads. Not more than one-fourth of the towns are heard from yet, but enough is known that one-fifth of the dwellings in the island are totally destroyed and their owners are without any shelter whatever or any food beyond what has been saved from the debris. The coffee crop and most of the trees are ruined, and thus reliance for support is gone. Fully one-third of the people subsist entirely on fruit and a small degree of tubas. All the former is destroyed and much of the latter rotting in the ground. Great many thousands of cattle are drowned and the debris carried down by the rivers is strewn over the ocean with the wreck of the storm and the dead bodies of animals. The deaths from falling walls and drowning will number more than a thousand and may be several times this number. The state of distress is very great, and when green fruits saved from the debris are consumed the suffering will be very great. I am relieving the suffering everywhere within reach as much as possible, but in out of the way places there are many thousands who cannot be reached for some time. The supplies ordered sent by the government will help much but will last only a few days, while destitution must continue for many weeks or some months, until the bananas grow up from the ground, for which five months at least are required. Food of all kinds is needed, especially rice, beans and codfish, which has been the main support outside of fruit. Cheap cotton clothing is also needed, for thousands rushed naked from their dwellings at night when the gale broke. Medicines are also needed most pressingly, especially quinine and other simple medicines. I estimate that at least 1,000 tons of food will be required weekly for several weeks. I have constituted boards all over the island to regulate assistance, and a general board here to conduct the relief work. While I have not yet full data, I repeat the estimate that at least 100,000 people are homeless and destitute. Relief ration proposed, one pound of food per day, composed of seven ounces of beans, seven ounces of rice and two ounces of codfish. In addition to the food ordered by the McPherson I ask that 2,500 tons, above proportions should be shipped next week. Before this is consumed I will have full data respecting future needs, but I fear extensive issues of provisions will be necessary for several months. I shall push work on the goods and give employment to as many as possible. I hope the charitable people of the States will contribute food, clothes, medicines and money. Col. Hofer, chief surgeon of the department, is chairman of the board of relief, and auxiliary boards are organizing in all the towns. Five posts not yet heard from."

Gen. Davis' second dispatch says: "Further details, incomplete, confirm previous reports as conservative. Should be shipped this week not less than 2,500 tons food. Best to be sent beans, rice and codfish. Cotton cloth ing and coarse cotton goods in piece, needles and thread also needed. Money will be applied in assisting to rebuild houses and huts and hire of help. I recommend that bags for sugar and coffee, all kinds of rough lumber for building and fencing hooks, staves and hoops for sugar packing and galvanized iron and nails for roofing purposes be placed on first list."

GENEROUS NEW YORKERS.

Quick to Answer the Cry of Distressed Porto Ricans.

New York, Aug. 14.—The response of the citizens of New York to the appeals for assistance to the stricken Porto Ricans will be generous. Miscellaneous contributions have already been received at the army headquarters' pier at the foot of Pacific street, Brooklyn. The government stevedores loaded the supplies on the transport McPherson last night. The McPherson sails for the hurricane-affected ports of Porto Rico to-day. Beside the private contributions she will take away 750 tons of other supplies, including 600,000 pounds of rice, 600,000 pounds of beans, some general cargo for San Juan and 18,000 feet of lumber.

KEARNEY BUYS WHEAT.

Noted San Francisco Man Believes the Cereal Will Go Above the Dollar Mark.

San Francisco, Aug. 14. — Dennis Kearney, the sand-lotter, has bought $40,000 worth of wheat. This is the same Dennis Kearney who started the "Chinese must go" cry, the Kearney who, for a time, was almost dictator of California. Kearney says: "I think wheat will go to $1.15 and $1.25, and probably $1.50. I say this on my knowledge of conditions."

AN EXCITING TRIP.

Transport Centennial Has Some Remarkable Experiences.

San Francisco, Aug. 14.—The United States transport Centennial arrived here from Manila yesterday after a most exciting round trip. She narrowly missed a couple of typhoons, was ashore on a coral reef, where the entire crew barely escaped capture at the hands of the Filipinos, one of the sailors was killed by a parting hawser and one of the quartermasters was stabbed by a colored cook. Because of the stabbing Charles Wilson, of the Centennial gallery staff, arrived here in irons, while Herman Brevey, the transport's quartermaster will have a sojourn in some hospital until he recovers from the effects of the cook's knife. During the lightening process necessary to get the Centennial off the reef near Manila on her outward trip a quantity of government stores to the value of $13,000 had to be jettisoned and were eagerly appropriated by the Filipinos, who swarmed about the reef and made more than one attack for the purpose of capturing the vessel and crew.

ACTS OF LAWLESSNESS.

Committed by Sympathizers With Locked-Out Street Car Men.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Aug. 14—A number of sympathizers with the locked-out union employes of the electric street railway at a secluded point on the road attacked a car containing a number of passengers with rocks. Windows in the car were broken and the motorman was struck. One lady in jumping from the car was struck by a huge boulder and seriously hurt. The motorman drew a revolver and fired into the mob. A posse of policemen were sent to the scene and dispersed the mob. At another point on the road a car was stoned but no one was hurt. The tracks of the electric road were greased at various points, delaying traffic. The mob at the mountain end of the line at 11 o'clock turned over and completely wrecked the company's depot.

WARLIKE PREPARATIONS.

Transvaal Government Arranging for Mobilization of the Army.

Johannesburg, Aug. 14.—The Transvaal government, it is reported, has provisionally arranged with the Netherlands South Africa Railway company for mobilization on the shortest notice, if required. Immense stores of provisions and war material have been collected at Pretoria. It is rumored that orders have been issued to mobilize the artillery reserve. It is alleged from Boer sources that the government intends to introduce a passport law, aiming to prevent Outlanders leaving the country without permission in the event of war.

WOULD OUST OIL TRUST.

Attorney General of Nebraska Begins an Action.

Omaha, Aug. 14.—Attorney General Smyth has begun proceedings in the district court of this county against the Standard Oil company and its branches. The case is brought under the Nebraska anti-trust law. The attorney general asks that the company, which he alleges is a trust and controls the price at which petroleum and its products are to be sold, be ousted from the state and enjoined from doing business therein. The attorney general announces his intention to bring similar action against other alleged trusts shortly.

INSURGENT SUCCESS.

Jiminez's Cause Appears to Be Thriving.

Cape Haitien, Aug. 14.—Twelve hundred insurgents crossed the Yaque river under the fire of a mitrailleuse. In the engagement the government forces lost eighteen men killed, but there were no fatalities among the insurgents. A dispatch from Banaca announces that the entire province of Neba is ready to rise in favor of Gen. Jiminez. Gen. Toreybo Garcia is expected from Cuba to assume command of the revolutionary movement.

Besieged by Insurgents.

Cape Haitien, Aug. 14 — Monte Christi is now besieged by the insurgents and the town is without provisions. Gen. Pepin, governor of Santiago province, has telegraphed Gen. Cordero at Monte Christi to return to assist in preparing for the defense of Santiago de los Caballeros.

TOOK SAN MATEO

TROOPS UNDER YOUNG OCCUPY THE TOWN.

The Capture Resulted From a Reconnoissance to Discover the Whereabouts of the Enemy—American Loss Was Three Killed and Thirteen Wounded—Twenty-Three of the Enemy Are Known to Have Been Killed—Condition of the Country Interferes Greatly With the Movements of the Troops.

Manila, Aug. 14. — A reconnoissance by troops of Gen. Samuel B. M. Young's brigade, with the object of discovering the whereabouts of the enemy near San Mateo, northeast of the San Juan reservoir, about ten miles from Manila, resulted in the occupation of San Mateo. The American loss was three killed and thirteen wounded, including a lieutenant of the Twenty-first infantry.

The Americans approached San Mateo in three columns. Maj. Cronin, with 150 men of the Twenty-fifth infantry, advanced from Novaliches, five miles west of San Mateo. Capt. Rivers, with 100 men of the Fourth cavalry, and Capt. Parker, formerly lieutenant colonel of the Twelfth New York volunteers, with 280 men of the Twenty-first and Twenty-fourth infantry, and the Fourth cavalry, approached in two columns from the south.

Maj. Cronin experienced many difficulties arising from the condition of the country and failed to effect a juncture with Capt. Rivers west of San Mateo as had been planned. Capt. Rivers advanced, took an outpost of the enemy two miles west of San Mateo. He then encountered strong resistance among the hills, the enemy firing from excellent positions. Having failed to connect with Maj. Cronin, and seeing that the town was already occupied by the Americans, Capt. Rivers withdrew, covering his withdrawal by a heavy volley. He lost a sergeant killed.

Capt. Parker, on advancing, found the enemy strongly intrenched on the far side of some rice fields, about a mile wide and covered with deep mud. Pushing forward rapidly he routed the Filipinos after forty minutes' fighting, and then continued the march upon San Mateo, which he entered after serious resistance. Maj. Cronin reached the town about three hours later. The Americans still occupy the place. Our men were exhausted by the heavy marching. Twenty-three of the enemy are known to have been killed. This is the first action in which Col. Burt's Col. Burt's colored troops participated. They behaved well, their leaders having difficulty in holding them back.

Gen. Young accompanied Capt. Parker's column and was under fire throughout the engagement. It is estimated that the enemy numbered between 300 and 400 men.

Insurgents Aggressive.

Manila, Aug. 14. — The insurgents have taken the aggressive in the neighborhood of the railway. On Saturday night unsuccessfully attacked San Luis, on the Rio Grande, near Calumpit, which is garrisoned by two companies of the Twenty-second infantry. The Americans had one man, a sergeant, killed and two privates wounded. Sunday morning a similar affair took place at Grigono, four miles west of Malolos, where a small garrison is stationed as a safeguard against a possible attack upon the railway. A special train took reinforcements to Malolos and Guiguinto, just north of Bulacan.

Gilmore is allowed a horse and a servant and is fairly treated.

Inda returned the blow, felling the negro to the stone floor. He died two hours later.

An Ugly Story of Uruguay.

Here is one of Robert Crawford's stories about Uruguay: "Two men surprised a farmer and his wife in their little hut while it was broad daylight. The man was seized and bound, and the two villains proceeded to torture him to make him disclose the hiding place of his hoard. The wife begged and pleaded as the horrors increased, the man proving obdurate.

"Finally she said she would tell them where the treasure was if they would follow her. One of the two accordingly went over to the chest in the corner with her. She opened it, fumbling about inside of it for a moment until she found what she was looking for. In another moment the thief at her side was dead and his fellow covered by a large revolver in the hands of a small but eager woman of the people. He got away before she could quite make up her mind to shoot him too.

"Then the husband was released and the neighbors, some miles away, called in. Word was finally taken to the central police authority of the state; the officers came, viewed the dead thief—and identified him as their attorney general. It is not unlikely," Mr. Crawford adds, "that his accomplice was the judge of the criminal court."

A Miraculous Escape.

It happened that in the last month of the reign of Charles I a certain ship chandler of London was foolish enough to busy himself over a barrel of gunpowder with a lighted candle in his hand. He paid the price of his folly. A spark fell into the gunpowder and the place was blown up.

The trouble was that the man who did the mischief was not the only one to perish. Fifty houses were wrecked, and the number of people who were killed was not known.

In one house among the 50 a mother had put her baby into its cradle to sleep before the explosion occurred. What became of the mother no one ever knew, but what became of the baby was very widely known.

The next morning there was found upon the leads of the Church of All Hallows a young child in a cradle, baby and cradle being entirely uninjured by the explosion that had lifted both to such a giddy height.

It was never learned who the child was, but she was adopted by a gentleman of the parish and grew to womanhood. She must surely all her life have had a peculiar interest in that church.—Sir Walter Besant's "London."

Ice Explosions In Siberia.

A recent Siberian traveler relates: "At Sadonsk in the intensely cold nights the silence was sometimes broken by a loud report as of a cannon. This was the bursting of one of the ice bubbles in the river, a phenomenon I had neither heard nor read of before. The streams coming down from the hills were frozen on the surface some six to nine inches thick. The water beneath flowed faster than it could escape, and the pressure, on the principal of a hydraulic press, became irresistible. First, the elasticity of the ice was seen by the rising of circular mounds from six to eight feet in diameter and from four to five feet high. The bursting point came at last with a report like an explosion. The water escaped, but soon froze again. I have seen scores of these ice hillocks in a few versts of the river."

A Bridge of Coffins.

When the British forces were marching to Peking in 1860, after the capture of the Taku forts, one of the rivers became so swollen with the heavy rains that it was rendered almost impassable. While in this quandary a bright idea suddenly struck one of our officers. Being well aware that the Chinese generally order their coffins years in advance and keep them on the premises and also that they are perfectly airtight, he consulted with his brother officers, with the result that orders were given to search all the houses of the village and collect every coffin. With the aid of a few empty casks the soldiers constructed a pontoon bridge of coffins sufficiently strong to bear the artillery, and the river was thus passed in safety.

Where the Tail Went.

Do you remember the story of Harry's and George's rabbits—how Harry's rabbit got out of its hutch and disappeared for a week and at last crept home without its tail to die and how, when Harry cried bitterly over his dead tailless rabbit, George tried to comfort him.

"Don't cry, Harry, dear; don't cry. It's only the body you see! The tail has gone to heaven."—"Memories and Fancies," by Lady Gordon.

Holding His Job.

"I think the man who works at that place across the street is the most faithful and conscientious workman I ever saw. He never takes a holiday and always labors away till it's too dark to see any longer."

"Faithful workman? Great Scott! He's the proprietor of the shop!"—Chicago Tribune.

HIGH TONED BOOK AGENTS.

Men Who Only Sell Volumes Worth From $50 to $500.

"There is a distinct upper class of book agents who never come in contact with the general public," remarked Mr. Charles H. Meyers. "I have been interested in art publications for a number of years and know most of the tiptop salesmen in the country. They handle books that range from $50 to $500 in price and only call on people who figure on certain select lists. These lists are the result of the cullings of years, and, combined, they represent nearly all of the high class book buyers of the United States. Each publishing house has its own collection of names, and they are valued highly.

"I call to mind one firm that failed and went out of business several years ago and its roster of buyers was considered its very best asset. It was purchased for something like $5,000. The class of books handled by the agents to whom I refer would greatly astonish the everyday patron of the shops. They are printed in very limited editions, and every refinement of mechanical art is lavished on their preparation. Sometimes the edition numbers only 25 or 30, and as soon as it is off the press the type is taken down and distributed. The illustrations are frequently water color paintings or artists' proofs of etchings, and it is quite common for the vignette letters to be tinted by hand.

"Such books are never advertised, but are easily disposed of to the inner circle of rich connoisseurs. The agents who take the orders are the princes of the business. I know one who makes easily $10,000 a year, and they are nearly all well to do. They are continually on the go, but if you were to encounter one of them at a hotel the chances are you would never guess his vocation. What are the topics of the books they sell? Oh! They range from Shakespeare's comedies to Walton's complete angler—a little of everything."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

CLEVER MILITARY TRICK.

The Stratagem by Which Sir Francis Vere Defeated the Spanish.

When Philip II debated the question of coercing with fire and sword the Dutchman, who did not like the taxes which they themselves did not vote, the Duke of Alva counseled violent measures, for in his eyes the rebels were only "men of butter." Nevertheless he found that these men, so fond of cows and hens, could hold his veterans at bay, finally overcome them in the field, and after 80 years leave poor Spain "a broken backed tiger."

Indeed in time of war country folk with baskets of eggs and butter excited no suspicion even in alert sentinels. Taking advantage of this fact, Sir Francis Vere determined to recapture from the Spaniards the Zutphen sconces, or forts, by a stratagem. In 1591 he picked out some lusty and handsome young soldiers and dressed most of them like the Gelderland egg women and the rest as Boers. With bundles of vegetables, baskets of eggs and butter, but also with daggers and pistols inside their clothes, they were ferried across the river by twos and threes. They sat near the gate of the fort being already at the break of day, chatting and gesticulating, as if in some tremendous argument about the rise or fall of market prices.

Then, according to arrangement, Vere sent some cavalry forward, as if approaching, and the pretended country people ran in feigned terror toward the fort. The gates were at once thrown open to receive them. They all streamed in, threw off their disguises, and in a few minutes were in possession of the forts of the town, where the gallant Sir Philip Sidney afterward lost his life by being more rash and less shrewd than the veteran Vere.—Harper's Bazar.

A Mark Twain Story.

Apropos of the Portuguese reis (pronounced rays), when Mark Twain visited Fayal some years ago one of his companions invited him to dine, with eight others, at the principal hotel in that happy island. As soon as the cloth was removed and the wine placed on the table the host called for the bill, which amounted to 21,700 reis.

"Go, leave me to my misery, boys!" ejaculated the unhappy man. "There isn't money enough in the ship to pay that bill. I am a ruined community. Landlord, this is a mean swindle. Here's $150, and it's all you'll get. I'll swim in blood before I'll pay a cent more."

The landlord looked surprised, but immediately had his little account translated "into a language that a Christian could understand," when it was found that, at the rate of 1,000 reis to a dollar, the demand actually amounted to $21.70. More refreshments were ordered forthwith.—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

A Penalty of Knowledge.

"It seems to me," remarked the high browed theorist, "that people positively resent education. A man who is more than ordinarily wise is usually left to himself as much as possible."

"Perhaps you are right," answered Miss Cayenne. "When a man knows such a very great deal, he makes one apprehensive. There is no telling when he may be going to sit down and try to tell it all."—Washington Star.

A Sadly Lost Dime.

When last in New York, Carnegie had a bitter experience with a messenger boy, whose tardiness in delivering a business message came near upsetting a deal of great importance. Referring to this incident while at dinner with friends that evening, he told of an office boy who worked for him many years ago when he was of far less importance in the commercial world.

"James," said Mr. Carnegie, "was a willing boy, but his ability as a stutterer was simply wonderful, and I often found it more convenient to attend to little errands myself than to wait for his explanations. One day a neighbor wanted to send a nice note clear across the city, and I permitted James to carry it for him. The trip was a long one, and James was gone quite three hours. When he returned, I asked him how much he had charged for his services.

"'Fi-fi-fi-fi-fi-fi-fifteen c-c-c-cents!' was the gasping reply.

"'Why didn't you make it a quarter?' I asked.

"'I c-c-c-c-c-could-could-couldn't s-s-s-s-say it,' he replied, with tears as well as hyphens in his voice.

"Right then I made up my mind never to give any one my services without first making sure that I could recite my price without stuttering, and I never have."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Return of the Rations.

In the civil war our soldiers faced privation and hunger. A little story in H. Clay Trumbull's book, "War Memories of a Chaplain," tells of the spirit in which they sometimes did it.

While before Petersburg doing siege work in the summer of 1864, our men had wormy hard tack served out to them. It was a severe trial to the men. Breaking open the biscuits and finding live worms in them, they would throw the pieces in the trenches, although the orders were to keep the trenches clean.

A brigade officer of the day, seeing some of these scraps along our front, called out sharply to our men:

"Throw that hard tack out of the trenches." Then, as the men promptly gathered it up, he added, "Don't you know that you've no business to throw hard tack in the trenches?"

Out from the injured soldier heart there came the reasonable explanation, "We've thrown it out two or three times, sir, but it crawls back."

Pretty Lively Eating.

When one grows weary of the eternal ices, blancmanges, charlottes and puddings served to us year in and year out for dessert, it is pleasant to hear of an innovation. A traveled American remarked that she once had the felicity of sitting down to a Japanese dinner at which were served such dainties as melons, ices, fruits and sea frogs. There was in addition to these sweets a covered dish, into which, at the beginning of the dinner, a bottle of wine had been poured.

When the sea frogs and other dainties had been discussed, the cover of this dish was removed, and a number of sandhoppers, hilariously intoxicated and jumping about in the wildest manner, were presented to the gaze of the astonished American guests. The lively dessert, as the fair traveler says, was caught by the Japanese with little bamboo sticks and eaten with great gusto.

Chinese Torture.

The ingenuity of the Chinese in devising punishment for offenders surpasses that of the most cruel people of the middle ages. Some time ago a boy was kidnaped from a village about 80 miles from Chin-Kiang and brought to that city to be sold. The kidnapers were arrested and returned to the village, where the people dug a hole in the ground, like a grave, about three feet deep, covered the bottom and sides with unslaked lime, placed the offender, with his hands and feet tied, upon the lime and covered his body with the same material. Then they filled the hole full of water and as the lime slacked he was roasted alive and his body consumed.

The New Way.

The cannibal chief stood with his hand shading his eyes. A solitary figure was timidly creeping toward him from the jungle. Suddenly the old chief started. He took a quick step forward. "It is," he cried, "it is my son! He is coming home again!" Then with his eyes still fixed on the slouching figure he shrilly called to his head hunter: "Moongwa, the prodigal is returning! Kill the fatted Kaffir!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Little Matter Among Friends.

Two boys were in fighting attitude like bantams; another and a smaller one stood watching them, wiping his eyes, sobbing the while.

"What did yer hit him for?" said one.

"'Tain't none of your business."

"Yes, it is; he's my friend."

"Well, he's my friend too."—New York Commercial Advertiser.

An Undesired Ally.

"How is Mud Slinger going to side in this race? Is he for you?"

"That's what's worrying me," replied the candidate for office. "If I thought he was going to be against me, I would feel surer of election."—Columbus (O.) State Journal.

NEW YORK WORLD.
THRICE-A-WEEK EDITION.

Practically a Daily at the Price of a Weekly.

The striking and important events of the last year have established the overwhelming value of The Thrice-a-Week World to every reader. For an almost nominal sum it has kept its subscribers informed of the progress of all our wars and moreover, has reported them as promptly and fully as if it were a daily. With our interests still extending throughout the world, with our troops operating in the Philippines and the great Presidential campaign, too, at hand, its value is further increased.

The motto of The Thrice-a-Week World is improved. It strives each year to be better than it was the year before, and public confidence in it is shown by the fact that it now circulates more than twice as many papers every week as any other newspaper, not a daily, published in America.

We offer this unequaled newspaper and The St. Hilaire Spectator together one year for $1.65.

The lecture given at Brink's hall last Thursday evening by Rev. Dr. Forbes was well attended and the subject "Odd Fellowship" was handled in a masterly manner. An exchange says here's a pointer for those who use gasoline stoves. If an explosion occurs throw flour, meal or sand upon it but never use water. Flour, meal or sand will extinguish the blaze at once, as water only serves to spread it. Cut this out and paste it near the stove. It may be the means of saving your home.

At the fourth quarterly conference of this Conference Year held in the M. E. church on August 11th, the presiding elder, Dr. Forbes, presiding, it was decided that St. Hilaire would be a station. This action separates the church from its hitherto obligations to Thief River Falls and gives the minister full time to this one place.

There was considerable excitement down at the dam last night over the landing of a large catfish. One man could not lift it up with the line when another went to his assistance but the apron over the dam being slippery he lost his footing and fell in and after about five minutes tussleing with his fishship he managed to land the monster. The telephone boys are having a feast to day.

A crew of log drivers for the Red Lake Falls Lumber Company passed through here to-day enroute to Red Lake after another drive of logs. They anticipate a great deal of trouble bringing down this drive on account of the low stage of water, especially at the five miles of rapids between here and Red Lake Falls where it is possible to cross the river jumping from rock to rock without getting a foot wet.

"Here," says an exchange, is something that is worth two dollars to every farmer in the land to know: Sprinkle lime in your stock tank, and not a particle of scum will form on the water. When the lime loses its strenght scum begins to form, which may be twice during the season; wash out the tank and repeat the dose. It is cheap, not only harmless but wholesome, keeps the water sweet and saves the stock.

Capt. Ed. Geary of Co. B writes his sister, Mrs. Heapes of Fargo from Morong: "Just think of going through two summers, and not seeing a pear, peach, plum, apple, melon, grape, strawberry, raspberry, currants or anything else. This country does no more compare with the United States for fruit or song birds than does Lapland. It is very prolific of babies, dogs, insects and crime however, and is a splendid school in which to learn to appreciate a good wife and a comfortable home."

Some New Yorkers burned William Waldorf Astor—in effigy—because he forswore his country and became a naturalized Briton—which is all wrong. If Mr. Astor preferred to be an English subject—the United States don't lose anything—worth making a fuss about. Forget this Astor—and think of Captain Jack—who outfitted, equipped and paid for a battery—that fought all through the Spanish war, and then went to Manila. Such an Astor is worth remembering—while it's easy to forget William Waldorf.—Fargo Forum.

Mr. A. L. Mattes, general foreman at the Brainerd Lumber Co.'s big mills, underwent an operation for appendicitis at the Northern Pacific sanitarium Sunday. The operation was successful and "Al" is doing as well as could be expected under the circumstances. His many friends in Brainerd hope for his early recovery.—Brainerd Tribune.

The above is a brother of Arthur Mattes, cashier of the St. Hilaire Lumber Company, who at present is at Colorado Springs for the benefit of his health and we are pleased to state is improving—having gained four pounds in one week. Theo. Mattes, father of the two boys is a resident of Brainerd.

Last week 200 tramps took possession of an N. P. train bound east for Fargo but the conductor slipped the cut on them and side-tracked the gang—which were in two box cars and two flat cars —and left them at a small station called Edgeley.

Last week a delinquent subscriber said he would pay if he lived, says an exchange. He died. Another said, "I will see you tomorrow." He's blind. Still another said. "I'll pay you this week or go to the devil." He's gone. There are hundreds who ought to take warning of these procrastinators and pay up now.

The time is coming, say the scientific sharps, when the population of the United States will be so dense that there will be but one acre of ground to every inhabitant in the vast area. This alarming condition of affairs, say these authorities, will come about in the year 2000 should this country increase in population at the rate it has been doing in the past twenty years. And should the increase be at the rate of the last fifty years that conditions will come several decades earlier. Verily in the not very far off future there will be in this broad land of ours "standing room only," if these gentlemen are even approximately correct in their calculations.

A little boy was required to write an essay the other day. "The Newspaper" was the subject, and here is the result: "I don't know how newspapers came to be in the world. I don't think God does. For he hain't got nothing to say 'bout them, and 'editors' is not in the Bible. I think the editor is one of the missing links you hear about, and stayed in the brush till after the flood, then came out and wrote the thing up, and has been here ever since. I don't think he ever dies; I never saw a dead 'un and never heard of one getting licked. Our paper is a mighty poor 'un; the editor goes 'thout underclothes all winter, don't wear no socks, and pa hasn't paid his subscription in five years."—Ex.

Preparations for the Minnesota State Fair, at Hamlin, Sept. 4th to 9th, inclusive, are already so nearly complete that it is safe to promise a really great exposition of Northwestern live stock, agricultural and manufacturing interests. As the cities have agreed to leave the task of entertaining visitors to the Fair, the managers have determined to carry out a program that will be worthy of the week set apart for the great annual agricultural festival and have arranged for a brilliant evening program as well as for day events. Particulars will be given later.

New Variety of Wheat.

A variety of Russian wheat, imported by the government last year was tried at the Agricultural college this year. It is a soft wheat of the bearded variety, and shows itself to be a money maker for the farmer. The heads contain from 60 to 70 grains of twice the size of average wheat. By way of experiment the 62 grains from one head were weighed yesterday, showing a weight of 62 grains. Thirty-six kernels of another variety of common hard wheat, the number found in a head, weighed 20 grains. On the tenth of an acre given up to the experiment of this kind of wheat 56 heavy bundles were harvested, and it is believed that it will yield at the rate of 60 bushels to the acre. Even if it had to be sold for five cents a bushel less than the hard wheat usually grown in this country, it would appear to be a money maker for the man who raised it.—Crookston Tribune.

Council Proceedings.

State of Minnesota, County of Red Lake and village of St. Hilaire.

At an adjourned meeting of the village council of the village of St. Hilaire in the county of Red Lake and State of Minnesota held in the village hall on the 8th day of August 1899.

The sidewalk on the north side of Third street from Broadway to Water street and on the west side of Water street from Third street to Fourth street and on the west side of Water street from Fourth street to a point one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet north of Fourth street in said village was condemned as said sidewalk was found unsafe for a public walk and in too poor a condition to be repaired. Now therefore the street commissioner of the village of St. Hilaire is hereby ordered to proceed to give notice as provided by law to parties owning realestate froating or abuting said side walk described; to have said old sidewalk removed and a new sidewalk constructed in place of the same within twenty (20) days from the date hereof.

To pay the expense of constructing said new sidowalk a tax of Twenty-eight (28) cents per front foot is hereby assessed upon all the lots fronting or abbuting said new sidowalk and against the owners thereof.

Done by order of the village council this 8th day of August 1899.

On motion meeting adjourned.

Attest:—

The Jamestown Alert has taken a great deal of interest in the news from the Philippines and like the most of us now wants to know, Are our soldiers bullet proof." This is what he says: The cable news gives a general account of a battle between 4,000 Americans and 6,000 Filipinos at San Fernando and beyond on the 9th instant, lasting nearly all day. It is stated that the Americans drove the Filipinos five miles, during which time there was sharp fighting and the casualties on the American side were between 30 and 40. It is not stated whether any were killed. The Filipino loss is not given.

The veterans of the civil war can hardly understand how so long and desperate a battle between such large forces could have taken place, with so small a loss. In the civil war this could not have occurred. There would have been heaps of slain. Then the army used muzzle loading muskets. Now the soldiers are armed with repeating rifles and the small arms as well as cannons are much more accurate and effective. Still they do not appear to do much killing. Possibly the Filipinos are not very good fighters, or that our boys are bullet proof.

Lemon Juice for the Toilet.

Lemon juice can be used externally as well as internally with good results. Every housekeeper knows the value of the juice for removing stains and dirt from the hands when warm water and soap fail to make any impression. Another good use the juice is put to is to cleanse the teeth. Put half a teaspoonful of lemon juice in a glass of water for cleaning the teeth. The juice being a good germicide, will destroy many fungus growths that attack the teeth. It is also a good manicure acid. A teaspoonful of juice in a cup of tepid water makes the best sort of toilet wash. It not only removes dirt and stains from the ends of the fingers, but in whitens the skin and loosens the cuticle much better than scissors do. A lemon should be a part of the toilet necessity in every woman's room.

Clausen, head of the grain inspection department in Minnesota has resigned and the republican papers of that state seem to feel that Gov. Lind has forced from under them the last leg of their former administration, and feel very sore over the resignation. They will get but poor sympathy from the North Dakota press, however, as it was this department that has caused our farmers to loose many thousands of hard earned dollars by his maloffence of office, so to speak. He had in a lot dishonest, corrupt and incompetent inspectors as deputies and their removal from office will be a satisfaction to the people of this state who are forced to sell under Minnesota grades, even though no more competent or honest men are appointed in their places. And in the meantime, why not try to establish a market in our home state, inducing buyers to come here for good wheat, instead of having it adulterated with the inferior stuff that would not command a market price if it was not for the mixing with our No. 1 hard?—Walhalla Mountaineer.

The decision of the court was, a subscriber could be held for subscription until arrearages were paid.

Mysterious Electroid.

Francis Rychnowski, a mechanical engineer, of Lemberg, Austria, has discovered a strange and very subtle matter, which he has called "electroid" because of certain affinity with electricity. Electroid, produced by a special apparatus built by the inventor, is obtained by the dissolution of certain matters under the influence of the electric current. It makes noise and at the same time a refreshing scent and cool breeze are experienced. This discovery induced Mr. Rychnowski to make a machine capable of refreshing the air to such a degree that those present during the experiment had the feeling that the window was open, although this was not the case. Electroid is a very subtle matter, but it seems to be a fluid, and it can be gathered and preserved; while falling on a plate it reflects in the shape of shining sheaves. The commission appointed by the Austrian government to investigate this discovery reported that under the influence of electroid, plants grew rapidly, and the buds of flowers unclose while one is looking at them. Electroid annihilates microbes, and thus preserves organic matter. These are physiological influences of electroid. Among mechanical phenomena the commission reported that the influence of electroid is not stopped even by a brick wall and glass; that it attracts solid bodies and makes them shine like moonlight—it makes them move and attract other bodies; finally that it acts on photographic plates and produces sharp and distinct outlines, such as were formerly possible only with a very powerful lens. The conclusion of the commission was that Mr. Rychnowski's discovery will play a great part if applied to industry, as is the case with the discovery of his countryman, Jan Szczpanik.

Motor-Hauled Maxim Guns.

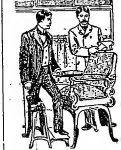
Great Britain has advanced a step beyond other nations in the use of the bicycle as an adjunct to the military service by the introduction of the motor cycle. It has been enlisted for the purpose of hauling a Maxim gun. One of these motor-hauled Maxims was shown at the eastern manoeuvres of the Twenty-sixth Middlesex cyclists, V. R. C., which took place at Aldershot. The cycle on which the gun, one of the regulation pattern, was mounted, derived its power from a two-horse power oil motor, which was built in the frame of the machine. It was fitted with 2 1-2 inch tires capable of withstanding the inequalities of the worst road imaginable without imparting too severe strain to the mechanism or the machine or the gun itself. This twentieth century gun carriage during the manoeuvres was accompanied by a team of six men, mounted on single wheels propelled by themselves. Each man carried 250 pounds of ammunition.

A New Treatment for Tuberculosis.

Dr. Karl von Ruck has introduced a new method of treating cases of pulmonary tuberculosis, namely that of the injection of a fluid extract of tubercle bacilli. In 78 cases thus treated he claims that 64.1 per cent were cured and 33.3 per cent improved. The serum prepared by his method differs materially from that known as Koch's Tuberculin R. If Von Ruck's treatment should prove to be as serviceable in the hands of others as it has proved in those of the author, the promoters of the open air treatment of phthisis in this country will have to reconsider their position. But a good deal of confirmatory evidence will be needful before the injection of a tuberculin as a cure for pulmonary tuberculosis will be able to convince the profession of this country of the efficacy of the method, and until Von Ruck has fully supplied the data in this regard it would be premature to speak with any enthusiasm upon the subject.—Medical Press.

Sanitary Barber Chair.

In these days of advanced sanitary science it is not only necessary that the patrons of a barber shop should have individual soap and brush and clean towels, but it is now proposed to give each patron an individual head rest as he reposes in the chair. Chairs ordinarily employed by hairdressers and barbers in their business are provided with rests that are usually adjustable and are designed to support the head and neck of an occupant of the chair. Such head rests are used for all customers and are not only objectionable to any person of fastidious tastes, who may give the matter a thought, but in some instances serve, as is confirmed by medical opinion, as the vehicle of communicating disease from one occupant of the chair to another. By this invention the cushion of the headrest is displaced by one consisting of sheets of paper or parchment super-imposed one over the other, and as each person leaves the chair, the top sheet is torn away and a fresh one presented for the new comer.

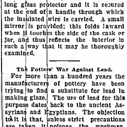


Manufacturing Fog.

Among the means of protecting fruit trees against frost, practiced in California, is the production of fog by a generator in the form of a wagon, invented by Mr. George F. Itzler. The wagon carries a sheet iron tank, the upper part of which is filled with wet straw, or similar material, kept moist by the automatic action of water from a cask, while near the bottom is a grate upon which tar is burned, a blast operated by a revolving fan serving to maintain the combustion. All the heat is compelled to pass through the wet straw before reaching the air, and in consequence the wagon is hurled in a dense fog, and as it passed between the rows of low trees, it envelopes them in a mist so thick that the driver is frequently compelled to lead the horses.

A Novel Electric Contrivance.

M. Camille Jenatzsy, a Belgian, has invented an electric bicycle that will travel, it is claimed, sixty-five miles an hour. He calls his machine "Jamais Contente." The machine is pointed fore and aft like a cigar, with polished steel sides, and at the top are apertures through which the heads of the crew poke up as if rising from a coffin. The steel cone is to protect the riders from the pressure of the air. The pointed front of the machine pierces the atmosphere as does a projectile from a cannon, the gradual broadening of its width considerably lessening the wind resistance. The electric motors at the speed trial of the invention sent the machine whizzing along at over a mile a minute.



An Electric Cellar Torch.

An electric cellar torch has recently been invented in Great Britain, and it admits of many uses. The inventor was the son of a physician, and quickly recognized that the principal of his father's laryngoscope might be very well applied to commercial purposes, and his experiments based on this idea resulted in the production of a clean, odorless and reliable appliance for the thorough examination of brewers' casks and vats, cans, etc. It consists of an electric lamp covered with a long glass protector and it is secured at the end of a handle through which the insulated wire is carried. A small mirror is provided; this folds inward when it touches the side of the cask or jar, and thus reflects the interior in such a way that it may be thoroughly examined.

The Potters' War Against Lead.

For more than a hundred years the manufacturers of pottery have been trying to find a substitute for lead in making glaze. The use of lead for this purpose dates back to the ancient Assyrians and Egyptians. The objection to it is that, unless strict precautions are taken, it poisons the workmen, causing paralysis, blindness and even death; but despite the efforts of modern science, stimulated by the offer of premiums and medals, no satisfactory leadless glaze has yet been found. Recent advances, however, have led to the expression of the opinion before the Society of Arts in London that success is at last within sight.

An Improved Electric Lamp.

A German inventor, Herr Langhans, has produced a filament of carbide of silicon for use in incandescent electric lamps, which, it is asserted, can be run at a higher efficiency than any carbon filament, and at the same time does not, like carbon, coat the glass bulb with an obscuring deposit.

Recent Inventions.

The teeth of a new anti-friction gear wheel for use with a worm shaft are formed of steel spindles arranged around the periphery of the wheel with ball bearings for each spindle, which allows them to revolve as they come in contact with the worm.

In a pneumatic saddle recently patented by a Belgian a hollow chamber or pocket is provided, with a long air-tight tube, which is coiled around inside to fill up all the space, after which the cover is laced on and the tube inflated by an air pump.

To prevent persons falling off a street car fender when once picked up, a New York man's invention consists of an endless-toothed carrier which is revolved by a wheel resting on the track to catch the clothing and pull the person to the top of the fender.

In a newly designed bottle the neck is extended above the cork and is of globular shape, being filled with cement or other hard substance after the cork is inserted, to prevent its removal without breaking off the upper portion and destroying the label.

That Would Do It.

From the Detroit Free Press: "Doctor," sighed the fat man, "guess it's no use. I've tried everything you've prescribed and grown fleshier all the time. Your latest recommendation was to ride horseback. I've done so faithfully for a month, but I've taken on eighteen pounds and the horse has lost 160."

"Ah, there's a scientific suggestion," said the elated doctor. "Try letting the horse ride you for a while."

Could Not Understand.

"You're beneath contempt!" exclaimed one French nobleman.

"I shall not honor you by noticing you," said the other.

And after reading a few columns of similar dialogue the American pugilist looked up wearily and inquired:

Sound Advice.

"What are you doing, Thomas?" asked the father of a young man who sat dreamily gazing into space.

"Building air castles, father," replied the visionary youth.

"Quit it, my boy, quit it," said the old man. "You can't mortgage structures of that kind for a cent."—Chicago News.

How Angeline Seraphina Was Honored—What Made the Difference—Two Babies Who Have Lived on the Sea All Their Lives—Worked Two Ways.

Dear Hands.

Dear hands, grown hard with toiling years,
To me how beautifully tender;
Ye have no need of jeweled spheres
To lend an artificial splendor;
Leave pearls and ruby's eye of fire
For courtly maiden's fragile finger;
God help you that you never tire
While here above the flowers you linger.

If sorrow wait, dear hands, you go,
And lay a healing touch on sadness;
And sunless hearts, in thrall to woe,
Find dolor ringed with gold of gladness.
Or when the fevered brow grows cold,
And rests where seldom footstep passes,
Your lilies peep from out the mold
Like white stars dropped among the grasses.

Not yours, dear hands, the subtle power
Of waking strings to sweetest rapture
Not yours the painter's magic dower
That can the airy fancy capture;
And yet you rule with potent sway,
And hearts obey your lightest gesture,
And eyes beam love, the while you stray
O'er widow's cap or baby's vesture.

God, for thy labor, gives repose,
And heaven holds rest for hands grown weary.
After the shadows and the snows,
After the death-swoon, long and dreary,
Angels shall kiss you red to white,
And every scar from every finger;
When daisies hide you from our sight,
Still will your sweetness round us linger.

—Leonard Gattetley.

How Angelina Seraphina Was Honored

Mollie and Trottie were in such a state of mind! Here was the carriage almost at the station, and the awful discovery had just been made that Angelina Seraphina had been left at home. Each little girl had thought that the other had put Mistress Angelina in mamma's big trunk, and they thought they could not go for the summer vacation with papa and mamma without taking Angelina Seraphina along, too. Then papa came to the rescue. Alfred could drive back home, after leaving them all at the station, and very likely he could get back with her ladyship before the train left. So away from the station whirled the spirited pair of horses, with the empty, open carriage, and after it gazed anxiously two very troubled little faces. At home Norah had found the dolly almost as soon as the family had driven away, and when she saw Alfred driving furiously up the street she knew what he was after. She met him at the curbstone with Angelina Seraphina, who was placed in state upon the rear cushion, with the dark broadcloth carriage robe drawn up carefully over her knees. And thus she went dashing down the street, with Norah laughing upon the doorstep. That morning the whole city had turned out to see the big procession that was to escort the governor of the state, who was passing through the city. Alfred had avoided the crowd on his first trip, but the time was short now, and so he resolved to take the chance of getting safely through the crowd by a short cut. Alas! When almost in sight of the station, he came down a side street full upon the procession that was passing along the main thoroughfare, the sides of which were lined with people hurrying along to keep up with the carriages. The chief marshal, his aids, and two splendid brass bands had just passed, when Alfred saw a bit of an opening between the last of the musicians and the prancing horses that drew the governor-elect. Time was precious. Mollie and Trottie must not be disappointed; so Alfred resolved to slip through the procession. Half-way through, the crowd surged up in front of him and blocked the way, and before Alfred knew how it all came about he was driving the first carriage in the big procession, and Angelina Seraphina was in the place of honor! The station was just ahead, and the crowds on either side became denser and denser, and so it was that this young lady's carriage simply had to head the procession all the rest of the way! You should have seen Mollie's and Trottie's eyes when they saw their beloved Angelina being thus escorted to the train! There were broad smiles on the faces of hundreds who were looking on, and even the governor-elect had to smile, although he, poor man, was being deprived of the honors of the occasion! Angelina, I am pleased to say, bore herself in a very dignified manner; but Alfred's face—well, it would have been quite as red as a beet, I am sure, had not Mother Nature already made it as black as ebony!—Webb Donnell.

What Made the Difference.

The new boy was sitting on a big stone post at the foot of his driveway, when Peter drove the cows to pasture.

"Hallo!" said the new boy, pleasantly. "Come fishin', will you?"

"Can't," drawled Peter. "I've got to work! Wish I was you," he said, enviously, 'an' didn't have nothin' to do but go fishin', an' sit on a post an' let my feet hang down!"

The new boy laughed. "We have cows," he said, shortly; "a whole dozen of them!"

"But you don't have to drive them to pasture," declared Peter.

"Don't I?" said the new boy. "I take them away down to Mr. Lane's pasture every morning 'fore breakfast!"

Peter eyed him curiously from top to toe. "Well, you're a queer one," he said. "But perhaps if I only had the cows to drive, I'd get up early, too!"

The new boy laughed again. "We've got hens," he said, quickly, "an' chickens an' pigs an' horses, same as you have! I guess what makes the difference 'tween you an' me is 'cause you don't do your work by my grandma's rule."

"Seeing I never heard of it, I guess I don't," replied Peter, with a grin. "Supposing you tell it to a feller!"

"I 'most know that you've heard it," said the new boy, "only you've forgotten. It's 'work while you work,' an' 'play while you play!' An' I tell you it's a fine one!"

"Ho! ho! ho!" laughed Peter. "That's a dandy rule, isn't it? Maybe it does for you, but when a feller has to work all the time, same as I do, why then it's only 'work while you work' an' no time to play while you play,' at all!"

"Not 'zactly!" answered Peter.

"An' you're not playing, are you?" he inquired.

"No," said Peter, "I ain't."

"Then you're doing nothing," declared the new boy.

"Same as you be," said Peter, crossly. He knew that he was lazy, but he didn't enjoy being told about it, one single bit.

The new boy jumped down from the post in a hurry. "You're right," he said, with a laugh. "Supposing you let me drive your cows while you run home an' do the rest of your work. An' supposing you an' I go into partnership, an' take my grandma's rule for our motto. An' then every morning after we get our chores done, supposing we go fishin'!"

Peter looked at him in surprise, and then he said earnestly, "Shake on it!"

And, oh dear me, weren't those fishes sorry!

MARGARET DANE.

Lived on the Sea All Their Lives.

A little blue-eyed baby girl was crawling on the cabin deck under an awning aboard the iron bark Star of the East as that vessel lay moored at a pier in New York. Her mother, the wife of Captain George Norman Rogers, who commands the bark, was with her child, whom they had named Star Cameron Rogers. Beside the baby was her sister Margaret, who is 2 years and 6 months old. Little Star was born aboard the bark while the vessel was humming along near the island of Tristan de Chuna, in the South Atlantic, on November 11, 1898. There was never a healthier child than Star. Since she was born she had been aboard the bark nearly all the time, with the exception of a short stay ashore at Auckland, New Zealand, where the child was introduced to her grandmother. When a reporter went aboard, Star had just finished her afternoon sleep, and after her mother had put a white silk dress on the baby she was held up to be seen. She has a rosy complexion and a bright smile, and is the picture of health. She has traveled more than 16,000 miles since she was born, and has been around Cape Horn. Star never slept in a bed. When she was much smaller than she is now her mother took her into her bunk at night. But on the voyage home the child slept in a canvas hammock. The more the bark rocked and rolled the better the baby seemed to like it. The sailors of the bark are proud of little Star, and say she is their mascot. Margaret can walk and talk. She is a regular little sailor. She has been around the Horn twice, and has made a voyage around the world. Margaret is different from "shore" babies. She does not care for toys. She has some blocks and other little things with which to play, but she likes best of all to stand at the wheel. Margaret also sleeps in a hammock. It is only during rough weather that her mother takes her into her own bunk. Margaret celebrated the Fourth of July by eating her first orange and her first dish of strawberries. She did not know whether she liked the fruit or not.

The Flour and the Ring.

After the goodies have been eaten, all the French crackers pulled with a snap and the boy and girl guests at a birthday party are growing tired of new fashioned instruments, here's something to play—an old-fashioned game called "the flour and the ring." This is the way to do it. Somebody must mold in a coffee cup a mound of flour. It only takes a little practice to turn the shape out perfectly upon a plate. When the mound is formed, drop into the center of it some little gift—a ring, a pretty pin or any small article a boy or girl would fancy. Whoever starts the game must take a knife and cut through the mound to the plate. Each one in the circle repeats this until the lucky boy or girl comes across the hidden prize, when he or she must pick it out with the teeth. The floury nose, cheeks and chin of the prize winner look enough like a clown's after this last proceeding to amuse a whole roomful of merry children.—New York Herald.

Worked Two Ways.

Little Jack had two apples, which he had saved from desert. There were visitors in the room, and one of the gentlemen thought it would be a good opportunity to give Jack a lesson in manners. So he called the boy and said: "I see you have two apples, Jacky. Won't you give me one?" Jack hesitated, looked rather ruefully at his prizes, and finally offered the smaller one. This was what the gentleman had expected, and he proceeded to expatiate upon it, ending with: "Now, Jack, whenever you have anything to give away, you should always keep the poorest for yourself." This might be good manners, but it didn't harmonize with Jack's desires. So he ruminated over it a while, and then stuck out the other fist. "Take the other one, too," he said generously. The gentleman was congratulating himself on his success, when Jack stunned him by saying: "Now, won't you please give me one?"

Victoria Cleaned Windows.

Here is a funny little story about the Princess Victoria. One day her mother took her to visit Queen Adelaide. The duchess left the little one alone with the queen for some time, and the latter, to make the princess feel at home, said: "Now, my dear, you have an hour to spend with me, and you shall do exactly as you like."

"Exactly as I like?" queried the little princess in glee.

"Yes," answered the queen, little thinking what was to follow.

"Then, dear Aunt Adelaide," said the child, "may I be allowed to clean the windows?"

Queen Adelaide was somewhat startled, but the little one had her way, setting to work with sleeves carefully rolled up and an apron tied around her waist.

There are two ways of attaining an important end—force and perseverence. Force falls to the lot only of the privileged few but austere and sustained perseverance can be practiced by the most insignificant. Its silent power grows irresistible with time.

Patience of R. L. Stevenson.

An admirable idea of the patience and persistency of Robert Louis Stevenson is given in his own statement of the way in which he reread books of whose worth he was convinced, but which he freely admitted he could not fully appreciate on a first reading. In the current number of Literature, a letter is quoted, written by Stevenson to W. E. Henley, after a third reading of George Meredith's novel, "The Egoist." "When I shall have read it the sixth or seventh time," he says, "I begin to see I shall know about it." Later, the author of "Treasure Island" became one of Meredith's most enthusiastic admirers.—Chicago Times-Herald.

He Confesses.

"Doctor, how did you find your patients when your vacation was ended?"

"Then why were you in such a hurry to get back?"

Reform Press Bureau.
ST. PAUL, Aug. 14, 1899.

The opposition to imperialism in all parts of the country has been emphasized by numerous events of the past week. First, perhaps, is the apparent determination of the administration to go ahead with its policy of conquest, shown in the preparations for a still larger increase of the armed forces, as fast as the new secretary of war is able to procure them. This, however is likely to be slow, judging from the fact that a full month has not yet completed the 10,000, leading to the belief that a draft may be necessary before we are done with the case. The continued uncompromising attitude of Mr. Bryan is crystalizing the opposition movement, and his article in the last New York Independent has been another effective agent. This is characterized as his "Gunpowder Gospel," and all the organized anti-imperialists are giving it a wide circulation. The pith of that article is the following:

"It is not sufficient to say that the forcible annexation of the Philippine Islands is a benevolent undertaking entered upon for the good of the Filipinos. Lincoln pointed out that this has always been the argument of kings. To use his words: 'They always bestrode the necks of the people, not that they wanted to do it, but because the people were better off for being ridden.' It is surprising that any believer in self-government should favor forcible annexation, but still more surprising that any one who believes in the Christian religion should favor the substitution of force for reason in the extension of our notion's influence.

"If we adopt the gunpowder gospel in the Philippines, how long will it be before that principle will be transplanted in American soil?

"So long as our arguments are addressed to the reason and the heart our progress is sure. But can we, without danger to Christianity, resort to the ancient plan of injecting religion into the body through bullet holes?"

That the organized anti-imperialists are more than likely to be found supporting Mr. Bryan's election next year is daily more probable although they are so largely former Republicans. In private letters received by the writer from Secretary Winslow of the Boston and Washington organizations, he writes:

"In his article in The Independent Mr. Bryan seems to stand on our platform with both feet. Mr. Bryan seems to be growing stronger and stronger on anti-imperialism."

The recent upheaval in the grain department has brought to light numerous stories of stealing and fraud in the department, which, while not as yet in shape to be officially investigated, are still most delightfully sweet morsels of Republican rascality. One thing is certain, that in the honest administration of Inspector Reishus there will be an end to open swindles by the usual routes of false weights, excessive dockage, unemptied cars, false bottoms to elevator hoppers and the like. See if there is not.

On the day Claasen is supposed to have won his victory we were accosted by a friend near the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce, who asked if we would like to see some of the state inspection officials and how they were rejoicing over Claasen's triumph. We entered a saloon near the Chamber, and in a rear apartment five men were in an extremely hilarious condition. Four of them were inspectors of the "skilled" variety. The friend informed us that they spent the remainder of the day in a drunken rejoicing, and the night somewhere else—all at the expense of the state grain department, and yet an attempt to change such state officials is to inject too much politics into the department. Bah!

And a friend recalls the celebrated Holcomb case of a few years ago, in which Holcomb, an employe of the Union, one of the Pillsbury system of elevators, was indicted and placed on trial for stealing 70,000 bushels of wheat. The proof was conclusive, it being shown when shipments were made and where the grain was sold. When it came to the defense, Holcomb's counsel demanded an inspection of the books to show whether from the books there had actually been any grain missing from the elevator. Such an examination showed that instead of any grain being missing, the 70,000 bushels were there and 20,000 bushels more, so that Holcomb's stealing of 70,000 was more than offset by the amount the elevator was ahead, through weights and other processes, best known to the elevator, through which the farmer had been mulcted. Holcomb went scot free. Oh, no, there has never been anything wrong with the Minnesota grain and elevator system!

The action of the soldiers' home board, in continuing the policy of leaving the state boards still in Republican ring control that has scandalized the whole state, has caused a perfect storm of protest from the people. It is, as it were, the last straw to break the camel's back.

It has been the same from the beginning of the Lind administration—the prison boards, the grain department, the reformatory board and all the rest—always some so-called "Democratic" member has been found to act with the old Republican ring and at the last moment thwart the demands of the people and the wishes of Governor Lind. In the soldiers' home case the commandant, McMillen remains, and Secretary Beebe, both of whom have held office, under various degrees of criticism, more or less personal in character, for so many years that both have grown fossilized. There has been, and is now, the loudest demand for a change, but the Republican trustees, securing the hold-over "Democratic" member, Pearshall, to act with them, reappoints the fossils. The deal by which it was accomplished was to give Pearshall the quartermastership for a personal friend. The adjutant was changed and the appointment given to Frank J. Mead, who distinguished himself in the recent campaign by organizing the Hennepin county old soldiers for Eastis, and in conducting the Eastis press bureau for the state Republican committee. Thus, the soldiers' home management remains Republican, with all the stench that has followed it for years, and yet the Republicans, laughing in their sleeves, prate of Governor Lind's attempt to introduce politics. The soldiers' home, as managed for years, has been nothing but a Republican machine, and an ill smelling one at that.

No politics. Indeed. Not only the rankest of politics has prevailed in each and every board or department, but each attempt of Governor Lind to reform them, while futile, makes clearer the deals and schemes by which Republican ring rule is continued, and nepotism is practiced. The business is done by controlling the so-called "Democratic" members under former Republican appointment. In the state prison board this has prevented a successor to Wolfer, the odium of which has wrongfully fallen upon Governor Lind's head. In the reformatory board it retains Houlton and the rest. In the grain department, General Becker being such "Democratic" member, Judge Mills and he manage so as to retain their personal relatives, the nepotism in whose cases exceeds the sum of $10,000, that relatives and the two members draw from the state annually. And so on to the end of the chapter. There is a rising tide of public sentiment which bids fair not to be satisfied until there is a complete exposure of the influences prevailing in the various boards, the result of which would certainly be a complete sweep if there is power in the executive to accomplish it. It is a safe statement that there is not a board or department where Republican politics does not prevail, in the manner stated, and where nepotism is not practiced to a degree amounting to public scandal.

The "Beckerian flank" is Editor Lamphere's term to designate the act by which supposed "Democrats" on the various boards, act with the Republican members in preventing reforms of the boards or departments. The term is apt. Up to date the Beckerian flankers, aside from General Becker himself, are B. F. Nelson of the prison board, Captain O. C. Merriam of the reformatory board, and Pearshall of the soldiers' home board. Distinguished beneficiaries of the said Beckerian flank, besides the $7,000 a year drawn by General Becker and relatives, are Warden Wolfer, Republican; Tams Bixby's brother, Republican; Superintendent Houlton and relatives, Republicans.

At last the Thirteenth is on the briny deep, en route home. A glad welcome for our brave sons, and tears for those who will not hear the joyous greetings—the sadder that they have fallen in so wicked and so needless a war.

Elevator King Peavy, discrediting Governor Lind's appointees on the new boards of appeal, declares that he has no knowledge of Greenleaf, the governor's Republican appointee on the board, or of Malonquist, another appointee. Well, alongside of the elevator king, can be found a score who can testify to Mr. Greenleaf's ability. For over 20 years he has been a dealer in wheat, a close and shrewd observer of happenings on 'change, at times a practical miller, an elevator man, and an all round, good judge of grain. In the opinion of those competent to judge he is regarded as ideally fitted for the appeal board, as any man whom the governor could have named.

As to Mr. Malonquist, does Mr. Peavy recall the circumstance of opening an elevator, some years ago, at Winthrop, in competition with a Mr. Malonquist, whose securing five bushels of grain from farmers, to one by Peavy, soon caused the latter to close up? Well, this is the same gentleman, if we are not mistaken. To know him Mr. Peavy has but to connect him with the Winthrop grain buyer of a few years ago. Mr. Peavy, as the only Minneapolis grain man to defend the Claasen administration, will probably be very grateful for assisting him to discover that his acquaintance with Governor Lind's board of appeals is not as blank as he at first supposed.

Mayor Gray has tackled the coal combine with the same courage that he vetoed the fast train ordinance, and been sustained by the Minneapolis city council. The coal barons tried on the mayor the same old scheme with which John Goodnow feathered his nest, before called higher in the Republican service. If successful, the coal combine would have divided a nice sum, and the success of their scheme would have stimulated them to bigger raises on the general public. Mayor Gray is continually gaining in public confidence and esteem.

MAY DROP THE CASE

PROSECUTION AGAINST DREYFUS TO BE WITHDRAWN.

Rumor That the Government Has Ordered the Arrest of Mercier and That Orders Will Be Issued to Withdraw the Case Against Dreyfus—Documents All Forgeries—Three Enemies of Dreyfus Occupy the Stand, Mainly Reiterating Evidence Previously Given by Them Against Dreyfus.

London, Aug. 21.—The Paris correspondent of the Sunday Special says; "The government, I understand, has decided to arrest Gen. Mercier. It is rumored that orders will be given to withdraw the case against Dreyfus, it having proved that the documents relied upon to establish his guilt, are forgeries."

Rennes, Aug. 21.—The stage was occupied Saturday successively by three enemies of Dreyfus—Maj. Cuignet, Gen. De Boisdeffre and Gen. Gonz—who, from 6:30 until 11 a. m., mainly devoted themselves to reiterating what they had previously said in evidence against the prisoner, who followed them with characteristic composure, but when the moment came for him to reply the prisoner delivered one of those brief utterances of indignation which have had such a powerful effect upon his hearers.

The telegram of the Delats as to the authenticity of a certain letter sent by Col. Schneider, Austrian military attache, to the Figaro, was introduced by Maj. Cuignet, who was very emphatic in his testimony. He did not show to great advantage in the cross-examination. Maj. Cuignet evidently committed an indiscretion in dragging in Col. Schneider's name, which caused a sensation in court. The judges began to lean their heads together and look serious. Then Maj. Carriere, the government expert, rose, and, with his usual stormy gestures and careful avoiding of Col. Schneider's name, made a few remarks, refusing in behalf of the government, to accept the responsibility of Maj. Cuignet's indiscretion, the fact being that the government has begun to get apprehensive of trouble if the foreign attache's name continues to be handled about the court, as has frequently occurred since the opening of the trial. When M. Demange took up the major's cross-examination, not a very brilliant performance in itself, Maj. Cuignet immediately showed uneasiness, which was accentuated when the defense asked a pointed question, especially where counsel threshed out the contradictions with Cuignet's evidence before the court of cassation. Dreyfus, too, was effective, when he rose and protested against Cuignet's bitter attack. During his deposition Maj. Cuignet referred to the "extraordinary dossier," which it is doubted, however, the government will consent to produce. Another indiscreet statement of the witness was that the minister of war had in his possession the pick of these documents, and Cuignet said: "I think the court ought to see the rest of these documents. I think that Dreyfus is part of a big matter and that there was not only one spy. The court would see that the military attaches do nothing but spying."

Gen. De Bosdeffre followed. He spoke in a blunt manner and in somewhat blunt tones, but with a certain air of sincerity, which had its effect on the judges. The cross-examination was not very productive. M. Demange, however, scored one point. When Gen De Boisdeffre said that he knew Col. Picquart had relations with the Dreyfus family in 1896, counsel questioned him with the result that the general was obliged to admit he had no proof of the accuracy of his statements, but relied on impressions.

Gen. Gonz gave his evidence in a quiet tone. His most interesting remark was with reference to the letter of Col. Schneider, whom, however, he was careful not to name. But the whole telegram of the Figaro he virtually declared to be a lie, as he said: "We have in our bureau many letters enabling us to affirm the authenticity of the letter."

The most interesting portion of the proceedings was the last half-hour, when Gonz, Picquart, Billot and Dreyfus were on their feet in a series of confrontations—a move which had dramatic elements and which produced much emotion in court and occasioned from Dreyfus unexpected outbursts of pent-up feeling.

WILL BE CONDEMNED.

So Says Gen. Mercier—Foreign Papers Have Been Misled.

Rennes, Aug. 21.—Gen. Mercier, who was minister of war when Capt. Dreyfus was condemned, and who, in the present trial, is the virtual prosecutor, was called upon by the correspondent of the Associated Press, who invited him to make a statement of the position of the anti-Dreyfusards. Though unable to receive the correspondent in person, Gen. Mercier sent his oldest son to convey the following expression of his views:

"Gen. Mercier considers it useless to attempt to convert foreign opinion regarding the Dreyfus case, in which, moreover, foreigners have no right to intervene. Foreign peoples have been misled by the press, which is violently Dreyfusard, for the very good reason that the majority of the foreign newspapers have been bribed by the Jews. Gen. Mercier considers anything he might say concerning his position, which is that of a majority of the French people, useless. The best answer to the Dreyfusard statements abroad will be condemnation of Dreyfus. This condemnation is only a matter of ten days or a fortnight, for condemned, Dreyfus certainly will be. Foreigners will then see that their journals have deceived them, for they will recognize that the mass of the French nation, who will receive the news of the conviction of Dreyfus as joyful tidings, is not composed of officials, and that the majority of French applaud the condemnation, it will be because it is just and merited."

WIND AND RAIN STORM

Causes Considerable Damage at Decorah, Iowa.

Decorah, Iowa, Aug. 21.—Between 1 and 2 o'clock yesterday morning a severe wind and rain storm visited this section and did much damage. The blew trees down and numerous sheds and outbuildings were blown over. A section of Steyer's opera house was lifted off and deposited in the street half a block away, tearing down a number of telephone wires as it descended. In the Steyer block were also the new lodge rooms of the Elks and club rooms of the German Singing society. These were damaged considerably by water running in where the roof was blown off. The cornice of the west side of the Lutheran publishing house was blown over onto the roof of the building. Pollit & Huff's ice house was unroofed and badly twisted. A new house being erected by C. S. Boyce was twisted and about a hundred lights of glass in Simond's greenhouse were blown in. On the 11th inst. the latter suffered a loss of over 400 lights from hail. Reports from the country are meager, but indicate that a great many wind mills and stacks of hay and grain have been blown over.

ARRESTED BY COL. FROST.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Aug. 21.—Senator Pettigrew is in receipt of the following cablegram, dated Nagasaki, Japan, from Dr. R. C. Warne, major and surgeon of the First regiment, South Dakota volunteers:

"Arrested by Frost; published letter."

This is the culmination of charges made by Warne against Col. Alfred S. Frost, of the South Dakota regiment, in a letter published here last month in which Warne referred to his colonel as a low, contemptible cur, looking only to his own interests; that he would gladly sacrifice every man in his regiment for a few dollars in his pocket or a little glory for himself, and that he has no interest in the men except to use them for his own selfish advancement. Whether Col. Frost and Dr. Warne will continue with the regiment to San Francisco or return to Manila is not indicated by the cablegram. In any event it appears that Warne will be court-martialed.

TURMOIL IN PARIS

WILD SCENES RECALLING ASPECTS OF THE COMMUNE.

Disturbances in Which the Police and Republican Guards Have Desperate Conflicts With the Anarchists—Windows of Religious Edifices Smashed by the Mob—Interior of the Church of St. Joseph Completely Wrecked by the Anarchists — Three Hundred and Eighty Persons Were Injured Including Fifty-nine Policemen.

Paris, Aug. 21.—Paris was yesterday the scene of most serious disturbances, recalling some aspects of the commune. In response to an appeal of the Journals Le Peuple and La Petite Republique, groups of anarchists and socialists gathered about 3 o'clock in the afternoon in Place de la Republique. The police had taken precautions and there seemed no danger of disorders.

Sebastian Faure and Faberot, well known revolutionary anarchists, were the ringleaders. Faure, standing on the pedestal of the statue which rises in the center of the Place de la Republique, addressed the crowd. Among other things he said that the anarchists should be masters of the streets. The police then interfered and dislodged Faure and Faberot, making three arrests. The crowd at this point dispersed, but a column of demonstrators, headed by Faure and Henri d'Horr, made for the Place de Nation. The police broke through the column and a struggle for the mastery followed. Shots were fired and M. Goullier, commissary of police, was twice stabbed with a knife. This threw the police into momentary confusion. The mob reassembled and ran toward the Place de Nation. The police, reinforced by a squad that had been held in reserve, made another attempt to stem the current and fresh fierce fighting occurred, three constables being wounded. Faure and d'Horr jumped into a passing street car that was going to the Place de la Republique, and the car driver on arriving there gave a signal to the police, who immediately arrested them both, together with two other anarchists. In the meantime the anarchist mob retraced its steps to the Place de la Republique, smashing the windows of religious edifices on the way. Suddenly, either at the word of command or in obedience to impulse, the column made a loop and curved toward the Church of St. Ambroise, where the rioters smashed the windows. Proceeding thence toward the Faubourg du Temple, they formed up into a compact body. Hatchets were suddenly produced, with long knives stolen from the counters of shops, and a concerted rush was made upon the church of St. Joseph. According to one account the wild hordes burst into the church and the interior soon became a scene of desolation and pillage. Images were smashed, pictures were rent, candlestick ornaments and hosts from the high altar were thrown down and trampled under foot. Church furniture and images were carried outside and set on fire. Meanwhile the sacristan, who had been captured by the anarchists, escaped and called the police and republican guards, who promptly arrived with many constables. They were compelled to fall back in order to form up in lines of defense, as the anarchists attacked them fearfully with knives. At length the officers began to gain the mastery. A score of anarchists took refuge in an adjacent house. Others intrenched themselves in the belfry and fearlessly defended themselves by showering missiles on the guards, but finally these were dislodged. Twenty anarchists were arrested, taken to the police station, searched and found to be carrying revolvers, loaded sticks and knives. When the police cleared the church the anarchists had just set fire to the pulpit. The interior of the edifice was a complete wreck.

Up to 1 a. m. fifty-six persons have been reported injured, including several policemen. No one, so far as known was injured by firearms. Nearly all were hurt by being crushed or trodden under foot. Quiet has now been restored.

Paris, Aug. 21, 2 a. m.—Besides St. Joseph's church two cafes were wrecked. At a late hour 2,000 people were on the Boulevarde de Magenta, in the vicinity of Rue de Chabrol. They were kept constantly moving by the police, who made a remarkable display of force. A lamentable feature of the affair is that it will be regarded as a pro-Dreyfus demonstration and react greatly to the detriment of the chances of acquittal. It is much to be feared that the demonstrations were due to the weakness the government has displayed toward the Dreyfus affair. The government's desire to avoid trouble has been misinterpreted by the worse element.

Paris, Aug. 21, 1 a. m.—The prefecture of police gives the following statistics of yesterday's riots: Three hundred and eighty persons were injured; 200 were taken to the hospitals; fifty-nine police agents were wounded, besides Commissioners Goullier and Ladmulne. One hundred and fifty persons were arrested, of whom eighty are detained in custody.

How to Open a New Book.

Hold the book with its back on a smooth or covered table; let the front board down, then the other, holding the leaves in one hand while you open a few leaves at the back, then a few at the front, and so go on, alternately opening back and front, gently pressing open the sections till you reach the center of the volume. Do this two or three times and you will obtain the best results. Open the volume violently or carelessly in any one place and you will likely break the back and cause a start in the leaves. Never force the back. If it does not yield to gentle opening rely upon it the back is too tightly or strongly lined.

A connoisseur many years ago, an excellent customer of mine, who thought he knew perfectly how to handle books, came into my office when I had an expensive binding just brought from the bindery ready to be sent home. He, before my eyes, took hold of the volume, and tightly holding the leaves in each hand, instead of allowing them free play, violently opened it in the center and exclaimed, "How beautifully your bindings open!" I almost fainted. He had broken the back of the volume, and it had to be rebound.—"Modern Bookbinding Practically Considered," by William Matthews.

Got the Wrong Woman.

A pastime which obtains among the farm classes of Korea, known as the "packing off of widows," consists of a raid by some disconsolate widower and his friends on some village known to contain a young widow, the forcible abduction of the lady in question and her marriage to the widower. An instance of this kind has recently come to our notice. A widower living in one of the villages of Kungwha with 11 friends went to a hamlet close to the walls of Kangwha city where a widow lived and seized and carried off, after somewhat of a battle, a young lady. It so happened, however, that they had mistaken the house and unfortunately got hold of the wrong lady. Early the next morning an indignant posse came in pursuit, but the men who had committed the dastardly deed succeeded in eluding them. The young lady, however, was rescued, and after the house of the widower and its contents had been completely demolished she was escorted home in triumph by her husband and his friends.—Kobe Chronicle.

Hook Swinging in Bengal.

The people of Gangulia, in Bengal, have a barbarous practice called hook swinging. They deck themselves out with garlands, and then assemble together to undergo the most horrible torture. A wire about a quarter of an inch in diameter and seven feet long is pierced through the tongue, and then the wretched being will dance for over half an hour with the wire still hanging through the tongue.

Some of them form themselves into a row and are then sewed together by a wire needle threaded with cord. They are sewed by the arms and look like herrings on a wire when ready for the hook.

It is thought that the victims are drugged considerably beforehand, owing to the sullen, dazed expression they wear throughout, but sometimes one or two faint and are with great difficulty brought round again.

When Home Is Sweet.

Fewer wives would sit lonesomely at home while their husbands roam elsewhere in search of entertainment if more wives realized that home should be something besides a clean place to eat and sleep in. Men "hate" women's tea parties and large show functions, but they like dinner and supper parties. Many families refrain from entertaining because they cannot do so on an expensive scale. It is, however, possible to give small dinners and suppers that are both enjoyable and inexpensive. Ask people who either do or will like each other, and if you wish the women to have a good time have just as many men guests as women guests. If the men are to have a good time, make sure that some of the women are pretty and flattering. Men like to be flattered. Oh, yes, they do.—Gentlewoman.

Boiled Rice.

Thomas Murray, the noted chef, says many cooks do not know how to do so simple a thing as to boil rice properly. Each grain of rice, he says, should be distinct, whole, but at the same time tender. To accomplish this, a small quantity of rice should be boiled in a large pot nearly filled with water. Put it into cold water and a little salt and boil rapidly for 20 or 30 minutes. Test the grains occasionally, and when a slight pressure between the thumb and forefinger will crush them they are done. If allowed to boil till the grains burst or boiled in a small quantity of water, the grains will stick together. When done, drain off the water and set the rice on the range, where it will keep warm.—Exchange.

Hay Crops on Ice.

Farmers who live in the vicinity of Muskego lake, in southeastern Wisconsin, derive a profitable income from the lake each winter by harvesting hay on the ice. The shallowness of the water in the lake bed causes the grass growing on the bottom to project considerably above the surface, and when the ice forms the hay can be cut with great ease, though it cannot be got at the rest of the year on account of the boggy nature of the lake bottom.

While the population of France has increased only 10 per cent in the last 50 years, the number of state officials, according to M. Turquan, shows an increase of 121 per cent.

MEXICAN ASSASSINS.

THE MURDEROUS REVOLT IN THE TAOS VALLEY.

Out of the Seventeen Americans Who Were Trapped by the Mexicans Only One Escaped Death Either by Fire or Bullet.

John Albert, who ended his days at Walsenburg, Colo., had exciting adventures in every section west of the Mississippi. He saw two wars and took an active share in the Indian uprisings, yet when on his deathbed he was asked to dictate to a reporter the scene he considered most exciting in his life he chose a theme with which few if any of his countrymen are acquainted.

The revolt in the Taos valley, if ever it came to the ears of the authorities, was never universally disseminated. It appears on no page of common history, and, although for horror it compares favorably with the massacre at the Alamo, no novelist has seen fit to make it a central theme.

The section now known as New Mexico was formally taken possession of by the Americans in the spring of 1846. General Kearny was at that time in command of the invading forces. He made his headquarters at Santa Fe and remained in active superintendence for more than a year. At the expiration of that period the growing need of troops on the Pacific coast led to his withdrawal to Lower California. He left two regiments with a military governor in charge. Charles Bent, with a handful of men, was left to guard Santa Fe. The Mexican governor, General Armijo, had fled on the advance of the hated Yankees. His people, no matter what their secret thoughts might be, had been the most peaceable of subjects, yet the body of the army had not been gone two months before the Americans saw that trouble was imminent.

The only man who escaped has told the story more graphically than any pen can portray it. Arroyo Honda was a town of some 1,200 inhabitants, mostly Mexicans and Pueblo Indians. It lay in the Santa Fe district, but too far away for aid to come. The total of Americans in the place was 17, most of whom were rough trappers and mountaineers. The entire town turned out to an impromptu mass meeting on the plaza. It was decided to revolt and return to the Mexican authority. Well knowing that the band of Yankees, although comparatively insignificant in numbers, would resist such a step to the last, it was determined to shoot all on sight. For this purpose the mob spread through the town. But through some source or other Governor Bent had received a tip. He sent off to Santa Fe for help and then, gathering his little band about him, fled to the only refuge the place afforded.

"The next morning," said John Albert, "they commenced the attack by sending in to us a flag of truce, demanding our arms and ammunition and an unconditional surrender of ourselves. I told the boys they could do as they pleased, but I knew treachery would lead us to certain death in the end, and I was going to die with my gun in my hands and not be murdered like a common dog.

"This was the turning point in the matter, and they all concluded to fight it out as best they could. The men who came to make a treaty with us went back. Their forces were secreted behind the brow of a hill near by us, and one of them, after a manner of the wild Indians in opening a battle, came to the top of the ridge and danced a jig and sang a song of defiance. I knew the time had come, and the sooner the bloody work commenced the sooner we would know our fate.

"We of the mountaineers had collected in a building of considerable size and the only one in the place that was two stories in height. The dancing Indian was within gunshot, and I killed him. Billy Austin stood close behind me, and when another man came to drag the body back Austin shot him. By this time my gun was loaded, and I killed a third man. Then the hurrah commenced, and the air was filled with bullets from the guns in the hands of the men who lay behind the top of the hill. The bullets rattled against the house like hail. There was not a window left in it. Although we saw we were in a trap, we fought on.

"When the sun was setting, the Mexicans made a furious charge and set fire to the house we were in and got under the walls of other buildings. Soon everything was ablaze. The uproar of the yelling fiends on the outside and the excitement of the men on the inner side was deafening. We tried to escape by digging through the floor down into the granary. The house was filling with Mexicans, and everything was in confusion. Fortunately for me in the confusion I escaped from the house. I don't know how many shots were fired at me, but none took effect. I had a bullet in my clothes, one cut off the brim of my hat, and another cut the band, and I lost it from my head. In the excitement I forgot my coat and was out in the world alone without coat, hat or friends and with 140 miles of mountain road between me and safety."

Albert wandered for three days over the mountains without food and exposed to the bitter cold. He reached the American lines at last, the first to bring news of the uprising. Of course, when a regiment arrived on the scene the Taos valley quickly quieted. It was not long after that that the Mexican war broke out. One-half of that nation was transferred to Uncle Sam, in consideration of which old scores were wiped out. No penalties were exacted for the Arroyo Honda massacre, yet it must go down as one of the most horrible in our western annals.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Polly at the Phone.

One West Madison street druggist lost a customer through his fondness for pets. He has a large green parrot, and the cage is hung near the telephone, with the result that Polly has become quite proficient in "telephone talk" and furnishes much amusement to the customers who have the time to stop and listen.

The other day a stylishly dressed young lady came rustling into the store and asked permission to use the phone. The druggist pointed to the rear of the store, and she started in that direction. The store was rather dark, and when she heard some one apparently talking into the receiver she seated herself on a chair to wait.

"Hello central—hello, hello—yes, give me four-double-eight express. Yes, hello; who is that? Oh, yes; what, yes; hello, I say; no, I didn't get that; is that so? Well, goodby; ring off. Hello, central; hello, hello; give me"—and so on and so on through several repetitions.

Then she rose and advanced with a stately air to the clerk and asked if he thought "that person" intended to use the telephone all day.

"Why, that's only the parrot; he"—

But the front door had slammed before he could finish his sentence.—Chicago News.

Wanted to See That Foot.

On the principle that to some persons even old stories are new, this one, of the royal princelings of England, is given in Mr. G. W. E. Russell's recent book, "Collections and Recollections:"

An English gentleman who had a deformed foot was going to visit the queen at Osborne, and before his arrival the queen and Prince Albert debated whether it would be well to warn the Prince of Wales and the princess royal of his physical peculiarity, so as to avoid their making embarrassing remarks, or to leave it to their own good feeling.

The latter course was adopted. Lord —— duly arrived. The foot elicited no remark from the royal children, and the visit passed off with success. Next day the princess royal asked the queen:

"Where is Lord ——?"

"He has gone back to London, dear."

"Oh, what a pity! He had promised to show Bertie and me his foot!"

They had caught him in a quiet spot and made their own terms with the captive.

His Half Way Scheme.

Not long ago a Pittsburg life insurance agent persuaded a Chinaman to take out a policy of $5,000. The latter had no clear idea of the transaction, but understood that on paying the premiums promptly he would be entitled to $5,000 some time. He began bothering the agent for the money after a couple of weeks had passed, and the agent tried to explain to him that he would have to die before he could get it. The Chinaman fell down a cellarway and was badly hurt. His friends tried to attend to him without calling in a doctor. When they did call one in two days later, the doctor was angry. "Why didn't you call me sooner?" he asked. "This man is half dead now."

Next day the injured man's brother was at the insurance office with a claim for $2,500. "You're not entitled to anything on this," said the insurance agent, "until the man is dead."

"Doctol say him half dled," answered the brother. "Why no glet lat half?"

Good Horse Sense.

The Mexican burros ascertain where to dig for water by closely observing the surface of the ground. One observer writes:

"We had found water in an arroya of a sufficient quantity to make coffee, when we saw three burros searching for water. They passed several damp places, examining the ground closely, when the leader halted near us and began to paw a hole in the hot, dry sand. Having dug a hole something over a foot in depth, he backed out and watched it intently. To our surprise it soon began to fill with water. Then he advanced, took a drink and stepped aside for his companions to drink. When they went away, we drank from their well and found the water to be much cooler than any we had found for many a day. There is no witchcraft about Mexican burros, but they have good horse sense."

A Strange Test of Manhood.

The ancient Clan Macleod used to exercise a strange test to prove the manhood of their chieftains. At Dunvegan castle, on the island of Skye, there is preserved the large horn known as "Rory More's Horn." This capacious vessel holds rather more than a bottle and a half of liquor. According to the old custom, every laird of Macleod was obliged on his coming of age to fill this horn with claret and without once laying it down to drain it to the dregs. This was taken as a proof of his manhood, and he was then deemed a worthy successor to the lairds of the past.

Deceitful.

"Men are queer animals," said the pessimist. "They are all more or less deceitful."

"Oh, I don't believe that!" replied the optimist. "I think there are plenty of people who strive to be honest. I know I do, and I don't give myself credit for being any better than the majority of men."

"Then why do you ask me how my health is every time we meet and stand around and look bored if I tell you?"—Chicago Times-Herald.

NEW YORK WORLD.
THRICE-A-WEEK EDITION.
Practically a Daily at the Price of a Weekly.

The striking and important events of the last year have established the overwhelming value of The Thrice-a-Week World to every reader. For an almost nominal sum it has kept its subscribers informed of the progress of all our wars and, moreover, has reported them as promptly and fully as if it were a daily. With our interests still extending throughout the world, with our troops operating in the Philippines and the great Presidential campaign, too, at hand, its value is further increased.

The motto of The Thrice-a-Week World is Improved. It strives each year to be better than it was the year before, and public confidence in it is shown by the fact that it now circulates more than twice as many papers every week as any other newspaper, not a daily, published in America.

We offer this unequaled newspaper and The St. Hilaire Spectator together one year for $1.65.

The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2.50.

Everything for the long distance telephone is completed at this point—their last man coming up the latter part of last week putting in the booth at the new drug store. In a few days we will be able to catch the upper Falls and other neighboring towns.

Secretary of War, Root has issued orders for the 27th, 31st and 34th regiments of volunteer infantry to proceed to San Francisco at once. These regiments will sail for Manila as soon as transports are provided. Sam Bardelson of the upper Falls belongs to the 34th.

"Some folks do say that time is money," remarked the village store keeper, "but I don't take much stock in it."

"You don't eh?" queried the loafer.

"No, I don't," replied the store keeper, "and I wish you'd spend a little more money here and a little less time."

A. M. Hanson was in from his farm in Black River last Saturday and reports as getting along nicely with harvest. He is of the opinion that the heavy rain accompanied by a south wind one day last week did considerable damage to the crop in that vicinity as a lot of scattering grain was down with all heads pointed northward.

The Rustler of Roseau has been moved to Badger a small town sixteen miles west. Roseau is a town with a population of about two hundred souls and less than a year ago supported four weekly papers. The Plaindealer moved its outfit about two months ago to Warroad, a booming town on the banks of the Lake of the Woods.

The wheat harvest off the ridges has begun and a good crop is being reaped. The heads are big and plump and with dry weather and no frost a bumper crop of No. 1 hard is what the farmers will get. Of course there are a few low spots in most every field where the grain was drowned out, but the higher places more than offset that this year.

The North pole has been found, but instead of being a common old stick driven into the ice by a polar bear, it turns out to be one of the Northwestern Telephone company's poles all ready for the wire. The cartoonist of the St. Paul Pioneer Press located it with his active mind and artistic pencil. It is a fact that this telephone company is spreading out like a hired man with his full wages to burn.—Grafton Record.

No one should begrudge what the people of Minnesota and Dakota are doing for the soldier boys, in bringing them home from San Francisco free of charge. The salary of a private is very small and by being mustered out at San Francisco they will be entitled to about $100 each for traveling allowance which the boys will appreciate when they go to their respective homes. The life of a soldier is a hard one at best.

A new kind of a postal order will be issued commencing September 1st. It will be modeled after the system now used in Canada and will be more simple and satisfactory to both the remitter and postmaster than the one now used. Manifold carbon paper will be used, by which means the advice, which is sent to the receiving postmaster, is a duplicate even to the handwriting of the order, and is made out by manifold as an order is made out. The money order will be issued out in a check form, resembling one in working also. It will have special places for the sum both written and in numbers.

Minneapolis badges read, "I have, have you?"

St. Paul announces "This bears him 100 miles towards home."

Fargo is selling them bearing the inscription;

"I say Co. B
Rides free.
What say you?"

Devils Lake puts it "I am an American, what are you?" While Grafton's badges are like those of Minneapolis.

They are all for the same purpose, and its a highly laudable one,—that of bringing home the brave soldier boys of the 13th Minnesota regiment and the North Dakota regiment of volunteers without cost. The badges cost only one dollar a piece.

Unexpected Generosity.

J. P. Johnson was treated to a surprise Thursday by the gentlemanly representative of Ringling Bros. Chas. Andress who after introducing himself presented Mr. Johnson with a draft for $75.00. Unexpected and unsolicited as it was, this gratuitous settlement of any moral obligation that the Ringlings may have been under to him by reason of the unfortunate accident that befell them during the big storm at Crookston, which resulted in the collapse of their tent and the injury of a number of those present, including Mr. Johnson was a most agreeable surprise to him and a very creditable act on the part of the company. This is but one instance of the big hearted generosity of the proprietors of the biggest show on earth, but we understand that there are many others on record and that all who are known to have been injured in the recent accident have at least been paid the amount of their medical and surgical bills.—McIntosh Times.

If the people wonder that Governor Lind could do no more than acknowledge the "ability" of inspector Clausen, let them read, as at least one reason for not possessing "confidence" in him, the following finding of the legislative committee of last winter, composed of a majority of republicans;—

That Committee found.—

"That the grading of wheat has not been uniform. That prior to the month of October the new crop of wheat had not been graded solely on its merits it being the policy of that department to give lower grades than later. That the weighing of grain at terminals is carried on in a loose manner. That it appears that some of the inspectors have been incompetent and careless.

William J. Bryan has the following to say regarding trusts and the enforcement of laws against trusts. These being true the present administration is responsible for many crimes against the people.

"First, the trust is a menace to the welfare of the people of the United States because it creates a monopoly and gives to the few in control of the monopoly almost unlimited power over the lives and happiness of consumers, employes and producers of raw material.

"Second, the president appoints the attorney general, and can, if he desires, secure an attorney-general who will enforce the anti-trust laws.

"Third, the attorney-general can recommend sufficient laws, if present laws are insufficient.

"Fourth, the attorney-general can recommend an amendment to the constitution if the present constitution makes it impossible to extinguish the trusts.

"Fifth, the republican party is powerless to extinguish the trusts, so long as the trusts furnish the money to continue the republican party in power."

Dentist.

—Dr. J. H. Thomas, the Crookston dentist will be at Hotel Markham, St. Hilaire, Aug. 23th and 24th prepared to do all kinds of up to date dental work in all branches. All work warranted. Remember the dates 23th and 24th.

The following from an exchange contains much good, solid sense, and the advice given should be rigidly observed by all who want to see our town grow and prosper.

The commercial spirit of a place is what makes and sustain a town. If farmers expect good market for their produce, they must patronize their home merchants and not purchose their supplies of mail order houses in far-away cities. The quickest way of depressing property, either real estate or personal, in any town, in fact, of killing the town, is for farmers or villagers to do their trading elsewhere.

A town must have the patronage of the surrounding country in order to maintain its prestige and position as a commercial place.

Instead of spending their money at home, where it helps to build up their town and increase the value of their farms, many people send their money to Chicago or elsewhere under the delusion that they can buy the goods they need at wholesale prices or as cheaply at their dealer can, and thus save what they call the middleman's profit. Granted that they do obtain some things cheaper, we doubt if, upon the whole, they do any better by buying their stuff in Chicago than they would in securing it from their home or local merchants.

On the other hand, the same people who buy outside of their home town expect their local merchants to take their butter, eggs, potatoes, wool and other farm products, and pay the highest market prices for them, but if they withhold their patronage from their local merchants they cannot reasonably expect that their home dealers will do as well by them as they otherwise would. The local merchants cannot live without local patronage. They cannot keep up their stock and give credit to the farmers, and pay their running expenses, unless they have the trade of the people in the towns in which they live and do business.

Merchants and farmers should patronize each other, should help each other, should feel a common interest in the weal of their town, if they expect to live in a prosperous community, have their town grow, and their farm and village property increase in value.

Care of Horses' Shoulders.

The collar should fit snugly against the neck except at the bottom between the collar and throat, where there should be a small space so that he can breath with ease. When the horse is at work watch the collar and see if it slips back and forth, and if so, tighten up the hames at top and bottom (generally more at the bottom) till it does not. It should not be tightened too tight but so that a finger can be slipped in all along.

Whenever a collar slips back and forth on a horses shoulder it soon rubs a sore. The mane where the collar rests should be cut off and the rest should be braided and tied in such a manner as to prevent it from getting in under the collar. If this is done properly it will only have to be done once a week and adds greatly to his comfort. After work wash the shoulder with cool water to move all dirt and sweat which has accumulated, dry off and apply one part carbolic acid mixed with six parts sweet oil. This is also good for sores and barb wire cuts.—Albert Eggers, Gettysburg, S. D., in Dakota Farmer.

We sometimes put on a long face and look as though we hadn't a friend in the world, just because someone has found fault with something they saw in our paper. But why feel so badly over "spilled milk?" The merchant don't please all his customers; the postmaster, too, is kicked and cursed because he made mistakes; the station agent is frequently backed up in the corner by some old woman and given to understand this and that and numerous other things; the barber is censored for his dull razor; the baker is accused of fraud, some people declare he puts too much wind in his bread; the butcher is forever reminded of his tough meat; the grocer charges poor accounts to good customers so as to "even up" and even the preacher finds it hard work to please all his congregation with his best sermon. The only good person is the one who is doing the kicking.—Exchange.

TAMING THE SHREW.

"I haven't the least fear," Major Delaford.

"Then you're a man of unbounded courage," retorted his friend, Ulysses Crinklethorpe. "For—may I venture to be frank?"

"Oh, certainly! By all means."

"Well, then, they do say that Mrs. Flashington drove her first husband into his grave by ungovernable temper."

"I've heard that before," said Maj. Delaford, puffing complacently away at his cigar.

"But, of course," with a sarcastic laugh, "you don't believe it?"

"Excuse me," said Maj. Deleford, severely, "I do believe it. I have seen, now and then, an expression in Justina's eyes which fully carries out any theory of that nature."

"And yet you are going to marry her?"

"And yet I am going to marry her."

"Felix Delaford, are you crazy?"

"Not that I am aware of."

"Will you be honest with me?"

"To be sure," nodded the major.

"Then, why do you marry Mrs. Flashington?"

"Well, from a variety of reasons. One is that I like her. She's a pretty little gypsy, with a skin like white velvet, and delicious long lashes to her eyes!"

"Proceed."

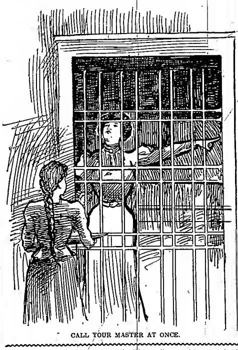
"A second is—mind, now, I never did pretend to be one of the disinterested lovers one reads about in dime novels—that the dear, departed Flashington left her remarkably well off. And I have more merit than money."

"I think you will repent it," said Mr. Crinklethorpe, "for, by all accounts, the black-eyed divinity is neither more nor less than a virago."

"There are very few actions in this world that one doesn't repent, in a greater or less degree," said Maj. Delaford, sententiously, "but, averaging things, I'm willing to risk it."

And Maj. Delaford was married the next week to Mrs. Flashington.

It was not long, as Mr. Crinklethrape had foretold, before the claw began to peep from under Mrs. Flashington Delaford's velvet sheath.



CALL YOUR MASTER AT ONCE.

"Felix," said she one day, "I don't like this location."

"Don't you, my dear?" said Maj. Delaford. "I've lived here two-and-thirty years and always found it very pleasant."

"I don't like it," said Mrs. Delaford. "I prefer a house nearer the park."

Maj. Delaford went on reading.

"Felix, I say?" The bride's voice was raised a degree or so higher—the dangerous sparkle had come into her eyes.

"Yes, Justy."

"I mean to move uptown."

"Do you?"

"And at once."

"Very well," said the major, "then you will move alone. I shall remain where I am."

"Maj. Delaford, you are a brute!"

The major bowed. Justina burst into tears.

"Yes, a brute, and I'm sorry I ever married you!"

And after that Mrs. Delaford did not speak to her husband for two days. But as the major appeared in no wise affected by this taciturnity she adopted another plan, and scolded steadily for three days.

"Look, here, Justy, this won't do," said the major, at the week's end. "I don't fancy either a dumb woman or a fury!"

"That I should live to be so spoken to," whimpered Mrs. Delaford.

"So," went on the major, "I have written to my cousin, Rosamond Bly, to come and spend the summer here."

"I won't have her in my house!" shrieked the bride.

"But I will have her in mine," composedly retorted the husband.

"Let me see her presume to enter this house!" cried Justina.

"Let me see you presume to be uncivil to her," said the major, knitting his brows in a way that Mrs. Delaford had never seen in her late husband's countenance. For, to tell the truth, the late Mr. Flashington had been but a chicken-hearted individual at best.

Mrs. Delaford flounced out of the room and banged the door viciously behind her.

Miss Bly arrived the next day—a cheery-cheeked, bright-eyed girl, with lips wreathed in smiles, and a brand-new traveling suit cut after a deal prettier pattern than the bride's own. Mrs. Delaford refused to speak to her.

"Justina," said her husband, in a warning voice, "this is my cousin, Rosamond. I hope you will make her welcome to our home."

But Mrs. Delaford only threw a slipper at her husband, burst into tears, and ran hysterically upstairs.

"Oh, Felix! what's the matter?" asked Rosamond, half-frightened out of her senses. "Had I better go home?"

"By no means, my dear Rosamond," said the major. "You see, I have married a woman with a temper. But she'll be all the more charming when that fault is rooted out of her character."

The major went upstairs and tried to open the door. It was locked.

"Justina," he said, gently, "it is I. Let me in."

"I won't," snapped the bride.

"Will you come downstairs, then?"

"I will not come out of my room until that woman is out of the house!" sputtered forth Mrs. Delaford.

"Very well, my dear," said the major, and he returned to the drawing-room with unruffled philosophy.

Mrs. Delaford adhered to her resolution, although it was much tried by sundry peculiar sounds she heard on the outside of her door.

"Maj. Delaford has carpenters at work altering the house," thought she. "It makes but little difference to me in any case. I shan't stay here."

At the end of the third day, however, she concluded to go downstairs. But when she opened the door, lo and behold! her egress was barred by a grated iron door.

"Mercy upon us!" cried Mrs. Delaford. "What is this?"

"Please ma'am," said the little maid, who had brought up her meals three times a day, "it's master as had it done."

"What for?" cried Justina.

"Please, ma'am," said Hetty, trembling all over, "don't you know you're crazy?"

"Insolent minion!" said Mrs. Delaford, "call your master at once."

Maj. Delaford came immediately upstairs, with Rosamond Bly clinging in a frightened sort of way to his arm.

"How do you feel now, my dear?" he asked, solicitously.

"I'm well enough," snarled Mrs. Delaford. "Open that door quick!"

"Mad! Very mad, indeed!" said Maj. Delaford, in sotto voce, turning to Rosamond.

"Ruffian!" cried the bride, "how dare you speak so?"

"Let me out, I say!" persisted Mrs. Delaford, rattling at the bars. "What does this absurd mummery mean?"

"Perhaps a strait waistcoat would be advisable," said the major. "But as long as she remains tolerably manageable I shall not send her to an asylum."

Mrs. Delaford began to cry.

"Oh, Felix, how can you talk so?" sobbed she. "I am as sane as you are."

"Poor thing!" murmured the major, compassionately. "The hardest part of insanity must be when one becomes partially conscious of its deadly doom."

Mrs. Delaford shut the door rather vehemently and began to cry hysterically.

"I'm not mad!" said she. "I won't be made a madwoman of!"

But how to help herself—that was the question. The door was barred effectually—the windows opened upon the dead wall of a neighboring Institute of the Fine arts, and were three stories above ground. She might have shrieked herself hoarse in that direction before any one could hear her. She sat down to think. What should she do? What was to become of her? Did that dreadful hint of Felix concerning an asylum mean anything? For once in her life Mrs. Flashington was actually frightened.

"Has my temper really been so terrible," she asked herself, "that people mistake it for—I can hardly breathe the word—insanity?"

It was a new idea; she pondered over it carefully and cried bitterly over it.

When Hetty came, as usual, with the napkin-covered tray, Mrs. Delaford's face was pale and tear-swollen.

"Hetty," said she, "will you ask your master to step up here for a few minutes?"

Maj. Delaford obeyed the summons at once.

"Well, my love," said he, "what is it?"

"Felix," said Mrs. Delaford, bursting into fresh tears, "I have acted very foolishly. I beg your pardon. And I beg Rosamond's pardon, too."

Maj. Delaford opened the grated door at once—Justina flew into his arms—and then there was a reconciliation after the most approved style.

Mrs. Delaford was as sweet as a June morning after that—and if ever she manifested symptoms of a relapse all that Maj. Delaford found necessary was to allude, in a general way, to lunatics and asylums.

MINERVA'S BOOK PLATES.

The demand for book plates is on the increase, the smart engravers and stationers say. Every woman wants her own special and particular book label, and nearly every woman has very decided ideas as to what it should be like says the New York Commercial Advertiser. Following the custom of those few bookish ladies of olden days, they embody their particular tastes in the design of their book plate. A harp or lute signifies that the owner of the books shares her love of literature with a love of music; a needlewoman adopts a fanciful floral landscape, and those proud persons whose grandparents all died aristocratically of gout, display the united arms of their fathers and husbands. Women have been very successful designers of book plates and manage to get a great deal of sentiment in their pictorial designs. One woman whose heart is almost equally divided between her children and her household and her books has a book plate showing a formal garden with a house in the distance. In the foreground are three curly, cherubic heads bent over a huge book. On one side is a distaff and on the other a pile of books bearing the names of Shakespeare, Corneille, Hugo and Thackeray, among other favorites. Ellen Terry has a unique book plate, designed by her son, Gordon Craig, being an outline map of her cottage at Winchester. The Italian book plates of a hunored years ago were exquisite in design, but in modern times Italians seem satisfied with very simple labels, much like ordinary visiting cards. Some book plates are extant which Albert Durer designed long before he began the serious study of art. The study of book plates is one of the most fascinating of hobbies, and the collection of these artistic designs is more interesting to a student of people than posters, as the better plates are symbolic as well as artistic and contain subtle indications of individual character. In the selection of suitable mottoes alone may be found ample scope for originality and humor. The ideal design for a fair reader's book plate should be graceful, pretty and gently serious—a thing of beauty, neither flippant nor pedantic.

ESCAPED FROM JAIL

As Garbage and Was Nearly Two Hour in the Swill Box.

Chicago Record. Leo Lubin, a 17-year-old prisoner, who has a police record as a pickpocket, made his escape from the county jail by secreting himself in a can of garbage. During the morning hours for the exercise of prisoners in the old jail he was carried out by two "trusties" and dumped in a larger garbage box in the jail yard. He remained there two hours, half suffocated, with the cover of the box down, until the arrival of the scavenger, who left the gates open when he drove into the yard. The driver of the garbage wagon almost fainted when he lifted the cover of the box to see a boy jump out, covered with grease and garbage. He clutched Lubin by the suspenders, but the jailbird wriggled to release himself. He broke loose, but left his braces in the hand of his would-be captor. The fugitive ran through the open gates to the alley and disappeared in Illinois street.

A Pumpkin as a Wedding Fee.

A clergyman of Georgia was once standing in the courthouse when a Hoosier came in to see the ordinary in person to procure a marriage license. The countryman asked for a "pair of licenses," and on making the purchase necessary to being united in the holy bonds of matrimony inquired of the ordinary: "Who can I git to marry me?" The ordinary replied that he could perform the ceremony, or the parson, standing near, would probably accommodate him. The countryman turned to the parson and asked if he would marry him. The parson readily consented and asked the would-be bridegroom: Where's your gal?" He replied: "Out yonder—in the street." The parson said, "Fetch her in." Then she was "fotch" in and the "knot tied. The bridegroom asked the parson the amount of the indebtedness incurred, and was told that no charge was made, but that he always left the matter for the bridegroom to decide. The latter replied: "I've got no money. I've got a load of pumpkins out yonder. I'll give you a pumpkin."—Homiletic Review.

Landseer's Early Triumphs.

Sir Edward Henry Landseer, R. A., the great animal painter, who was trained by his father from about six years of age to sketch animals from life, began exhibiting at the Royal academy when he was only thirteen years old. At the academy, in 1818, when he was sixteen, he exhibited a picture entitled "Dogs Fighting," which attracted general attention, and was purchased by Sir George Beaumont, the then acknowledged head of the patrons and connoisseurs of art in England. In the following year he exhibited his "Dogs of St. Gothard," the engraving of which became very popular. Dogs and deer were his favorite and best subjects; the scene of several fine pictures was laid in the Highlands, which he first visited in 1824. In 1826 he was elected an A. R. A., in 1830 an R. A., and in 1850 he was knighted. He died October 1, 1873, and was buried in St. Paul's. The bronze lions at the foot of Nelson's monument in Trafalgar square, London, were modeled by him.

A City of Telephones.

Stockholm easily takes first rank as the city of telephones. It has 23,000 telephones to less than 30,000 inhabitants. Paris has only 17,000 to 3,000,000 people. Stockholm and Paris are the only cities in the world that have a complete double wire system.

AIDED AND ABETTED A THEFT.

How the President Became Coparcener in Purloining a Mackerel.

From the New York Herald: How Mr. McKinley aided and abetted in the stealing of one mackerel is a story that has come out since the president's coming has been talked of. As Mr. McKinley was an accessory before and after the fact, Mr. Joseph V. Jordan never breathed a word of this until the other day. Then he told it to a friend in confidence, as he thought, but now it is going the rounds. It was the year Mr. McKinley was nominated for the presidency. He and Mrs. McKinley were at the Elberon. Mr. McKinley is a good whip. He and his brother Abner and Mr. Jordan were trying a fast team of the latter. Mr. McKinlay remarked that he would like to take a fresh mackerel home to Mrs. McKinley, who is fond of that fish. Their drive brought them past the Elberon fish "pond," but no mackerel were to be had there. They visited half a dozen different places without success and were finally directed to a small fish store kept by Capt. John Jefferies, in Pearl street, South Elberon. The store was closed, for it was lunch hour. Jefferies' house was some distance away. They had been assured that Jefferies had what they wanted. It was a broiling day, they were hot and in despair. They rattled doors and windows. "Boost me," said Mr. Jordan. Brothers William and Abner gave him a shoulder. He was soon perched on a lofty window casing and prying the putty from a glass. The glass was lifted. Mr. Jordan wriggled through. He reappeared with a fine big fish. He had squeezed half way through the window when there was a cry of "Police! Police!" A boy clerk had come on the scene. "It is all right," gasped Mr. Jordan. "That's Mr. McKinley," waving the fish in the direction of the nominee for president. "No, 'tain't all right," replied the boy. They lifted Mr. Jordan out of the window frame, gave the boy the money for the fish and a deposit for repairs to the window, and Mrs. McKinley had her mackerel.

FLORAL DISPLAY.

It was in the early seventies that the rage for elaborate floral displays began. The late Sir Edward Scott startled London by telling his florists to use as many flowers as they wanted to in decorating his house for a ball. The florists were delighted to obey and the result kept London talking for months.

The Marquis of Bristol followed with a dance, and the ballroom was decorated to imitate the hanging gardens of Babylon, no less than six tons of ivy being used to make the walls look castellated.

Another Englishman, Gerald Lehigh, spent $2,600 on flowers for one entertainment, and Lady Sutton promptly gave $15,000 to her florists to outdo him.

The late Colonel North of England, who was a princely entertainer, gave a fancy dress ball ten years ago, and 2,000 lily of the valley plants were brought from Italy and Florence to decorate the rooms.

When Consuelo Vanderbilt married the Duke of Marlborough the extravagance of flowers was talked of in two continents. At a private banquet in Washington two years ago two immense balls of roses were arranged to break over the table, and thousands of rosebuds, orange blossoms and lilies were showered on the guests.

A very prominent New York woman gave a ball to inaugurate her new house, and over the walls of the dancing room had a light screen built, and pale yellow roses completely covered the screen. During the evening 300 blackbirds were set free, and as they flew past the walls of yellow roses a unique color scheme was produced.

Burglars Never Use Chloroform.

That burglars of the more advanced type can and do use chloroform in the commission of their crimes is a belief widely held and rarely contradicted, and yet there is, curiously, little foundation for it. Indeed, those who are most familiar with the administration and effects of anaesthetics assert that there is no foundation at all for it except in the imagination of sensational writers and in the needs of people whose losses can not safely be explained by statements of fact. The question has been raised at Pittsburg recently by several robberies in which chloroform is said to have been employed, and opinions of the local experts are strongly against the possibility of such use. The idea that the mere introduction of chloroform into a room would cause unconsciousness was derided as absurd. Even if doors and windows were airtight, it would take several gallons of either anaesthetic so to fill a room with the heavy fumes as to affect a sleeper on a bed of average height. And the first effect would be, not deep sleep, but excited wakefulness. The chances are, then, that when anybody claims to have been chloroformed by burglars there is something queer about the case.—New York Times.

An Actor Elevated.

Patrons of the Alexandra theater on Saturday night last witnessed a curious and exciting incident that befell the veteran Irish comedian, Grattan Riggs. The actor was stepping through a doorway in a drop scene, when the scene shifters suddenly hauled the "set" into the air, carrying the massive comedian with it. The audience beheld Grattan Riggs soaring into the theatrical empyrean astride the slat across the bottom of the entrance. Grattan Riggs is neither as young nor as spry as he once was, but he is much heavier, and the possibility of a fall of twenty feet or so invested him with the tenacity of the powerful British bulldog, and no particular damage was done after all.—Melbourne Leader.

DR. KEELEY'S DISCOVERY.

The Most Important Step in Medical Science of the Century.

Scientific men declare that the discovery of the Keeley cure has been the most important medical discovery of the century. There have been over 300,000 men and women cured of the whisky, morphine and tobacco addictions, and in Minnesota alone there are about 3,000. The greater number of these were cured in the Minneapolis Keeley Institute, a magnificent establishment, located on the corner of Tenth street and Park avenue.

Dr. Leslie E. Keeley is a physician, a native of New York State, a graduate of Rush Medical College and a doctor of the Missouri State University. He was engaged in regular practice until the extraordinary spread of his cure compelled him to devote his entire time and energy to the extension of this work. Since 1880 he has devoted himself exclusively to the cure of inebriety.

As the son and grandson of physicians who had studied inebriety, he became interested in the subject when a child. He began a study of it while a surgeon in the army, 1862–5, and pursued it diligently until his success was finally reached. Experience taught him that inebriety is a disease of the nerve tissues of the brain, and then he set about to discover a specific treatment for it. He experimented largely with social castaways who were found groveling about in the low haunts of drunkenness and vice in Chicago, and many such are to-day living lives of decency and repute as a result of his experiments. He continue this experiments until, in 1880, he declared his ability to cure any and all persons addicted to the use of whisky, drugs or tobacco.

Interested persons are cautioned against imitators. Explanatory literature will be promptly sent on receipt of application by writing to 629 Tenth Street South, Minneapolis, Minn.

Reform Press Bureau.
ST. PAUL, Aug. 28, 1899.

It is impossible to repress the feeling of confidence and enthusiasm, with which the general political situation is to be viewed. There is substantial agreement, among all the allied forces, which, if signs fail not, will be of one victorious mind next year. Our agricultural producers see in lowering prices of all they have to sell, and the forced rises of all that they must buy, the bitter fulfillment of the inevitable, under the prevailing system, that leaves them in competition with silver using countries. Labor is aroused to the danger of being crushed by the power of organized monopoly, which has only to manifest its needs, to have the military at beck and call to enforce their oppressions. The prevailing strikes show that labor appreciates the dangers of the hour. Our foreign born population are especially apprehensive of the drift, in this land of the free, to imperialism and autocratic power. This applies with special force to German-Americans, Irish-Americans and our citizens of Scandinavian strain. It is now certain that we shall retain this support largely for the next year, whether the administration persists in its wretched course, or is forced by public sentiment and the fear of defeat to change it. These things, among others, coupled with the fact that we have a national leader who seems to have been raised up for the sole purpose of saving the American Republic, must give to the united forces of the regenerated Democracy a courage and an enthusiasm which will sweep all before it.

Mr. Bryan thus sizes up the situation: "Democratic success in 1900, is becoming more and more certain."

Nebraska follows Iowa in uniting all of the reform forces against the goppites. The allied forces will prove an invincible army with banners.

What a commentary on the pulpit, that while the masses of the Republicans are deserting the administration on its Philippine policy, the truly loyal clergy, for the most part, continue to understand the last words of the "Prince of Peace" as "Go ye into all the world, and shoot the gospel into every creature."

Since Otis' censorship was renewed there have not been so many reports of burned churches, shot riddled crosses and desecrated altars. Or have operations been interfered with by the rainy season?

If Dewey is not talking, somebody is saying some very proper things of him.

The St. Paul Globe, in an article "The Man and the Hour," pays a tribute to Dewey that is heartily seconded by all, but such recognition they regard as military and not political. There is quite another man for this "hour," and his name is Bryan.

And what Bryan has done politically, to win this leadership and admiration, is quite the counterpart of Dewey's glorious trophies for American arms and glory. What Dewey did against a wicked and oppressive foreign power, Bryan is doing against the enemies of our national peace and prosperity, and an equally wicked and oppressive money power.

Otis will censor the Chinese out of the Philippines, but he cannot prevent the Filipinos from coming here to compete with labor, after they are become "subjugated" American citizens.

Hanna is said to be intending to purchase a stud of fast horses. He will need them next year.

Eltweed Pomeroy of New Jersey, the great authority on direct legislation, has been spending a few days in the Twin Cities. The principle he represents, certainly seems to be marching on. State after state is adding it to the list of doctrines of the true Democracy.

This year's state board of equalization is looked to as none has been for years. It has been called to meet with Governor Lind, who is, ex-officio, the head of the board, at the state capitol, on Tuesday, Sept. 5. The board is thus composed, as appointed by the governor:

First district, F. L. Johnson.
Second district, Joseph McKibben, St. Paul.
Third district, J. G. Lawrence, Wabasha.
Fourth district, Frank McMillan, Minneapolis.
Fifth district, L. S. Peck, Kasson.
Sixth district, L. O. Ulverstead, Gragan.
Seventh district, C. W. Sprague, Sauk Center.
Eighth district, Mathias Nachbar, Jordan.
Ninth district, Gudmand Anderson, Linden.
Tenth district, Thomas J. Meighan, Ofrestville.
Eleventh district, J. E. Cooley, Duluth.
Twelfth district, Ole Lee, Montevideo.
Thirteenth district, A. O. Hendricks, Adrian.
Fourteenth district, J. E. Ostrok, Warren.
Fifteenth district, W. Potter, Aitkin.
Sixteenth district, H. W. Daley, Morris.
Seventeenth district, Alexander Fiddes, Jackson.
Fifteenth district, Charles Judkins, Princeton.

The ex-officio members are Governor Lind, Attorney General Douglas and State Auditor Dunn.

And when the board meets it would be a good plan to open the proceedings by reading the following recent words of W. J. Bryan:

"At present the government can draft the citizen, but cannot draft the pocketbook. Slowly but surely the dollar is being exalted and the man debased. Justice in taxation must be restored."

The street fair is abroad in the land, and next week all hands will unite in Mr. Randall's af-Fair on the state fair grounds. Let every man, woman and child in the state who can get there, get there.

It is the general agreement that not in the history of the department of insurance has there been a more vigorous or able administration than is being given by Commissioner J. A. O'Shaughnessey. The number of fake insurance schemes that the department has run to earth and saved the people from is considerable. Numerous such schemes under the guise of mutual benefit societies have been brought to time. In the case of one of these, the commissioner found that 40 per cent of pecuniary profits to officers should be returned, it having been charged to "expenses" and thus being unlawfully taken, which case is now in the hands of the attorney general for action. The latter official recently sustained action taken by Commissioner O'Shaughnessey in the case of the Realty Revenue company of Minneapolis, which sought to escape the insurance laws. The attorney general finds in that case that if the company desires to transact business in Minnesota as advertised in its pamphlet, literature and contracts, "it should qualify under the laws, and that if it does not do so, or any of its agents, it violates the laws and will be subject to arrest and prosecution." This is business.

The dairy, insurance, game and fish, educational, military, in fact each and every department of the Lind administration, is making a record to be proud of, and to meet the approval of the people.

Ramsey county Democrats are in the saddle, completing the effectiveness of the city and county organization, and in the early fall will be commenced the holding of frequent meetings in the wards, with a general meeting some time in October. Organization and work are the thing.

Poor Van Sant. The goppite wire pullers have not the slightest intention of permitting him to be nominated. They are tricking him in Hennepin by the use of Bob Evan's name. It looks like the Eustis game over again. Van is a good fellow, and entitled not only to sympathy, but to have his eyes opened. Where's the spittle?

"Col. Sellers" based his faith in his "eye water," on the fact that 10,000,000 of people in Asia had sore eyes. There was "millions in it." But what a chance for sale of an eye opener among Minnesota politicians. There's Van Sant, Collins, Clapp, Heatwole, Bixby, Evans and all the rest. Who'll try? All should buy!

The Aitkin Age, one of the stiffest of the G. O. P. papers, administers the following rebuke to the goppite abusers of Governor Lind:

"Governor Lind and Superintendent of Banks E. M. Pope are coming out of the St. Paul Savings bank difficulties with flying colors. The turn affairs have taken makes the St. Paul Dispatch and Minneapolis Tribune look very much like thirty cents. It pays to be fair, gentlemen."

The Minneapolis Journal has its weekly reference to the "Democratic howl" about prices—that we wanted them raised, and now complain that they are high. The Journal cannot blind its readers. We want high prices of products of the soil, on which depend the returns for labor. The Republican policy reverses the case, giving high prices for all that our producers must buy, and lower for all that they have to sell. The trust and combine give the one, the gold standard causes the other. Both have got to go.

Chief Inspector Reishus is daily giving proof that the right man was selected as Clausen's successor. He has honesty, courage, ability. He is wisely chosing his assistants. In fact those who pretended to think that the department would cease, with Clausen's departure, are in courtplaster. Business is being done at the old stand.

Governor Lind has now completed eight months of administration. In the time quite a number of moss-covered Republican barnacles have been dispensed with. A few remain who can be spared as well as not. They will be allowed to depart, and without regret.

Attorney General Douglas unqualifiedly approves the position maintained by Governor Lind, that there is no warrant of law for expending state money, for the return of the Thirteenth.

An agreeable feature of Governor Lind's administration has been the courteous manner in which, up to this point, he has been treated by the Republican attorney general, in painstaking and conscientious discharge of duty by that official.

HAVE YOU—heard of the Twins—that they're at it—.
Haloed St. Paul, and Minnie, the fair?
Of the rein of the dollars, and jingle,
Of silver and gold that's heard everywhere?
I HAVE—and the rythmical "cartwheels"
Or musical "notes" remind of the sea—
Where soldier boys, sailor boys, Yankee boys,
Are joyously speeding to you and to me.
I HAVE—HAVE YOU?
IF NOT—WHY NOT?

MAUREL IS A LIAR

ACCORDING TO THE EVIDENCE OF CAPT. FREYSTAETTER.

A Member of the Court-Martial of 1894 Discredits Col. Maurel and Gen. Mercier—M. Bertillon Concludes His Amusing Testimony in Which He Attempts by Handwriting Tests to Prove Dreyfus' Guilt—Outrageous Partiality of Col. Jouaust Is Again in Evidence.

Rennes, Aug. 28. — When the sixth session of the third week of the second trial by court-martial of Capt. Alfred Dreyfus, of the artillery, on the charge of treason began Saturday morning in the lycee, M. Alphonse Bertillon, chief of the anthropometric department of the Paris prefecture of police, resumed his testimony, interrupted the day before by the adjournment of the court for the day. In this case M. Bertillon testified as a handwriting expert and gave his reason for believing Dreyfus to be the author of the famous bordereau, upon which the prosecution mainly depends to establish the charge against the prisoner.

The comic aspect of M. Bertillon's performance again appealed to the risibilities of the audience, though the judges paid close attention to his demonstrations, which were concluded at 8:30 a. m., the witness saying in a declamatory tone: "I am convinced the writer of the bordereau is the prisoner sitting there."

Dreyfus heard him without flinching and with an expression of disdain, which he showed in a still more noticeable manner just before the specialist's testimony, when M. Demange handed him a paper which M. Bertillon had submitted to the judges as convincing proof of the guilt of the accused. The prisoner perused it for a few minutes and then handed it back with a shrug of the shoulders and without uttering a word.

There was a highly dramatic scene toward the end of the session. Maitre Labori, leading counsel for the defense, asked to have Capt. Freystaetter, one of the members of the court-martial of 1894 which convicted Dreyfus, called in contradiction of the deposition of Col. Maurel, the presiding judge upon that occasion, who had testified that he only read one of the documents out of the secret dossier communicated to the court-martial. The captain, who is a finely built officer, and who has a handsome, honest face, ascended the platform with a firm step and fearless air. When he was asked to recount what occurred he said his conviction of the guilt of the prisoner was formed by the evidence of the experts in handwriting, the deposition of Col. Du Paty de Clam, "and," he continued, "I must add, some slight influence was exercised over my mind by hearing the secret dossier read."

The witness was then questioned as to whether one or more of the documents were read, and he said they were all read. This was in direct contradiction of Col. Maurel, and M. Labori at once demanded the confrontation of Capt. Freystaetter with Col. Maurel. The latter mounted the stage and presented a miserable object, his shifty eyes blearing out beneath heavy eyebrows, and looking around him with a vicious hang-dog look.

"How do you explain this?" asked M. Labori.

Then the colonel, at bay, replied savagely:

"I said I only read one document. I did not say only one document was read."

This statement called forth an outburst of hisses and indignant "ohs" from the audience, which looked upon it as an infamous confession. The witness, trembling with shame, but evidently determined to fight to the last, threw a fierce look of hatred at M. Labori and the audience as the gendarmes shouted: "Silence, silence." After this the audience listened spellbound as Capt. Freystaetter, in a distinct, bold voice, told exactly what the documents of the dossier were, and how Col. Maurel not only read those documents, but made comment on them. This was practically calling Maurel a thorough liar, and the colonel glared at the captain ferociously. The captain, however, was not dismayed, and his words, spoken in a tone of candor and fearlessness, must have carried conviction to every hearer.

Gen. Mercier then asked to be heard and placed himself by the side of Maurel. The forbidding appearance of these two men, both dressed in civilian attire, was in striking contrast with the erect, unflinching attitude of Freystaetter, who wore the smart uniform of a captain of artillery, with medals on his breast. It was a remarkable scene.

GEN. MERCIER'S ARREST.

Another Rumor That the Government Will Place Him in Custody.

Rennes, Aug. 28. — The government has decided to prosecute the Eclair for the publication of the "Canaille de D—" document, one of the four documents secretly communicated to the Dreyfus court martial of 1894, and which has been shown not to refer to Capt. Dreyfus at all. But the object of the government is to discover who communicated it to the Eclair. Last evening it was rumored that the government has also decided to arrest Gen. Mercier, but the rumor is not confirmed. A rumor was also in circulation that Gen. Mercier had fled to the Island of Jersey, but the story proved to be without foundation.

ACTING AS SPIES

TREACHEROUS FILIPINOS WHO FOOL THE AMERICANS.

Natives Entrusted by the Americans With Official Positions on Account of Their Supposed Friendship Use Their Offices to Get Information for the Rebels—Great Majority of Natives Sympathize With the Insurgents—Unusual Vigilance at Manila Indicates Expected Trouble.

Manila, Aug. 22, via Hongkong, Aug. 28—Recent events have proved somewhat discouraging to officials who are trying to accompany war with a policy of conciliation. Two new municipal governments have collapsed through the treachery of the mayors. To-day the mayor of San Pedro Macati, who was elected by the people under the direction of Prof. Dean Worcester, of the United States advisory commission for the Philippines, was brought to Manila and lodged in jail. The United States officers at San Pedro Macati found that he was using his office in securing information for the Filipino army. Disguised insurgents were helping him.

The mayor of Bahaag was also arrested and confined in the same prison. The Americans caught him passing between the line of the two armies with an incriminating document, which the authorities secured. Another prominent native mayor is under surveillance. When the election at Imus, which Gen. Lawton and Prof. Worcester engineered, was announced, the Americans inquired as to the whereabouts of the people's choice and were informed that he was in prison at Bilibid, where the authorities had placed him on suspicion of being a revolutionist. He was released and installed as mayor.

Such events and conditions tend to give color to the assertions of foreign residents acquainted with the native character, who insist that a great majority of the natives sympathize with the insurgents and elect officials whom they know to be revolutionists. For two weeks Manila has been policed at night with unusual vigilance. Apparently the authorities are expecting trouble. The trend of affairs tends to make the policy of leniency unpopular among the Americans. When they abandoned Morong they burned the whole town.

Col. Searrch, of the Twelfth infantry, who is in command at Angeles, is cynical regarding Filipino friendliness. Instead of allowing the natives to return to the town as heretofore, he has ordered his men to shoot all men trying to pass the lines and to turn back all women and children. He recently gave the amigos in the town an opportunity to prove their professed friendship, putting them to work at digging trenches and cleaning the streets, but this only displeased them. The foremost citizen of Angeles, a lawyer, who had welcomed the Americans with a great show of cordiality, was found communicating with the insurgents. The Americans promptly marched him off to San Fernando to be tried by court martial.

KELLAR'S GREAT MEMORY.

It Aided the Magician in His Second Sight Tricks.

"The second sight trick as performed on the stage calls for a marvelous memory," said a former theatrical manager. "Some years ago I attended one of Henry Kellar's entertainments with Mrs. Scott Siddons. His lady assistant sat blindfolded on the stage and described different articles which he picked up at random through the audience. When he came near, I simply pointed to a curious little green charm which Mrs. Siddons had loaned to me and I was then wearing on my watch chain.

"'It was a green intaglio,' said the assistant in reply to Kellar's questions; 'a very peculiar little medallion, which was presented to Mrs. Scott Siddons by the sailors of a vessel bound for San Francisco from Australia.'

"We were so astonished that we almost fell out of our seats. After the show we went behind the scenes with Nellie McHenry and some other theatrical folk who happened to be present, and Mrs. Siddons proceeded to corner the magician, who was an old friend. 'Now, Harry,' she said, 'I want you to tell me honestly how you knew about that locket.'

"Kellar laughed. 'You recollect I came over from Australia on the same ship,' he replied, 'and I would certainly know that stone if I saw it in China.'

"He would say no more, and I presume, of course, that he conveyed his information to the stage through his system of cues. But the marvelous part about it was his prompt recognition of the charm on my watch chain. The presentation on shipboard had taken place all of seven or eight years before."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

LIKE THE PROVERBIAL CAT.

How the Professor's Desk Came Back of His Own Expense.

The young lawyer has good taste in antiques and has done much browsing about in search of them. He knows the places in Worcester and the neighboring towns where those who like old furniture and have the money to pay for it may find what will delight their souls. So it was no more than natural, when the professor sold his desk, which was of ancient design, but of doubtful age, and began looking for something better, that he should consult the young lawyer. The man of law was delightfully sympathetic. "I saw just what you want the other day," he said, "but I'm afraid it's gone now. I'll keep my eye out for the next few days."

"Well, if you see anything really good," said the professor, "buy it and hold it for me. It is not safe to let a bargain go too long. Only let me know as soon as you can, so that I won't be buying one too. It would be a great favor."

"Not at all," said the lawyer. "It's a pleasure to buy a good thing, even if you are not to keep it yourself."

In a day or two the professor received a joyful note. The young lawyer's mother had found just what the professor wanted—a beauty, one of those rare old bits that they cannot counterfeit, and such a bargain, only $10. The professor was charmed. He immediately sent his check to the young lawyer with an enthusiastic note of thanks and a request to send up the desk. He was in the hall when it arrived. He tore off the sacking and inspected his prize. It was his old desk that he had sold a few days before for $3.50.—Worcester Gazette.

Odd Tendencies of Slang.

A writer in the Journal des Debats complains of the process of degradation which is going on in the French language. The peasantry, for instance, frequently speak of the ass, a humble partner in their daily toil, as "the minister," and other words of dignified import are applied to equally humble, if not actually base, uses.

The same tendency, however, appears, to be showing itself in Germany, where the title "monarch" passes current in modern slang as a designation for tramps and footpads. The other day a noncommissioned officer in charge of barracks at Danzig addressed this term to a troublesome private just as a captain happened to be passing. The latter at once reported the incident, and the barrack master was brought before the magistrates on a charge of "leze majesty."

Evidence was adduced to prove that in east Prussia "rascal" and "monarch" were convertible terms, so that the court acquitted the prisoner, although he loses his rank and his pension.

A Valuable Truckload.

Perhaps as costly a commodity as any that is carried in considerable quantities in truckloads is Sumatra tobacco, such as is used for cigar wrappers. Sumatra wrappers cost from $1 to $2 a pound, and the import duty on them is $1.85 a pound. This tobacco is imported in small, compact bales weighing 170 or 180 pounds each. Duty paid Sumatra would be worth about $600 a bale, and there can be carried on a truck fifty bales or more; so that a 50 bale truckload of such tobacco would be worth about $30,000.—New York Sun.

DYNAMITE IS FICKLE.

YOU CAN NEVER TELL WHAT A CARTRIDGE WILL DO NEXT.

Some Interesting Stories of the Cranky Nature of the Stuff, Which, a Boss Blaster Says, Is as Contradictory as a Woman.

"A cartridge of dynamite is pretty much like a woman—you can never tell what it is going to do next, because it doesn't know itself," said a boss blaster. "I have seen a powder salesman throw a cartridge of dynamite into the redhot fire box of a 20 horse boiler, and the stuff just burned like tord. Next day I saw a cart boy repeat the experiment with a blacksmith's forge and a pill of dynamite no larger than a pea—and there will be a wholesome fear and soft coal in that boy as long as he lives.

"I have seen a case of 100 sticks of dynamite fall 800 feet down a shaft and never wink, and I've seen an Indian drop a half cartridge from his hand to his boot and not a grease spot did the poor fellow leave behind. At that the poor fellow deserved a better fate, for he made a desperate fight for it before he scattered.

"He was loading a block hole at the time and had just broken a cartridge in half when he dropped one of the pieces. Before it could touch the ground he sort of half caught it, and then began a desperate brief juggling act. Again and again he half caught the deadly thing. Then he missed it. He made one last effort and stuck out his foot to break the fall against the hard ground, but it didn't work. There was a bang, and it was lucky no one stood near him. Which shows that dynamite is like a woman, because in my time I have dropped similarly hundreds of cartridges of dynamite, and still I am here and with a good digestion.

"But it is in winter, when dynamite freezes, that it is most capricious. Then if you want it to go off it simply refuses, or burns with a dull roar, like a boiler blowing off steam. It is in thawing dynamite that most of the accidents happen about which you read. There are two ways of thawing dynamite—one by placing the cartridges on a steam boiler or within safe distance of a fire; the other by immersing them in pails of hot water. As the latter method draws out considerable of the nitroglycerin from the cartridges, and therefore weakens them, it is often discarded in favor of the more risky thawing by an open fire.

"I once saw an experienced powder man thaw a dozen cartridges by an open fire, though, as the sequel will show, he completely lost his head when suddenly confronted with an unusual emergency. He had placed the cartridges within a foot of an open wood fire and had seated himself near by to await developments when one of the cartridges caught fire.

"Had he left it to burn itself out the chances are a thousand to one that nothing very startling would have happened, for it is concussion and not fire that explodes dynamite. Instead, he rushed forward, picked up the burning stick by one end, and holding it upward like a candle began to blow and blow until he was black in the face. He never let go until the flame began to nip his fingers, and then in his excitement he threw the cartridge to the ground and began to stamp and grind on it with his heels as if he were killing a snake; and, by thunder! he stomped out the burning cartridge and lived to tell about it! The cart boys called him 'Angel' after that, because by rights he ought to be an angel now.

"One day a professor from Stevens Institute of Technology came to the quarry and asked me to perform a certain experiment for him. We printed with dynamite direct from a newspaper on to a block of iron. The professor said the experiment proved most interesting, as he had discovered among other things that dynamite works downward and not upward, like black powder. Our way of proving that in a quarry is to lay a stick of dynamite on top of a bowlder. After the shot the bowlder is smashed to bits.

"But the professor had his own notions. He carried three round blocks of iron six inches in diameter and three inches thick. Then he took a newspaper from his pocket and spread one sheet over the face of the block. I placed half a stick of dynamite on top and covered it with a little heap of sand and touched her off. You would hardly believe the result, but you can see the block on exhibition in a glass case in the Stevens Institute library, and you can read on it distinctly—of course, the type appears backward—the printing of that part of the paper which covered the block at the time of the explosion.

"But the professor had another wrinkle up his sleeve. He picked an ordinary oak leaf and spread it over the face of a second block. I prepared a charge similar to the first, and this time the ribs of the leaf and even its outlines appeared distinctly pressed into the iron surface. According to the professor, the action of the dynamite was so quick that the ribs of the leaf had not time to burst apart before they were impressed on the iron. In the case of the newspaper the printed letters were harder than the surrounding white of the paper, therefore the impression.

"The professor's third block is not on exhibition for the reason that we never found a piece of it larger than a clove—and that reminds me, what do you say?" The reporter said "Yes."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

THE BIRD'S PETITION.

Deep in leafy woodland bowers,
Bright with undergrowth of flowers,
O'er the dappled mead and pool
And in tangled lanes most cool,
Pipe the throstle, finch and lark
From the dewy dawn to dark,
And they pipe and never tire
Songs as sweet as love's desire.

Oft to me they seem to sing,
On the branch or on the wing:
"If you leave us space and sky,
Room to nest and sing and fly,
We will pipe for your delight,
Pipe and make the days more bright,
But in narrow cage confined
Song is slain by joy unkind.

"Honor, then, our wide domain,
Break not little hearts with pain;
God who made the merry day
Gave to us our roundelay,
And like honey laden bee,
Or like wild winds made us free,
Leave, then, leave us to our song,
Woods and meads and flowers among."
—Charles Lusted in Gentleman's Magazine.

HENRY RANG OFF.

But When He Got Home That Night There Was Trouble.

Apropos of nothing in particular—unless it be electricity—I heard a druggist tell of a little occurrence in his shop the other day.

He was alone and putting up a prescription behind his large partition screen when a stylishly dressed woman entered and asked with some excitement for the telephone.

"2179 —— street. Yes, yes. Mr. Henry Weeker. Yes, yes. He's at No. —— Beekman street. Yes. Oh, is that Mr. Weeker?"

Then her voice hardened.

"Henry, why did you tell me you went to Philadelphia Thursday? What? No, you did not. I know better. Don't you stand there and lie to me like that! No, I won't! What do I care for the girl in the telephone office! You just attend to me and let her alone! I'm in a drug store. They're not listening at all. I want an explanation. No, indeed, I will not wait till you come home tonight! By that time you'll have hatched up a fine story and brought up a couple of brutes to swear to it. Mrs. Wallace says her husband saw you at the club Thursday night and that you were going out to play poker all night. Oh, no, he isn't! He's a very nice man, and I am much obliged to him. You wouldn't dare do anything of the kind! What? You won't, eh? Well, you'll talk when you get home! Here, wait a moment. Don't shut off"—

But the scance was over, and she paid her 15 cents and stalked out with flashing eyes that boded ill for the lively Henry.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

What Solomon's Temple Cost.

"A Biblical student in this city," says our Washington correspondent, "declares that if the descriptions of Solomon's Temple are accurately given in the Bible and by secular authorities, the total value of that edifice and its contents must have exceeded $50,000,000,000. In the first place, the value of the materials in the rough is estimated at $12,500,000,000, and the labor at $3,000,000,000. According to Villalpandis 10,000 men were engaged in dressing cedar lumber, 80,000 were engaged in cutting stone and 60,000 in bearing burdens for a period of seven years, who, in addition to their wages, received 50 cents a day for food. According to the same authority, which is corroborated by Josephus, the vessels of gold were valued at 140,000 talents, which, reduced to American money, is equal to $2,326,481,015. The vessels of silver are calculated at $3,231,715,000, the vestments of the priests and the robes of the singers at $10,050,000, and the value of the trumpets of gold was $1,000,000."—Chicago Record.

Outspeeded the Swallow.

A swallow is considered one of the swiftest of flying birds, and it was thought until a short time ago that no insect could escape it.

A naturalist tells of an exciting chase he saw between a swallow and a dragon fly, which is among the swiftest of insects.

The insect flew with incredible speed and wheeled and dodged with such ease that the swallow, despite its utmost efforts, completely failed to overtake and capture it.

Glove Cutting.

The cutters of the great glove houses at Brussels and in France earn even higher wages than the cutters of the most fashionable tailors in London and New York. So difficult is this art of cutting gloves that most of the principal cutters are known to the trade by name and by fame, and the peculiar knives which they use in the business are so highly prized that they are handed down from generation to generation as heirlooms.

The Long Lived Elephant.

According to Aristotle, Buffon and Cuvier, the elephant may live for two centuries. After his victory over Porus, Alexander consecrated to the sun an elephant that had fought for the Indian monarch and gave it the name of Ajax. Then, having attached an inscription, he set it at liberty. The animal was found 350 years later, making its age easily somewhere between three and four centuries.

NEW YORK WORLD.
THRICE-A-WEEK EDITION.
Practically a Daily at the Price of a Weekly.

The striking and important events of the last year have established the overwhelming value of The Thrice-a-Week World to every reader. For an almost nominal sum it has kept its subscribers informed of the progress of all our wars and, moreover, has reported them as promptly and fully as if it were a daily. With our interests still extending throughout the world, with our troops operating in the Philippines and the great Presidential campaign, too, at hand, its value is further increased.

The motto of The Thrice-a-Week World is improved. It strives each year to be better than it was the year before, and public confidence in it is shown by the fact that it now circulates more than twice as many papers every week as any other newspaper, not a daily, published in America.

We offer this unequalled newspaper and The St. Hilaire Spectator together one year for $1.65.

The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2.50.

We are going to have some fun yet—before we get through with our new "conquests." Already, in Cuba, our military chieftains are disagreeing—and the lack of a Dewey policy in the Philippines is going to cause us much trouble. Some how or other, there is a feeling among the people that if the admiral at Manila had been allowed to manage matters, that there would have been little friction. And it also appears—to us merchants, traders, shopkeepers and the like—as if there was a great waste of gold lace in Cuba—too many generals—and governor generals—and things like that.—Fargo Forum.

Executive officer Dr. Bracken of the Minnesota state board of health says: All pupils must be vaccinated before they can enter public schools and a certificate of vaccination will be absolutely necessary."

At the July meeting of the state board of health, the following resolution was adopted:

"In view of the fact that smallpox is prevalent to a great extent over the entire country and that there is danger from the infection in this state.

"Be it resolved, that all schools throughout the state, at the fall opening, must require certificates of vaccination before admitting any pupil.'"

The State Fair this year will hold a full week,—from Monday morning until Saturday night. Every exhibit must be in place and ready for inspection when the gates open Monday morning and the Saturday evening program will be the most brilliant of the entire week. As the cities present no special attractions, the Fair will be the whole thing and everything will move with a vim that will not keep people waiting and wondering impatiently what will come next. The managers have spent several thousand dollars to make a great all-round fair, with something good in it for everybody, and they propose to keep things humming from Monday morning until Saturday night, in order to get in all the good things the program promises.

Iowa Homestead: The city man writes a letter, drops it in a hole in his office building within twenty steps of his desk and Uncle Sam does the rest, but the aforesaid uncle permits the farmer to carry his letter six miles to the office, and he also has to go to the same piece and ask for his mail. If you have no rural mail delivery organize a mail club at once. Six neighbors can go together and one of them go to the office on Monday, another on Tuesday, and so on all the week, and each member can bring and distribute the mail when he comes home. This provides daily mail for each member. As a rule it does not matter what day a neighbor goes to town and knowing whose day it is one can easily send by him for any small articles needed.

Minnesota Game Laws.

The hunting season is near at hand, and the following brief summary of the provisions of the game laws passed by the last legislature will be read with interest by sportsmen and others:

The open season for prairie chickens, snipe, white-breast or sharp-tailed grouse begins Sept 1st and closes Oct 31. The season for quail, partridge, ruffled grouse or pheasant opens Oct 1 and closes Dec. 1. The season for ducks, geese, brent and all aquatic fowl opens Sept. 1 and closes Dec. 31.

The sale, exposing for sale, having in possession with intent to sell, or the shipment to any person either within or without the state by common or private carrier, of any quail, ruffled or sharp-tailed grouse, prairie chicken, partrige or pheasant, is punishable by a fine of from $10 to $25 and costs or by imprisonment of from 10 to 30 days for each and every bird sold or shipped.

The open season for deer begins Nov. 1 and closes Nov. 20 and no hunter is allowed to kill more than five deer in one season. The law further prohibits the sale of deer during the first five days of the open season.

No licenses are required except for hunting deer. Resident deer hunters must secure a license the cost of which is 25c; non-resident deer hunters must pay $25 for the same privilege. The licenses are issued by the county auditor.

Trusts.

An exchange which has either failed to get trusted or has trusted too much gets off the following run of puns on the trusts:

A man gets up in the morning looks at his watch made by the watch trust, gets up and puts his feet on a carpet made by a carpet trust, takes off his night shirt made by a cotton trust, puts on his drawers and socks made by a woolen trust, put on his shoes made by a leather trust, washes his face in a bowl made by a queensware trust, dries his face and hands on a towel sold by a dry goods trust, puts on a shirt made by cotton trusts, buttons made by a button trust, a suit of clothes made by a clothing trust and kneels down and puts his trust in the Lord, take a drink of whiskey made by a whiskey trust out of a glass made by a glass trust and is ready for breakfast. The meal has been prepared on a stove made by a stove trust, with heat from the coal trust, in utensils made by the hardware trust, served in dishes from the queensware, glassware and silverware trust. He sits down to a table made by a furniture trust, thanks the Lord for all his bountiful mercies and falls to and eats what is set before him. His wife serves him with coffee, the price of which is fixed by a coffee trust, crackers from the cracker trust, and beefsteak from the big four combined. He rises from the table, puts on his trust overcoat and trust hat and rubber trust overshoes, kisses the only woman he can trust, steps out on a porch made by a lumber trust and goes forth to skin his fellow men, and trusts to luck to get trusted for something to eat for dinner. We trust we haven't missed any of them.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Regular Correspondent

Indications point to a new and daring act of imperialism on the part of the administration in the near future. The army of sixty-odd thousand men that is being so hurriedly prepared for the Philippines may be intended for use elsewhere. There is talk—only whisper as yet in inside administration circles about arrangements to buy off Aguinaldo and his principal officers, and thus bring about an early peace in the Philippines; and members of the diplomatic corpse have received from more than one foreign government hints of an understanding between Great Britain and the U. S. by which the American army in the Philippines and the strong British naval force in Asiatic waters may be used to back up a joint demand made by the U. S. and Great Britain concerning the future government of China. This matter has not gone far enough to be publicly discussed, and it may not do so at all, but there are numerous indications, not the least of which is the sudden confidence in administration circles that the Philippine war is almost over, pointing to its probable correctness. Such a move would be imperialism, indeed.

Director of the census Merriam has arranged for examinations for appointments to the census bureau to be held at Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Paul, St. Louis, Omaha, New Orleans and Atlanta, in September, though the majority of clerks will not be appointed until July of next year. The number found eligible so far is 250, and by Feb. 1st it is expected to be 2,000. It is not likely that it will be worth while for applicants to go to much expense in travelling to take the examination, unless they are confident of getting an endosement from their Congressman or Senator. Gen. Merriam estimates that the census will show a population of about 72,500,000.

Alabama Republicans do not seem to appreciate the removal by Circuit Judge Shelby of a faithful worker of 20 years service and a native of the state, to make a place for a resident of Ohio who happens to be a relative of President McKinley. It is believed that this bargain was made before Shelby received his appointment.

$2,000 Damage Suit.

H. W. Lee, of Thief River Falls was in the city filing some papers and taking notes in an action which he will begin for M. Skala against the city and township of Red Lake Falls for damage claimed to have been sustained by Mr. Skala, the cause of which was the construction of a culvert on the section line road between section 10 and 15, also by the construction of ditches leading to it. It is claimed that these drain several large sloughs, the water from which overflows the complainant's farm, damaging him to the extent of $2,000. Just how the city can be made a part to the defense is not clearly brought out but it is understood that several years ago the city and township jointly constructed a part of the road mentioned and no doubt this is the grounds for including the city in the action. The case promises some important phases of the law and will be watched with interest.—Red Lake Falls Courier.

Will Not Forsake Her Parents.

"It happens often that the East-Side girl of New York is the sole support of the family," writes Charles T. Brodhead in the September Ladies Home Journal. "She works harder and just as cheerfully as ever, and turns every cent into the house as fast as she makes it. She assists with the household duties before she leaves in the morning and when she returns at night. The few articles of clothing she manages to get are made over and over again, patched, darned, and cleaned many times. In the winter she suffers from lack of proper clothing. She walks to her work every morning—it costs too much to ride—through sunshine and storm, and back again at night. So she trudges on, month in and month out; and when the quiet young truck-driver who lives around the corner asks her to marry him she regards him seriously and says:

"Honest, Mike, I'd like ter marry yer, because yer know I like yer, and ye're on the level, but me ole man and me ole woman ain't in it anny more for workin, and if I left 'em they'd be in the soup. No, I don't stand for no game like that.'

"So he goes away, and she grieves; but her conscience is clear—she is doing her duty."

"After birth of each child I grew weaker, and hearing so much of the good you had done, I wrote to you and have taken six bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, one box of Lozenges, one box of Liver Pills, one package of Sanative Wash, and to-day I am feeling as well as I ever did. When I get up in the morning I feel as fresh as I did when a girl and eat and sleep well and do all of my work. If ever I feel weak again shall know where to get my strength. FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

SOME GOOD STORIES FOR OUR JUNIOR READERS.

A Little Cyclone, How the Boys Discovered a New Amusement—A True Story—An Embarrassed Student—Gladstone as a Boy.

A Mystery.

Flowers from clods of clay and mud!
Flowers so bright, and grass so green!
Tell me, blade, and leaf, and bud,
How it is you're all so clean.

If my fingers touch these sods,
See, they're streaked with sticky earth;
Yet you spring from clayey clods,
Pure, and fresh, and fair from birth.

Do you wash yourself at night
In a bath of diamond dew,
That you look so fresh and bright
When the morning dawns on you?

God, perhaps, sends summer showers,
When the grass grows gray for rain,
To wash the faces of His flowers,
And bid His fields be green again.

Tell me, blade, and leaf, and bud;
Flowers so fair, and grass so green;
Growing out of clay and mud,
How it is you're all so clean.

—Gabriel Setoun.

A Little Cyclone.

Bertram was born and had spent all his life on a Kansas prairie. He had never watched the waves rolling in from the ocean, nor picked up shells along the shore, nor dug wells in the sandy beach. He had never listened to the wind as it sighs gently through the tops of the pine trees. Indeed, he had never seen any real woods at all, nor any high hills; and he knew nothing about great rocks that are so nice to climb upon and that make such lovely caves to hide oneself under. But he knew all about how the men on the plains ride over the range to bring the cattle together in a spring "round-up." He had often played at "throwing a rope" to lasso the stalks of the tall sunflowers that bloom so thickly over the western plains. He had seen great fires rushing madly through the dry prairie grass. He had even seen half a dozen fires at a time far off on the great round line in which the wide sky shuts itself down over the wide earth. He also knew how hard the winds could blow across the great open plains. When the spring winds came blowing all the way from the Gulf of Mexico or the Polar ocean, Bertram used to watch the great round "tumble weeds" as they rolled rapidly along faster than a horse could gallop. Sometimes when the wind grew fiercer than usual, it brought a thick cloud of dust to choke the breath and blind the sight. Then Bertram would run into the house as fast as his legs could carry him, and shut his eyes, almost fearing that the little house would be lifted from its foundations and be shaken to pieces by the fierce wind of the prairie. When Bertram was five years old his mother took him to New England to visit his grandmother and some cousins that he had never seen. Bertram thought the rooms in his grandmother's house were very large—large enough for houses, he said. He was never tired of running up and down the stairs, because he had never before lived in a house where there were any stairways to be climbed. One day Bertram's uncle brought home from the city a large box, and told Bertram and his little cousin Frank that this contained something which they would like to see. When they opened the box they found in it—a toy village. There was a church with a steeple, a postoffice, a school house, a store and some smaller houses. There were a good many little trees to shade the village, and a number of little men and women to walk about its streets. There was also a depot and a train of cars to bring people to and from the town. Both of the children were delighted. They took the little things out of the box and looked at them one by one. Then they began to build the town. Frank had often been to the city with his father, and thought that he knew all about how a town should be built. He did not think that Bertram knew much about towns. So it happened that almost all the things that Bertram set up Frank would soon change to another place. Bertram soon began to feel that it was all Frank's town, and that he was being left out of the play. He looked very sober for a few minutes. He stopped working and watched the little town as it grew up under Frank's busy fingers. But he was all the time thinking how he could have a share in the play himself. At last a new thought came to him. The town was just finished, with all the trees and houses set up in beautiful order, and the little men and women walking quietly around the streets. Then Bertram cried out, "Here comes a cyclone!" and filling his little lungs with air, he blew out a great wind of breath. In two seconds half of the town lay in a heap, with the frightened little men and women hurled under the overturned houses. Frank looked up, feeling half angry. But Bertram's eyes were shining. He was not cross or naughty; he only wanted to have a part in the play. Frank's eyes began to shine, too. This was a new kind of fun. So he said, "That was a blizzard, sure enough! Now all the men will have to go to work and build the town over again." Then with a good laugh both of the boys set to work with a will, and soon the town was built up again as good as ever. When it was finished the second time Frank ran to his grandmother and whispered something in her ear. Grandmama smiled, went up to the attic, and brought down an old pair of bellows that used to blow up the fires to the great kitchen chimney a hundred years ago. Bertram now looked on with great curiosity while Frank took the bellows, and made a wind that blew several of the little men and women half-way across the dining room carpet. After this, whenever Frank and Bertram set up the toy village, the very best part of the play was the time when the cyclone came, and trees and houses and men and women tumbled down together in a heap of ruins.

A True Story.

Old Dapple was so tired when haying-time was over that grandpa said he should rest a whole week, with oats for dinner every day. "You're the faithfulest old fellow!" grandpa said, warmly stroking Dapple's old nose back and forth—back and forth, lovingly. "Now you shall have a holiday and munch hay instead of rake it. Wait; I'll trundle the big rake under the mow, out of your sight, so you'll forget there was ever any such thing in the world as work." Then grandpa went in to dinner with grandma and The Twins—everybody called them The Twins, with capital T's in their voices when they said it. It was quite late in the afternoon when grandpa asked The Twins to lead out old Dapple to water. "Let him stay and drink as long as he wants to," he called after them. "You needn't wait—he knows the way back alone." So old Dapple stood and drank his fill of the clear, sweet water, and The Twins ran back to their play. But it wasn't long before grandpa saw them coming toward him at a scamper. Both their faces were excited, and they shouted in a little, breathless chorus—The Twins usually spoke in chorus—"O, grandpa! grandpa! quick! look up in the mowing field! Old Dapple's up there rakin' hay all alone, 'thout any rake or any hay! He's goin' back and forth and back and forth like everything!" And when grandpa got on his "far-offs" and looked, sure enough there was faithful old Dapple up in the mowing-field, patiently trudging up and down, making neat turns at the end of every "bout!" His tired old legs wavered unsteadily, but kept on. The afternoon sunshine lay on his rough back and dazzled his old eyes on the return trips, but he never thought of stopping. Something suddenly dimmed grandpa's "far-offs," and he took them off. "Faithful old fellow!" he muttered. "Go lead him back, children, and give him oats for his supper. And how The Twins hugged him while they were doing it!

Gladstone as a Boy.

William Ewart Gladstone, at the age of 12, was the best looking boy who ever entered Eton, and the brightest fellow who ever left it. He was always proud to claim membership with one of the old families of commerce, and to the last declined all honors and titles offered him by the queen, preferring to remain "one of the people." His mother traced her ancestry to the royalty of the fourteenth century. She was a woman of very great accomplishments, and exacted obedience from her six children. Gladstone's earlier life was passed under the direct care of this wise and watchful mother. Her boys were required to perform some manual labor, and to take much physical exercise, and were instructed in wood-sawing and carving. A man's treatment of his wife is a reflection of his mother's memory. In Gladstone's beautiful study, called the "Temple of Peace," were three desks—one for political and business correspondence, one for literary work and one for Mrs. Gladstone, who was a most discreet, as well as able, woman, and had not only the gift of silver-tongued speech, but of golden silence when occasion required.

Met the Time of Need.

Not many stories of unaffected generosity come to light, but the Michigan Christian Advocate secured a good one recently, concerning Rev. Russell H. Conwell of Philadelphia. It says of him that he wrote this letter recently to Dean Hutchings, acting president of the university at Ann Arbor: "Many years ago I made it a rule that I would never retain for my own use more than a certain sum of the proceeds of any lecture. I find that the Toledo lecture has netted me twenty-five dollars in excess of that sum. Is there a needy student in your university to whom that amount would be acceptable?" At that very moment the dean was carrying in mind the case of a young man who had said to him, "I must leave school. I depend on doing chores to earn my tuition, and have not been able to get enough to do to pay the fees." He was a promising student, and the dean answered him, "You stay in school, and the tuition money will be found somewhere." The twenty-five dollars was just the amount needed. The student is happily and hopefully continuing his university work.

Bean Game.

Here is a noisy, jolly game. A bag of beans is brought in and every one present puts his or her hand in it and takes a few beans, which are held in the hand until all are served. Then they are to count the beans, and all who have odd numbers to form in line on the right, and all with even numbers to form in a line on the left. Then the first person on the right line starts over to the left side and gives one in that line a bean as long as they last, and then he or she sits down. The same time the first one on the left begins to give out what beans he or she has on the right line, and when they are all gone, he or she sits down. The next couple do the same, and so on until all the beans are given out. The last couple by this time has all the beans, and if one is dropped a burnt cork is brought and a little mark is put on the face of each one, and when the total is counted the one having the odd number is to have the black marks put on for every bean in excess of the number the other has. The one having the odd number at the end of the game is "old maid" or "old bachelor."

An Embarrassed Student.

Mr. Spurgeon used to tell a good story about one of his divinity students. It was his custom, in order to test the powers of the young men for speaking, to give them, as they were about to ascend the pulpit, a text to discourse about on their own plan and in their own words. This, of course, was not before an audience, but simply among themselves for practice. On the occasion referred to, he gave to a young man, who as yet had not tried the ordeal, the simple word, "Zacchaeus." The young man, trembling from head to foot, said: 'I will divide my subject into three parts. First, We read that Zacchaeus was small of stature, and I never felt smaller than at the present moment. Second, We read that Zacchaeus climbed a tree, which reminds me of my ascent into this pulpit. Third, We read that Zacchaeus made haste to come down—which accordingly I will now do." Whether this man ever became a great preacher or not, we are not told, but he certainly showed that he possessed ready wit.

A Friendly Suggestion.

"I'm afraid I'll have to move again," said Smith the other morning, as he boarded a down-town car.

"What's the trouble now?" inquired his friend, Jones.

"The kitchen chimney smokes dreadfully," replied Smith, "and I'm unable to stop it."

"I'll tell you what to do," said Jones. "Give it one of those cigars like you gave me the other day, and it's a 10-to-1 shot it will quit smoking of its own accord."—Chicago News.

How Successful Farmers Operate This Department of the Farm—A Few Hints as to the Care of Live Stock and Poultry.

Dairy Notes.

Some interesting tests in cheese ripening have been made at the Wisconsin Experiment Station. It was found in these investigations that cheese ripened faster (as measured by the formation of soluble proteids) at a high than at a low temperature, whereas the cheese cured at a high temperature contained less bacteria than that kept in cold storage. The commercial value of the cold-storage cheese was rated by an expert at 7¾ cents, that cured at normal temperature at about the same price, while that cured at a high temperature "had a rank flavor and a value not exceeding 3 or 4 cents a pound." At that time prime Cheddar cheese was quoted at 7½ to 8 cents. The high temperature impaired both the flavor and the texture, whereas the cheeses cured at 55 degrees and below were invariably of good quality and were entirely free from all bitter flavor.

Every patron of a creamery has a vital interest in having the creamery a success, whether it be a co-operative creamery or a so-called "individual" creamery. The advantages of making butter in a creamery over making it on the farm are in most cases obvious. Of course there are cases where the private dairyman finds it advisable to hold to his private dairying, but such cases are rather rare. In the greater number of cases the individual either cannot make as good butter as can the creamery or else if he does make as good butter, he cannot sell it to advantage. The purchase of butter by the corner grocery store has created a rule by which both good and bad butter bring about the same price and that price is regulated by the poor butter. So, if a private dairyman has to sell his butter in that market, he must needs sell his butter at the same price as does his neighbor who has no skill in making butter, or who is too careless to even keep his milk and cream in proper condition. For these reasons it is a god-send to most of the farmers to be able to take their milk or cream to the creamery where it will be made into butter upon rules that have been tried by many years of experience, and that are sure to give a product that will bring a good price in the city markets. For this reason no community should look on with indifference while a creamery runs down and closes its doors. The community itself should take steps to build up the institution. It would often be entirely possible to save the creamery by a concerted movement either of the patrons of the creamery or by the community in general. The lack is often in the number of cows. In such cases the farmers could afford to purchase more cows, even though some of them had to be bought on the partnership plan. But if there is no general understanding on this matter the farmer generally thinks that the purchase of a cow or two by himself will not change the result and if the creamery closes he will have the cows on his hands. The necessity therefore of concerted movement is obvious, and the whole community should be impressed with the truth that the creamery is a benefit indirectly to all.

About the Poultry Yard.

Build the poultry house so it will be dry at all times. It is easy enough to have a poultry house that is dry in the middle of summer, but that is just the time when the fowls are in it least and are least affected by its condition. But in the winter, when they must remain indoors for days at a time, is when the fowls need to have a place that is not favorable to the increase of disease germs. Wet and dirty houses are often the beginning of epidemics of roup and other equally fatal diseases.

* * *

A good many of our readers will doubtless construct poultry houses this summer. To such we would say, do not do so before studying up the question of ventilation. Nearly all poultry houses are either unventilated or ventilated in the wrong way. There is a great mass of literature on this subject that is within reach of the farmer, and he should exhaust it before putting new theories into practice. Bad air is unnecessary in the poultry house, and it is equally unnecessary to have an open ventilator above the fowls from which cold air can pour down during the winter nights, bringing no end of colds and discomfort. While the ventilation is to be looked after, be sure that no drafts over the fowls are allowed to exist.

* * *

An exchange says: "Whitewash inside monthly, from March 1st to Oct. 1st." We would like to remark that perhaps the whitewashing advice is about as useless as much of the other advice that is going the rounds of the press. The writer used to do a great deal of whitewashing, but of late years has done none of it. It is doubtful if he will ever do any more. It is not a difficult matter to keep a henhouse free from lice. Lice cannot live on the walls of a house unless they have a chance to make periodic incursions on the roosts by which they get onto the bodies of the hens. If the roosts are made movable and the arrangements that support the roosts are movable, it will be a most difficult matter for a louse to get onto a hen. This will be all the more so if dust or sifted coal ashes be kept under the roosts. A louse is not able to travel far in even a sixteenth of an inch of dust. But if a man has a henhouse so constructed that the mites can journey from the walls and fixtures over the roosts and get onto the fowls, by all means let him whitewash his house and fixtures often, as that will be found the easiest way out of the difficulty.

Necessity for Shade.

The season of the year when we must provide the proper shade or cool places for our hogs is again here. The number of hogs lost each year by overheating is very considerable. Loss from heat differs from loss by sickness, in that the former being sheer negligence, while the other may be unavoidable. [illegible] like to admit our carelessness, we say little about these losses, and write less, writes a correspondent in the American Swineherd.

June, July, August and September are our hot months in this locality. Extremely hot days may come early in June or late in September, so be on the lookout. Shade must be provided in all yards at any cost. Groves trimmed up six feet from the ground, allowing the draft to pass through, make a very nice place both for feeding and sleeping on hot days. Four posts eight feet apart each way with a 2x4 14 ft. long nailed four feet above the ground, with a covering of 14 ft. boards will make a very nice shade. If you wish to make it substantial, put in more posts and crosspieces, thus giving your boards better support. In place of boards you can put poles and brush with a covering of old hay, which will make just as good a shade, but you will have to weight the hay with poles or the wind will soon take it away. Feeding should be done in shady, cool places as much as possible.

Hogs sweltering in the heat will do you no good, nor are they strengthening their constitution any more than they did in the bitter cold of the winter. To those who have established permanent hog yards let me say, if you have not already set out shade trees do so. A few willow posts driven in the ground six feet apart will make plenty of shade the third year. As the trees grow and become too thick trim them out.

Hog Feeding.

From Farmers' Review: The experiment station of the Kansas Agricultural College has, from time to time, by bulletins, short articles for the papers, etc., shown the value of feeding to fattening hogs something besides those highly starchy feeds, corn and kafir. In feeding over 200 head of hogs experimentally, not a case has come up where the results were not most favorable to feeding some feed rich in protein, along with the corn and kafir. But what is intended to be brought out in this item is not the pecuniary gain from feeding such feeds as alfalfa hay, skim-milk or soy bean meal with the other feeds, but it is the humanity of doing so. Putting a hog in a small pen and giving it no feed but dry corn and kafir and water is inhumane. Hogs so treated when you come to the pen will walk away as far as they can and eye you as though they know you were responsible for their pains of digestion, the annoying lice and all the other unfavorable conditions of the young hog that is being starved on carbohydrates. Protein is the source of the blood, bone, hair, muscle and nerve. Take away this supply, and what has the poor hog to live for? Their hair drops out, their belly bows up as well as the backbone; great rough wrinkles of hide seem to work out on the tail, but instead of wrinkles working out the body has drawn up and left the hide, like the insect that pupates in one end of the worm, as we say. The hog has a cough, and undoubtedly if such a hog could read and had access to our family papers, and not the experience of many persons, it would send for remedies for a dozen different complaints. Dumb animals have a spirit, as we say, as well as human beings, and if this element of their nature is destroyed by unfavorable circumstances and conditions, they are subject to the same moods; and it will require a great effort to bring this spirit back; yet until this is done they will not grow and fatten. If the hogs are fed the proper feed and treated kindly, they come to meet you when you approach the pen, and have an appearance of perfect content which is as different from the above described condition as day is from night. Feed your hogs a variety, and make sure that you know that the feed contains the proper elements to insure a good healthful condition.

Protecting Shade Trees from Insects.

Dr. Howard, the entomologist of the department of agriculture, has been making some investigations of the insects which so seriously affect American shade trees, in some cases defoliating entire streets. He describes three species of these destructive sorts and also indicates the methods used in various parts of the country to counteract their work. In New England thousands of dollars are spent annually to destroy gypsy moths and other tree killers and some of the largest shade trees in the country have been successfully sprayed with poisonous solutions. Dr. Howard recommends a practical line of work for small towns and villages troubled by such insects. The average householder seldom has more than a half a dozen shade trees in front of his grounds, and it is a matter of comparatively little expense and trouble for any family to keep these trees in fair condition by burning, destruction of bag worms in winter and other simple remedies.

Clipping the Forelock.

The American Stock Farm has this sensible advice on clipping the forelock: "Our advice to leave the horse's forelock, manes and tails undressed has been offered to farmers and dealers who put their horses on the public market. Clipping the forelock lessens the market value of a horse at home or abroad. The financial consideration then should forbid it. With this consideration out of the way, two other considerations remain—the esthetic and the humane. But for the fact that there should be no disputing about tastes, a flowing mane and forelock are invariably a prominent part of the artist's conception of beauty in a horse. A horse with a clipped forelock looks to us like nothing so much as a singed cat—and a cat that has passed through that process is not especially comely to the average eye. We would certainly not clip the forelock."

French Government Stallions.—The French government keeps stallions for the use of the farmers, charging only a nominal fee of $2 or $3 per service. By this method the French are rapidly improving their horses, for these government stallions are carefully inspected before being approved for service.—Mr. Thompson.

EMPLOYMENT FOR DOCTORS.

They Are Anxious to Work for the Keeley Institutes.

Some of the best physicians in the United States are in the service of the Keeley Institutes throughout the world, and they are well satisfied to be in such a well paying service. Only doctors who have passed through the cure themselves, that is, who have been patients in a Keeley Institute, are allowed to work for the Keeley Company. It is the best doctors who have been addicted to the use of liquors and drugs, and therefore led to go to a Keeley Institute to get cured.

Their excessive duties and hard work led them to drink to excess or to use drugs. After being cured they were so enthusiastic as to desire to enter the work. Not one doctor in one thousand, who has been cured in a Keeley Institute can find employment with the Keeley Company, however, because there are only about fifty institutes in the various states. But almost all desire to work for the Keeley Company.

The salaries are liberal and the work is agreeable. Doctors find so much satisfaction in doing this kind of work, where they see so many thousands of cures effected; no failures at all. Of course, some men, who possess few brains, go back to drinking after being cured; but such men make failures of everything. They are not to be counted. Over 90 per cent of the Keeley Graduates keep their cures. The other few prefer the other kind of a life. The Keeley Cure does not give a man brains.

A few years ago doctors laughed at the Keeley Cure. Nowadays, Minnesota doctors not only send their patients to the Minneapolis Keeley Institute, but large numbers of them have taken the cure which they prescribe for others.

Imitators have ruined many homes, and those interested should beware of them. Explanatory literature will be sent any who will write to the Keeley Institute, Tenth street south and Park avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

A Sample at Hand.

It was at an open-air meeting in a village near Exeter that a well known speaker was holding forth.

"Men!" he shouted, "what we want, and what we are going to have, is free land. We want the land for the people. Free land, men, we want, and we are going to have free land!"

Just then a large piece of earth landed on the speaker's eye, and while he was removing the clod a voice yelled out:

"There's a bit of Devonshire to begin with!"—Tit-Bits.

"REMEMBER THE GRADES"

GOVERNOR LIND'S REMINDER OF THE PEOPLES' SLOGAN.

Collapse of the Republican Movement to Discredit Minnesota's Wheat Crop—Republican Crippling of the Dairy and Food Department — Vice Chairman Stone's Sub-Committee Appointments. State and National Potpourri—The Ohio Democrats—Mr. Towne's Home Coming—He May Return With Senator Jones - Congressman Fletcher as a Single-Taser—Emperor McKinley and "Lord North" Hanna—Note and Comment of the Week.

Reform Press Bureau.
St. Paul, Sept. 4, 1899.

The campaign slogan, "Remember the Grades," has rung out again all over the state, in the notice Governor Lind felt impelled to take, of false charges of partisanship in the grain department in his reply to The Pioneer Press.

The opportunity was, to be sure, afforded by The Pioneer, but its attack was only a part of the set purpose of the Twin City Republican press to discredit the administration, which it would do, even though it injured the whole credit of Minnesota in its base partisan purpose. From the moment that Gov. Lind's purpose of carrying out the reforms on the pledge of which be was elected, was apparent, that press seized on the changes necessary to carry out those pledges, namely, the retirement of those responsible for past administration, (they being Republicans in every instance) to raise the cry that partisanship was to rule, regardless of the qualifications of the men selected in the places of those retired. In each and every selection made, from the time of Clausen's retirement, strict attention has been given to the qualifications of the appointees. The general public is well aware that signally able men, men of character for honesty as well as ability, but more than all, men in sympathy with the purposes of the administration, have been called to the tasks by Governor Lind. Absolutely the only grounds of complaint are that other than Republicans have been selected. The theory that only men of that political faith can be found to inspect and weigh or judge grain, is simply nonsense.

The partisan cry also was used, and will be used, for another purpose, namely to hide the basely partisan use to which the Republicans all these years prostituted the grain department. Some of this, and especially the nepotism, or appointment of relatives, has been pointed out. More is coming, and soon. Suffice it to say, that the grain department, as the list of office holders and Republican workers will show, has simply been a Republican machine, and if the complete evidence does not also prove that it has been prostituted to the interests of the grain gamblers, many will be, for the good name of the state, agreeably disappointed.

"Remember the Grades," covers all the forms of wrongdoing of which our producers have complained for years—short weights, excessive dockage, arbitrary change of grades, (confessed to by Clausen), and especially the evils and outrages of the "mixing houses," which were so forcibly presented by Governor Lind. The people needed no re-assurance from Governor Lind that he remembers, and will continue to "Remember the Grades," but the people can show their appreciation of such reassurance by loyally and cordially approving and upholding this great work of his hands, and this they are doing all over the state.

While we "Remember the Grades," we are also called on to remember the late Republican legislature in its refusal to make adequate appropriations for maintenance of the Dairy and Food department, as a result of which neglect, which was chiefly because the department had passed out of Republican control, Dairy Commissioner Bowler is obliged constantly to reduce operations of the department. The withdrawal of the Minneapolis office is such enforced economy and the application of business principles. It appears that the department, as has formerly been the case, has been four months in collecting the fees due in May, at an expense of $400, to collect about $800. This was not business. But the appropriations do not afford maintaining the Minneapolis department, and the most that can be done is to keep inspectors there daily, where they can be constantly consulted; the dairymen can also reach the St. Paul department by telephone. Commissioner Bowler states that dairymen can send samples to be tested, and there is no necessity for coming to St. Paul, also that probably arrangements can be made next May for receiving the inspection dues at Minneapolis. Meanwhile, as Minnesota is a big state, all the resources which the scanty provision of the Republican legislation afford are needed elsewhere, since a considerable portion of the state has heretofore been absolutely neglected. The department is doing grand work, but is curtailed at every point by inadequate appropriations. The immense importance the dairy interest has become is shown in the following summary:

Number of creameries reporting	673
Number of creamery patrons	53,320
Capital invested	$2,700,000
Cows supplying milk	400,000
Milk received in 1898, pounds	1,382,718,000
Butter made in 1898, pounds	62,849,000
Butter shipped from state in 1898, pounds	50,000,000
Gross receipts in 1898	$10,370,000
Operating expenses in 1898	$1,094,500
Paid patrons in 1898	$8,546,400

The people will hold the Republican party to a strict accountability for crippling this interest.

Vice Chairman Stone of the Democratic national committee has announced the sub-committees provided for at the July meeting. The appointments are especially strong. The executive committee is headed by Hon. J. G. Johnson of Kansas, whom Minnesotans know so favorably, while Hon. John R. McLean of Ohio heads the ways and means committee, and Hon. Clark Howell of Atlanta is chairman of the Press committee. The other personnel of the committees is exceedingly strong. Of course Chairman James K. Jones is ex-officio chairman of all. The committees will probably meet at Chicago as soon as Mr. Bryan returns from California. Senator Jones wrote last from Glasgow, in the most encouraging strain as to his improving health.

Cleveland (O.) coal barons are in the saddle with a $60,000,000 combine. Cleveland should send for young Mayor Gray.

This is Minnesota week. While officials are off for San Francisco to prepare for reception of the Thirteenth the "home folks" are at the fair.

The returning soldier boys are being heard from on Imperialism. The intelligent rank and file, as fast as interviewed, are found almost to a man opposed to the armed conquest of the Philippines.

Mexico, by aid of a gold bond loan, has increased business activity, the same as large gold product, from Klondike, has aided to set things going in better shape in the United States. Both have added to the money supply, and stimulated business in both countries. Mexico continues to do her business with silver, in fact does two dollars of business with every dollar she gets of gold. And the republican will credit Mexico's prosperity straight up to McKinley.

Minneapolis Tribune:—"The war should have been ended ere this, and would have been had enough men been sent to the Philippines under competent leadership. Those who are responsible for the dragging out of the war are incurring a fearful responsibility."

But what of the responsibility for causing the useless war? What does The Tribune say to that?

National Watchman:—"In 1860 the old Whig party lost its life on account of its double dealing, and the Democratic party went to defeat."

And you are right. There must be no step backward.

The first of the Filipinos, the McKinley crop of new America citizens who are to flock here to cheapen labor, have arrived, admitted by the McKinley commissioner, one renegade Powderly. The first installment is sixty, but a thousand times sixty may be expected, as soon as the McKinley policy ripens. Labor day demonstration this year gives this Filipino feature attention. In former years Chinese labor has cut a figure. Filipino importations will cut more, because, when made American citizens, how are you going to keep them out?

Carpenters and silversmiths are in the first landings of McKinley's Filipinos, here beginning the introduction of "cheap labor" from our colonies.

Ohio Democrats fulfilled every prediction made that they would act wisely and take no step backwards. The platform is most admirable, likewise the candidate, McLean, whose success was long forecast. The following message was wired Mr. McLean from St. Paul:

"Minnesota's regenerated Democracy congratulates that of Ohio on platform and candidate. You must win in November, as Minnesota, in 1898, overturned 40 years of unbroken Republican rule. And we believe Ohio will do so."

Fifty mid-road Populists in Iowa have met and placed a Barker and Donnelly ticket in the field. Assistant Republicans come high, but they have to have 'em.

William Heanery Eustis told Mayor Gray, the other day, what, if he were governor, he would do about the return of the Thirteenth. But William Henery isn't. In fact he's not. Another's it. That's it. 'Tis fit.

Congressman Fletcher of Hennepin, may be said to be a single taser. He has been east for weeks, and found there but a single prominent Republican opposed to the McKinley Philippine policy. He returned to Minneapolis, and bought a single Thirteenth badge. Many thought that Fletcher would be a single termer, but he slipped through the gimlet hole. Plenty are ready to put up good money now that he has not a single chance of the third term. Nor is this singular.

Hon. C. A. Towne is expected soon from Europe, and it is understood that he will take part in the great campaigns of Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky. He may possibly return with Senator Jones. The latter was last heard from at Glascow and his health was excellent.

On the day that Emperor McKinley announced his Napoleonic purpose of conquest of the Philippines, the New England peace convention was in session in New England, with 3,000 delegates. In that mighty presence a speaker declared that had Admiral Dewey retired from his quarter deck, upon the betrayal of the Filipinos, he would have won plaudits of the world greater than those he enjoyed from his destruction of the Spanish fleet at Manila. Another speaker declared that it was with shame and humiliation that Americans confess that in McKinley they have set up a new George the Third, and a Lord North in the name and fame of Hanna. And both sentiments are correct.

AIDS DREYFUS' SIDE

MAJOR HARTMANN FINISHES HIS TESTIMONY.

Dreyfusards Are Now Confident That the Prisoner Will Be Acquitted—Hartmann's Testimony Stands Practically Uncontradicted — Expert Shows That Dreyfus Could Not Have Written the Bordereau—The Principal Witness Is a Civil Engineer Who Was Formerly in the Army.

Rennes, Sept. 4.—Elation is the only word that expresses the feelings of the Dreyfusards after Saturday's proceedings. The tide has turned at least they say, and Dreyfus cannot be condemned after the evidence given Saturday morning.

Maj. Hartman, of the artillery, occupied half the session with the conclusion of his expert testimony to the effect that Dreyfus, as an artillery officer, would not have displayed such ignorance regarding guns and brakes as was shown in the bordereau, while the other subjects of the bordereau were matters upon which any officer could inform himself. The major's testimony practically stood uncontested, as neither Gen. Deloye nor Gen. Mercier, who replied, refuted any material point therein.

M. Havel, a member of the institute, then entered upon the grammatical aspect of the bordereau and in vigorous but eloquent language devoted himself to showing that the construction of the bordereau bristled with strong, and, in his opinion, conclusive marks of Esterhazy's handiwork, while the phraseology bore no resemblance to Dreyfus' style.

Then came the leading witness of the day, M. De Gond-Lamotte, a probationer contemporaneously with Dreyfus, who is now a civil engineer, and so has no reason to fear the wrath of the military clique. The witness opened by declaring that, despite the fact he had a brother in the garrison at Rennes, he came to tell what he knew in favor of Dreyfus, and he proceeded to make a statement, which, according to the Dreyfusards, practically decides the case. First he recalled the fact that a circular was sent to the probationers on May 14, 1894, informing them that they must not go to the maneuvers, thus showing that the man who wrote the bordereau in August, and said: "I am going to the maneuvers," could not be Dreyfus. The witness then pointed out that none of the ministers, who, he believed, acted in good faith, were informed of the existence of this circular, which, he declared, "I consider a vital point in the case. This circular," he continued, "shatters the prosecution because, after May 17, Dreyfus could not say 'I am going to the maneuvers,' for then he knew he would not go, while prior to May 17 he could not have known the five documents comprised in the bordereau."

M. De Gond-Lamotte then brought out another strong point. Alluding to the modifications of the disposition concerning the troops, he said the writer used the term "New plan."

"Now," said the witness, "it has been impressed upon you that on Oct. 15 a circular was sent out from the war ministry containing those very words, and that, therefore, the writer of the bordereau must have been an officer of the ministry. But one thing has struck me — who sent out that circular? It was the third bureau, the chief of which was Lieut. Col. Du Paty de Clam, who had had the bordereau in his hands for the previous twenty days."

M. De Gond-Lamotte by this intended to show that Du Paty de Clam purposely used the words "new plan" in the circular ordered by what the witness described as "arguing in a circular to back up his contention that an officer of the ministry wrote the bordereau and that that officer was Dreyfus."

Gen. Roget then rose to reply to M. De Gond-Lamotte, but found he had caught a tartar. He did not succeed in shaking the witness' testimony, while M. De Gond-Lamotte took the unprecedented course of actually questioning Gen. Roget and getting the better of him once or twice. Finally, on Roget declaring that Dreyfus might have written "I am going to the maneuvers" because he could have asked special permission, which is invariably granted, M. Demange asked him if there was any proof that Dreyfus did ask such permission. To this Roget replied, "I don't know; no trace has been found of his application." This answer brought a chorus of "Ohs" from the audience, because had Dreyfus asked, traces would have been forthcoming. Roget then said that Dreyfus might have asked verbally, in which case no trace of his application could be found. "Quite so," rejoined M. Demange, "but the head of the bureau could be asked whether any such request was made."

This practically ended the session, which was one of the most interesting and undeniably the most favorable to Dreyfus yet held.

Another Killing in Kentucky.

London, Ky., Sept. 4. — A report is current that Deputy Sheriff Lewis of Manchester was killed in Clay county. Several weeks ago in Manchester, Deputy Stubblefield was shot by Mart Smith, then the latter, escaping capture, went to his home and sent word to the county officials that he would never attend court alive, therefore it would be fatal for persons to attempt to take him. Lewis went to serve papers on him and he was shot dead as he approached Smith's house. If this report is true this makes the third killing in Clay county within the week.

Cuban Troops Are All Paid.

Washington, Sept. 4.—Adjt. Gen. Corbin received a cable message from Gen. Brooke at Havana, stating that the Cuban army had been paid, and of the $3,000,000 set apart for that purpose, there was on hand a balance of $400,000.

Custer's Nephew Fatally Wounded.

Toledo, Ohio, Sept. 4.—Charles Custer, nephew of the late Gen. Custer, was fatally shot at Monroe, Mich., by a neighbor, John Russell. It was accidental.

KRUGER IN PLIANT MOOD.

Agrees to a Conference With the British Representative.

Pretoria, Sept. 4.—The reply of the Transvaal government to the imperial government's last dispatch has been received by Conyngham Greene, the British agent here. It is understood that this government is willing to meet the other side in a conference at Cape Town as suggested, and to explain the working of the new franchise law. The Transvaal government is also willing to receive friendly suggestions of the imperial government. A more hopeful feeling prevails here.

London, Sept. 4.—The standard and Diggers' News has received cablegram from its Johannesburg office saying that a German corps of 900 strong has been formed there to co-operate with the Boers in the event of war with Great Britain. The dispatch adds that the Boers could mobilize 20,000 men in three days, while the Orange Free State could muster 10,000 men in the same period. Continuing, the dispatch says:

"Mr. Chamberlain's reply upholding the suzerainty of Great Britain was denounced by the raad with a demonstration which unmistakably indicated the intention of the Transvaal to repudiate Great Britain's pretensions."

EXODUS AND PANIC.

People at Johannesburg Besiege the Railways in Trying to Get Away.

London, Sept. 4.—The Johannesburg correspondent of the Daily Mail paints a gloomy and pitiable picture of the condition of things there and says:

"It is almost a complete exodus and panic. Business is paralyzed; prices of foodstuffs are rapidly rising; many houses are empty and others are occupied by people who do not pay rent, landlords being glad to have them as occupants to insure some kind of protection for the property. The situation is intense and bankruptcy and starvation are staring the people in the face. Another fortnight of suspense will result in a complete collapse. The banks are thronged with people anxious to withdraw their gold and the railways are besieged by those who wish to get away."

A VESSEL DISABLED.

Meets With an Accident Which Kills a Man.

New York, Sept. 4. — The steamer Caribbee arrived from Barbadoes yesterday with thirty-six of the thirty-nine passengers of the Lamphere & Holt steamer Wadsworth, from Rio for New York, which put into Barbadoes with engines disabled. The head of the low pressure steam chest was blown out, instantly killing Archibald Thomas, the chief officer. The Wadsworth drifted along for several days until the engineer's department succeeded in getting steam on the boiler. The engines were started and would run for an hour or so at a time and then stop only to be again repaired and started. In this manner the Wadsworth arrived at Barbadoes and transferred her passengers to the Caribbee. Among the passengers was William G. Buchanan, United States minister to Argentina.

CALLS OTIS A PERJURER.

Charges Are Filed by Counsel for Capt. Carter.

Chicago, Sept. 4.—The Times-Herald says that charges of perjury and subornation of perjury have been filed against Gen. Elwell S. Otis, commander of the American army in the Philippines, with President McKinley by Frank P. Blair, one of the counsel for Capt. Oberlin M. Carter, late government engineer at Savannah. Counsel Blair declares that at an early date he will also file charges of perjury and subornation of perjury against Judge Advocate Col. Thomas H. Barr with President McKinley. Col. Barr appeared in the famous trial of Carter for the government. Gen. Otis was president of the court-martial.

JUGGED IN BLOCKS OF FIVE.

Fourteen Alleged Negro Rioters Are Convicted at Darien, Ga.

Darien, Ga., Sept. 4. — In the riot cases two blocks of five and one extra rioter was tried. Of the first block four were convicted and one acquitted, and in the second block four were convicted, with a mistrial as to the fifth, a woman. The solitary rioter, who demanded severance, was convicted, making fourteen convicted in two days. There are still about forty cases to be heard. Perfect quiet prevails about the town, which is still guarded by four troops of cavalry.

PROTECTING ITS FLOUR.

The Pillsbury-Washburn Company Sues Cincinnati Dealers.

Cincinnati, Sept. 4.—Nineteen prominent dealers in flour in this city have been sued in the United States court for $5,000 damages each by the Pillsbury-Washburn Flour Mills Company (limited) of Minneapolis, a corporation under the laws of Great Britain. The charge is that the defendants have been selling an inferior flour bearing the label of flour manufactured by the plaintiff, thus injuring the reputation of plaintiffs and defrauding the public.

Springfield, Mo., Sept. 4.—Gen. C. M. Clay's matrimonial experience has been duplicated, or at least partly so, in Taney county. Col. A. G. She is the daughter of John Garrett, a Taney county farmer. She is fifteen years old. Col. Kissee is seventy and is a celebrated mountain character.

BANDIT TOWN FALLS

AMERICANS WIN A TELLING VICTORY IN NEGROS.

Stronghold on a Hilltop Is Stormed and Taken—The Sixth Infantry Charges Up the Steep and Exposed Road—Natives Roll Big Bowlders Down Upon Their Plucky Assailants—Filipino Official at Manila Is Accused of Blackmail—Aguinaldo Announces Plan for Freeing Spanish Prisoners.

Manila, Sept. 4.—Argogula, the most impregnable stronghold of the bands which have been destroying plantations and levying tribute on the people of Negros, was taken Tuesday by the Sixth infantry, under Lieut. Col. Byrne. The only means of reaching the town was up an almost perpendicular hill covered with dense shrubbery and 1,000 feet high. The Americans accomplished this under fire, and an officer and several men were hit and rocks were rolled down upon them. The native strength was estimated at 400. Many of the insurgents were wounded and captured and twenty-one were killed. The American forces captured a quantity of stores and destroyed the fortifications.

The shipping commissioner of Manila, a Filipino, hitherto in high standing, has been arrested, charged with appropriating half of the first month's salary and levying monthly thereafter on assessment from all the native sailors shipped from this port. It is represented that he held a commission in the insurgent army and was raising funds for the insurrection, but it is suspected that his operations were merely private blackmail. The information resulting in his arrest reached the port captain and chief of police through a sailor who is not in sympathy with the insurrection.

The Official Gazette, published at Tarlac, which has been received here, contains an order by Aguinaldo assembling the Spanish civil prisoners and sick soldiers at the posts of San Fernando, Calon and Dagupan for repatriation. The order stipulates that vessels calling must fly the Spanish or Red Cross flags. The Spanish commissioner will ask Maj. Gen. Otis for permission to send ships.

Otis Tells of the Victory.

Washington, Sept. 4.—Gen. Otis has cabled the war department a dispatch which he received from Gen. Hughes, commanding the forces at Iloilo. Gen. Hughes said:

"Lieut. Col. Byrne on Aug. 31 destroyed Argogula, the most important bandit stronghold, killing twenty-one, wounding many, capturing large quantities of supplies, a complete outfit of reloading shells, bolos, spears, etc. The fact was remarkable, as the town is accessible only by a road, an almost perpendicular slope, constantly under fire for 1,000 feet; one officer and two men were struck by bowlders rolled down on them, but not seriously hurt; no casualties are reported; the bandit strength was 400."

FILIPINOS ARE SHORT.

Great Scarcity of Rations and Ammunition.

Manila, Sept. 4.—Many Spanish prisoners are escaping from the Filipinos and bringing into the American lines stories of hard treatment. They agree that the Filipinos are exceedingly short of rations and that a large section of their troops is reduced to the use of home-made black powder. The natives are trying every scheme to get food and munitions from Manila. Daily arrests are made for attempts to smuggle contraband of war through the American lines. In one case a Casco with a cargo of bamboo poles was overhauled and the poles were found full of rice.

The insurgents have a wholesome respect for the British on account of several threats of British warships to bombard their towns unless the rights of British subjects are respected. Two British vessels, the Laeson and the Nero, were driven by stress of weather into the harbor of Dagupan, the northern terminus of the Dagupan railway. The crews were imprisoned, but on their protesting that they were British subjects the insurgent authorities permitted one man, Edwards, to come to Manila, promising to release the crew of the Laeson if Edwards secured from the British consul at Manila a statement establishing the nationality of the crew. A similar concession was made to the crew of the Nero. Edwards says he saw several American prisoners who were better fed than the Spaniards or the Filipino soldiers. Moreover, they were not compelled to work as the Spanish prisoners were.

INVESTIGATION AT OSHKOSH.

Insurance Companies Demand an Inquiry Into the Many "Total Losses."

Oshkosh, Wis., Sept. 4. — The Paine Lumber company's warehouse fire, which resulted in a total loss of that structure and its entire contents, compelling insurance companies to pay $46,000, has led to an investigation of the condition of the fire department and also of the water service. There have been so many "total losses" fires in Oshkosh recently that the adjusters have demanded an inquiry which the local board of insurance underwriters will make. The investigating committee will be appointed early this week and the investigation begun. Insurance men say that if there were not another dollar of loss this year the premiums in Oshkosh would fall $25,000 short of paying the losses.

LOVER MURDERED.

His Fate Is Due to the Fact That He Courted a Girl.

Chicago, Sept. 4. — Walter Koller, a young man whose home is in Hermann, Mo., was stabbed to death in his boarding house by two unknown men who, so far, have eluded arrest. Young Koller has been in Chicago only a few weeks, having secured a position as bookkeeper for the Griffin Car Wheel works. The only idea that can be formed as to the cause of the murder is that the murderers were two young men who objected to Koller's attentions to Miss Jessie Horn of Shirley, Ill., whom he met at college. He had told his brother that two young men at the college had objected to his going with Miss Horn.

TIMBER FIRE RAGING.

A Wide Extent of Country in South Dakota Threatened.

Deadwood, S. D., Sept. 4. — A fierce timber fire is raging about ten miles south of here and threatening a wide extent of country. People have turned out from the immediate vicinity to fight the fire, but thus far the efforts have been with little success. Englewood, on the Burlington railway, is threatened with destruction and the inhabitants are trying to get their belongings to places of safety.

WARMLY GREETED

UNION VETERANS CAPTURE THE CITY OF PHILADELPHIA.

Thirtieth Annual Encampment of the G. A. R. Meets in the Quaker City—The City Gaily Decorated in Honor of the Veterans—Big Parade Will Be Reviewed by President McKinley—Arrival of Sampson's Squadron Adds Interest to the Occasion.

Philadelphia, Sept. 4.—The thirtieth annual encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic begins to-day. The vanguard of the veterans has arrived in the city and found the people with outstretched hands. Never again, perhaps, will Philadelphia be the scene of a national encampment of the G. A. R. Of the valiant men who defended the cause of the Union there remains but a remnant, and with the depletion of the ranks the welcome is the more heartfelt and enthusiastic.

Admiral Sampson, with his fleet of fighting ships, arrived here yesterday, and this event marks the beginning of the week's celebration. The city is crowded with strangers, while the incoming trains from all sections are bringing thousands upon thousands to help swell the throng. In anticipation of the coming of the host of visitors and in recognition of the patriotism of the veterans who freely offered their lives in defense of the Union Mayor Ashbridge issued a proclamation in which he recommended the veterans to the "loyal patriotic interests of the people," urging the decoration of stores and dwellings in every street in the city. The city has borne its share of the work and the citizens of Philadelphia, by contributions of cash and in welcoming banners, have shown their interest in what will be the greatest reunion.

The route of the veterans' parade, which takes place on Tuesday, is one solid blaze of color and light. Not a building but has its front encased in the red, white and blue. The avenue of fame, which extends from Walnut to Cherry streets on Broad street, a distance of five blocks, with the city hall as the center, is the most magnificent piece of decoration ever attempted in this city. The big parade will be in ten divisions. Post No. 1, Rockford, Ill., the oldest post in the Grand Army, will head the line. As the veterans pass around the city hall they will be reviewed by President McKinley, who is expected to arrive here to-night, accompanied by Secretaries Gage and Root and Postmaster General Smith. There will be over 42,000 men in line.

A question of absorbing interest to G. A. R. veterans which will be decided during the encampment, is the election of a commander-in-chief and other officers. Two candidates prominent in the field are Albert M. Shaw, of Joe Spratt Post, Watertown, N. Y., and Judge L. Baschleur of St. Louis. "Private" James Dalzell, of Company H, 116th Ohio, is also a candidate. Others urged by their friends are Col. W. C. Johnson of Cincinnati, acting commander-in-chief, and Brig. Gen. Charles Miller of Venango, Pa. The naval veterans will enjoy the distinction of giving the first street parade during the encampment. Theirs will take place this afternoon and will be an unique feature of the demonstration. The old salts who fought under Farragut will tramp shoulder to shoulder with the younger veterans of the Spanish-American war. Next Friday the naval parade will take place. Admiral Sampson's fleet will be anchored in the Delaware river opposite the city, and a long line of vessels will pass around the fighting ships. President McKinley and cabinet officers will review the warships from the revenue cutter Gresham.

THE RED SHIRTS.

Convicts Who Wear Them in the Penitentiaries of California.

There are men in the penitentiaries of California who are favored with red shirts, but they are not made particularly happy thereby.

When a convict has once worn the crimson shirt, he hopes as ardently as a convict can hope for anything that the warden will never make him wear it again. It means that he has tried to escape and failed.

But that is not all. Henceforth he is a degraded man in prison circles. His time credits are gone. Solitary confinement, dungeons and bread and water may be his portion. He is watched, suspected by the officers, pointed out and "explained" to visitors and newcomers. Among the 700 convicts in the jute mill his red back may be distinguished at a glance. If he be away from there a moment, the guards know it. Then the prison bell rings, the officers assemble, bloodhounds are unchained, and the hunt begins.

Some of the red skirters at San Quentin are among the most daring fellows that ever scaled a prison wall, and every man of them has run the gantlet of guard and Gatling gun. Anybody in stripes who breaks for liberty is liable to be riddled with lead within 60 seconds. The convicts know this, but they also know that beyond the gray stone walls there are green hills and deep ravines and—possibly—freedom. The man who is sentenced to die on a prison cot is willing to stake his life for liberty. His days and nights are spent preparing for the game. If he wins, the "cons" he leaves behind are jubilant, and many are the tales of pluck and luck they will tell in memoriam. As a rule, no class of people stand by each other like veteran "cons."—San Francisco Call.

THE SQUIRE'S DILEMMA.

He Adjourned the Case to Find Out Where He Was At.

A justice of the peace in one of the west end boroughs issued a warrant for the arrest of a west end woman for slander. Squire S. J. White happened to be present at the hearing. The prosecutor testified that the defendant had called her an "old virago" and that she had added, "I don't know what that means, but whatever it is that's what you are." The witness admitted that she did not know what the meaning of the word was, either, but she knew it had no good meaning or the other wouldn't have made use of it.

"No matter what it means," said the squire, who is an intensely patriotic American, "it's a foreign name, and she had no business calling you it. I'll fine her for it."

"Squire," whispered Squire White in his ear, "you have no jurisdiction in slander suits. They must be entered in court."

"Well, I'll hold her for court, then," the squire declared.

"But there's no law under which you can do that," he was told.

"Well, I'll hold her anyhow," he replied, "and test the constitutionality of the act."

"But there is no act," persisted Squire White.

"Get out of this office!" commanded the squire, turning on him. "Do you think I'm going to allow you to come in here and learn me the law?"

"You uns go, too," he said, turning to the women. "You're both released on your own rec-ogg-ni-zance until this court finds out what the darnation to do with this case."—Pittsburg News.

A Land of Many Thirsts.

The Egyptian never travels without his goolah. He fills it with filtered water and in the morning can command a pint or more of water cooled by evaporation through the unglazed clay. This precious fluid he does not waste on unsatisfied thirst. Taking off the long white wrap and the piece of cloth that covers his head during sleep, the native pours the water over his head, neck and hands. The European, with all his instinct for cleanliness, seeks first to relieve his overmastering thirst.

There are in Egypt as many thirsts as plagues, but the dust thirst is the worst. Every pore is sealed; the throat is a lump of dry clay, and one feels what it must be to be a mummy.—London Standard.

Her First Thought.

Mildred—Have you ever thought that your last moment had come? What an awful feeling it is that comes over one at such a time!

Gertrude—Yes, I had that experience once when I was out riding with a fellow and his horse started to run away. It seemed as if we would certainly be dashed to pieces.

Mildred—And what was the first thing you thought of when death seemed to stare you in the face?

Gertrude—A hole in the toe of my left stocking. I have never since then ran the risk of being found dead in such a condition.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Power of Deep Sea Waves.

In a high gale, mile long waves, 200 feet from trough to trough and 40 feet high, roar along the sea at 20 miles an hour with a weight of 60,000 pounds for every foot of their length. Upon these a 600 foot ship, such as the New York or the Paris, will rise like a floating leaf, but if the ill-fated ship drifts upon a lee shore blows of 100,000 tons, delivered with remorseful fury, crush it like an eggshell.

"Let us try to make our lives like songs, brave, cheery, tender and true, that shall sing themselves into other lives and so help to lighten burdens and cares."

TAINTED THE SPRING

HOW WHISKY GAP, WY., GOT ITS PECULIAR NAME.

The Frontiersmen's Fable That the Mountain Stream Was a Fountain of Youth Dispelled by the True Story of the Blending Process.

One of the historic places in the west is Whisky Gap, Wy. The old time dwellers of mountain and plain—the men who "fought Indians and hunted buffalo out west" during the overland train days of the early sixties—have shrugged their shoulders at the mention of Whisky Gap for nearly 40 years. This is the place, according to their belief, where real "firewater" gushed out of the rocks in a beautiful mountain spring to quench the thirst of a whole company of Uncle Sam's trained Indian fighters. "It was nothing but pure spring water," they say; "a veritable fountain of youth."

Colonel C. C. Contant, the author of a history of Wyoming and the pioneer days of the west, has learned the true story of Whisky Gap to be somewhat different from the fountain of youth fable. According to historical record of the early days along the government overland trail, Whisky Gap received its name in 1862 during the building of the overland stage route from Denver to Salt Lake City and the Pacific coast.

The people of Denver had long been working to secure the regular overland stage route, then connecting the east and the west. In 1862 Ben Holliday, a veteran stage man, became proprietor of the great overland line, and he agreed upon a route running through Denver to the west. He decided to discontinue that part of the road running up the North Platte and the Sweetwater rivers and across South Pass, Wy. The many Indian difficulties experienced on this route were the inducements to abandon it.

The new trail led by way of Julesburg, Colo., to Denver, and on over the established wagon road to Fort Lupton, and north across Laramie plains, then due west through Bridge Pass, Wy., joining the old trail leading across the country to the Pacific coast. The change was made during the summer of 1862. All the rolling stock, horses and other property of the company were gathered at the station just above Devil's Gate, in central Wyoming. Company A of the Eleventh Ohio cavalry, with Major O'Farrell in command, was the detailed escort at at the time.

During the first day the long line of coaches, wagons, horses and mules made 11 miles from the station where the property had been gathered. The route chosen was directly south from the Sweetwater river. The camp selected was in a gap in the mountains where there were a fine spring and plenty of wood for cooking purposes.

Shortly after going into camp the major discovered that quite a number of his soldiers were intoxicated, and he at once sent for Lieutenant W. H. Brown, who was officer of the day, and informed him of the condition of many of the men and gave it as his opinion that some one was selling whisky in the camp. The command was doing escort duty not only for stage stock and stores, but also for a number of emigrants who had availed themselves of the opportunity for safe conduct over the plains.

Lieutenant Brown received orders to search all wagons, and if he should discover whisky to destroy it. Taking a corporal and three or four men, he commenced the search for the contraband article and found at last a barrel of whisky in an emigrant wagon. The officer ordered his men to roll the barrel out of the wagon, knock in the head and empty the contents on the ground. This was done, but it chanced that the spot where the whisky was emptied was just above the spring, and the fiery liquid went pouring down into the water supply of the camp.

The soldiers saw what was going on, and they rushed forward with cups, canteens, buckets and camp kettles to save what they could of the coveted "spirits." Many a man stooped over the spring and drank almost without breathing until he was drunk.

One soldier who had succeeded in getting a full canteen from the spring paid his respects to Major O'Farrell at the headquarters tent, assuring his commanding officer, with maudlin mien and many a "hic," that that was the finest spring he had ever seen and the very best water he had ever tasted.

Major O'Farrell was apprehending an attack from the Indians that night, and the condition of his men fairly disheartened him. He saw at a glance that even a small band of savages could make a successful raid on his camp, consequently the sober and less intoxicated men were kept on the alert all night. Fortunately, no Indians put in an appearance, and by morning the debauched men had slept off their intoxication.

Thus the gap in the mountains where the camp was made received the name of Whisky Gap. For many years it was the favorite camping place for the more credulous of the old freighters and emigrants of the "trail days," but the little spring was never a "fountain of youth" as it had been in the old days, when "firewater" gushed up out of the rocks to quench the thirst of a company of United States soldiers.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

As He Put It.

Planche told this story of an Irishman who was driving a mail coach. He observed him to be tying his neck up in the voluminous folds of his comforter and remarked, "You seem to be taking very good care of yourself, my friend."

"Och, to be sure, I am, sir," answered the driver, "what's all the world to a man when his wife's a widdy!"

EFFECTS OF CHLOROFORM.

Such That Burglars Would Not Use It on Sleeping Persons.

That burglars of the more advanced type can and do use chloroform in the commission of their crimes is a belief widely held and rarely contradicted, and yet there is, curiously, little foundation for it. Indeed, those who are most familiar with the administration and effects of anaesthetics assert that there is no foundation at all for it except in the imagination of sensational writers and in the needs of people whose losses cannot safely be explained by statements of fact. The question has been raised recently by several robberies in which chloroform is said to have been employed, and opinions of the experts are strongly against the possibility of such use. One of the physicians interviewed is quoted as saying:

"As far as known chloroform and ether have never taken effect on a healthy sleeping person without that person knowing it. Both of these anaesthetics are at first stimulating and invigorating in their effect and will arouse a sleeping person. The entire system is excited, and the heart beats violently and fast. The use of either chloroform or ether or any other anaesthetic by burglars is absurd. It frequently takes physicians with their various appliances from 10 to 15 minutes to put a person under the influence of either of these anaesthetics, and often a patient will become so stimulated and active before the effect is secured that it requires several strong men to hold him."

The idea that the mere introduction of chloroform into a room would cause unconsciousness was derided as absurd. Even if doors and windows were air tight it would take several gallons of either anaesthetic to so fill a room with the heavy fumes as to affect a sleeper on a bed of average height. And the first effect would be, not deep sleep, but excited wakefulness. The chances are, then, that when anybody claims to have been chloroformed by burglars there is something queer about the case.—New York Times.

CAMEL'S HAIR BRUSHES.

The Term a Misnomer Now, For Squirrels Furnish the Hair.

The camel's hair brush used by artists has nothing of bactria in it. There was a time when real camel's hair was used for this purpose. The ship of the desert, however, has long been superseded by the comely squirrel. Not only is squirrel's hair very much less costly, but it is better, softer, more pliable and more durable. At the present day it is doubtful if you could find a bushel of camel's hair in all the brush factories in the land. However, there is no cause for fear that the graceful little squirrel will be exterminated. It is the European squirrel that furnishes the hair for the brushes, the covering of the American squirrel being too furry and soft for the purpose.

It is somewhat the same way with the coarser brushes. The bristles most prized come from Russia and India, and the wild hogs of Germany furnish their quota. The great American hog runs to fat and puts forth practically no bristles. In the countries above mentioned the collecting of bristles is quite an important industry among the peasantry of certain districts. In comparatively few cases are they stripped from the dead body of the hog. The usual method is to discover the haunts of the animals and to gather the bristles from the trees against which they rub themselves.—New York Sun.

The Woman and the Car.

It's a strange thing about women and cable cars when the time comes for them to part. A man or a boy will just naturally drop off the car and start along the street as if nothing had happened, but let a woman attempt to emulate his example and sad work does she make of it. Even a rainy day costume doesn't help her out much, for skirts have little to do with her bungling method of leaving the car. It is a matter that cannot be explained so easily as can her inability to throw a ball, for in the latter case anatomy is at fault.

Sometimes she puzzles over it herself, but in the majority of cases she gives the matter no thought, but simply rises, grasps the railing, and, whether the car is at a standstill or in motion, steps off backward. Some one should be able to offer a reasonable explanation of the very apparent fact that her impulse in that case is to do the incorrect thing. Even when she carefully studies the subject and trains herself to face in the same direction in which the car is moving it never "seems natural" to her.—New York Sun.

The Flank March.

"Stonewall died," ran one of the most popular fables, "and two angels came down from heaven to take him back with them. They went to his tent. He was not there. They went to the hospital. He was not there. They went to the outposts. He was not there. They went to the prayer meeting. He was not there. So they had to return without him, but when they reported that he had disappeared they found that he had made a flank march and reached heaven before them."—"Stonewall Jackson," by Lieutenant Colonel G. F. R. Henderson.

No Reflection Intended.

This was overheard on a cable car the other morning. An overslender woman climbed in and took a place on an otherwise vacant seat. The still slumbrous conductor took the quarter that she handed him, and before he rang up the fare, "One?" he asked absentmindedly.

"Yes, and don't try to be funny," she snapped.—New York Sun.

The expenditures for maintaining the army in the Philippines will be far greater than originally estimated. For an army of a hundred thousand men, conservative estimates have fixed an annual appropriation of $100,000,000. But this sum will be insufficient for an army, which it is necessary to transport nearly ten thousand miles, and where unusual equipment for hospital and medical stores must be provided.

The Treasury officials accordingly are anxious to know where funds are coming from to pay the bills to be incurred by taking all the 100,000 men, as now is decided upon. If is certain that taxes of all kinds will be maintained. But now a good deal of quiet talk is heard in official circles about the probability of another bond call within a few months. This will be averted if possible, but it is not at all certain that it will not be indispensable. The war payments will show increases every month in the future.

NEW YORK WORLD.
THRICE-A-WEEK EDITION.

Practically a Daily at the Price of a Weekly.

The striking and important events of the last year have established the overwhelming value of The Thrice-a-Week World to every reader. For an almost nominal sum it has kept its subscribers informed of the progress of all our wars and, moreover, has reported them as promptly and fully as if it were a daily. With our interests still extending throughout the world, with our troops operating in the Philippines and the great Presidential campaign, too, at hand, its value is further increased.

The motto of The Thrice-a-Week World is improved. It strives each year to be better than it was the year before, and public confidence in it is shown by the fact that it now circulates more than twice as many papers every week as any other newspaper, not a daily, published in America.

We offer this unequalled newspaper and The St. Hilaire Spectator together one year for $1.65.

The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2.50.

When two miles out in the country an invoice was taken—a slight error discovered which compelled them to turn back and get their guns and the dog. This we believe is their first offense and no names will be mentioned. They returned late in the evening with seven birds.

Wheat Grades Defined.

Under the Minnesota grades adopted by the new state board of grain appeals chairman McKinnon of Crookston, anticipates "uniformity and reliability" in all wheat exported. The words in quotation are his own. He declared in an interview that he and his associates expected to maintain standards with such consistency that Minnesota wheat the world over, would be bought by grade and not by sample. The ruling grade this season, he predicts, will be No. 1 northern.

No. 1 hard Spring Wheat—No. 1 hard spring wheat must be sound, bright, well cleaned, and must be composed mostly of hard Scotish fife and weigh not less than 58 pounds to the measured bushel.

No. 1 Northern Spring Wheat—Must be sound and well cleaned, and must be composed equally of the hard and soft varieties of spring wheat, and weight not less than 57 pounds to the measured bushel.

No. 2 Northern Spring Wheat—Must be sound, reasonable clean. This grade to include all wheat not suitable for the higher grades on account of smut, barley or too much king heads, cockle and oats, or any other defects, and to weigh not less than 56 pounds to the measured bushel.

No. 3 Spring Wheat—Shall comprise all the inferior shrunken spring wheat weighing not less than 54 pounds to the measured bushel.

Note—Hard, flinty wheat, of good color, containing no appreciable admixture of soft wheat, may be admitted into the grades of No. 2 northern spring and No. 3 spring wheat, provided the test weight of the same is not more than 1 pound less than the minimum weight required by the existing rules for said grades, and provided further that such wheat is in all other respects qualified for admission into such grades.

Rejected Spring Wheat—shall include all spring wheat not fit for No 3 wheat.

Note—Wheat containing admixture of rice or goose wheat will in no case grade higher than rejected.

Note—The amount of dirt in all wheat shall be determined by the inspector.

K. O. Gigslad, justice of the peace, has been having his hands full the past week. Last Wednesday he started in selling a farm and since then he has been collecting, marrying people, stacking grain, but at 5:30 he played the role of a bold fireman and did heroic work saving two grain stacks out of three. He is at a loss to know how the fire originated, but is under the impression a tramp took shelter in the stacks last night and on arising this morning lighted his pipe and threw the match down and walked away. Mr. Gigstad gives Mr. and Mrs. W. Eikhoff and Mr. and Mrs. Wetherby credit for saving the other two stacks.

The extent of the injury done to the wheat crop in the Red River Valley by the hessian fly cannot closely be estimated, but is known to be very extensive. The territory covered extends over the greater portion of the valley. It was thought so long as no winter wheat was sown no damage was to be feared from this source. This was due to the fact that the hessian fly was double brooded so it needed the winter grain to support the second brood. Dr. Lugger of this state, however finds that that here it is single brooded. This makes it possible for it to live throughout our seasons and flourish on the grain fields.

Dr. Lugger writes that this insect "is the greatest pest we have," and the farmers will do wisely in trying to eradicate it. This is done very cheaply and easily. The simplest remedy is to plow the fields early. This is a wise action, whether any insects are found in the fields or not. Burning the stubble, while this is usually unwise, is excusable in a field insected with hessian flies. The heat of the fire is enough to destroy them.

There are very numerous parasites that destroy these insects, but it is not safe to depend on them. They may or may not appear on the scene of action in time to do any good. The one wise thing to do is to plow early.

Avoid Leaks.

The farmer who is most successful in making money off his farm is the man who looks out for little things as well as large things. Some of the most well-to-do farmers attribute their success quite as much to what they have saved as to what they have made in special ways.

The thoroughly practial and progressive farmer—the farmer who plans to make everything count—will allow no element of fertilization to go to waste about his place, because he knows that the proper use of it greatly increases his crops in quality and quantity and not to make use of it is wanton wastefullness. It is foolish to leave manure unused in the barnyard that can be converted into dollars.

The most successful farmers are those who fully understand the importance of making use of all that goes to the benefit of the farm, by rendering it more productive. They are alive to the fact that if one would make the farm pay, it has got to be fed, and they see that they cannot afford to let anything that will answer as food for it go to waste. A man cannot go on working year after year unless he is given substantial food on which to support his body while the work is being performed, and what applies to a man applies equally forcibly to a piece of land.

Feed it well and it will continue to do its share of the work well. Starve it, and it will soon become exhausted and unable to do the work demanded of it in a satisfactory manner.—The Furrow.

Why the Horse Wouldn't Start Until the Door Shut.

The London Academy prints every week one or two sketches under the title of "Things Seen," brief vignettes, drawn as often, we should say, by laymen as by professional writers. One of the recent contributors to the department, Mr. J. S. Ker, sends from Perak, in the Malay Peninsula, the following delightful fragment, calling it "A Start:"

The sun, blazing down on a racecourse, far east of Suez, and on a field of hot, excited horses and men, waiting until the eccentricities of the starter, and an even more eccentric horse combine to get us in line. The patience of the former is at last exhausted. "Bring up that horse. Come up on that beast. You'll get into trouble over this, I tell you," and so forth. The Australian lightweight replies, patiently: "I can't help it, sir. This is a cab 'orse, this 'orse is. He won't start until the door shuts—and—I haven't got a door."

'On second thought, captain,' he yelled, 'I can stand them!'"

How Successful Farmers Operate This Department of the Farm—A Few Hints as to the Care of Live Stock and Poultry.

Milk Dilution Separators.

Newspaper Bulletin No. 77, Indiana Experiment Station: Within the past few months there has been introduced to the farmers of Indiana what is termed a dilution cream separator. This is not a separator as commonly understood by dairymen, where cream is separated from milk by centrifugal force, but is a specially constructed can, usually of large size, in which cream separates from milk by rising to the surface, by the common gravity process. The principle of creaming in this can, however, differs from that usually performed in the dairy, through the mixing of water with the milk to assist the cream to rise. These specially made cans have certain peculiarities of construction and are advertised by the makers as "cream separators." The cans of different manufacturers differ in form and style, but the principal feature with all is to fill the can partly full of new warm milk and then at once add a large quantity of cold water. This of course dilutes the milk, perhaps 100 per cent. In this diluted condition, the claim of the manufacturers is, that the cream will rise more completely and rapidly than if not diluted; that in 20 to 30 minutes it will all rest on the surface of the skimmed milk, which may be drawn off from below.

In 1893 the Indiana Experiment Station for two weeks carried on an experiment on the influence of dilution of milk on efficiency of creaming. The results of this work, as published in bulletin 44 of the station, were that a greater loss of fat occurs in skim milk when dilution is practiced than with undiluted milk, that the loss is greater with cold than with warm water, and that by diluting the milk a poorer quality of skim milk for feeding is thereby produced. These results were in accordance with conclusions arrived at through similar experiments at the Vermont, Cornell, Illinois and Ontario college stations. The process of dilution was not to be recommended as a general practice.

These so-called separators are patented, and the Cornell Experiment Station at Ithaca, N. Y., has recently published a bulletin describing and illustrating eight forms of them, as described in the Patent Office Gazette. Persons interested may perhaps secure a copy of this bulletin on application. The farmers and dairymen of Indiana are advised not to purchase these cans. The price as a rule is exorbitant and the practice of dilution is undesirable. But if the farmer wishes to secure the same results advertised by the makers of these cans, he may obtain them by diluting his milk in a comparatively inexpensive, round can, such as may be secured of any reputable dairy supply house, or can be made by any good tinsmith. Such a can, however, should have a faucet in the bottom, through which the skimmed milk may be drawn. In fact, if our farmers will set their milk undiluted in deep cans—say eighteen to twenty inches deep and eight in diameter—set in cold water or cold room, they will get more satisfactory returns than when set in shallow pans or crocks.—C. S. Plumb, Director.

About the Poultry Yard.

The element of beauty should not be lost sight of in the breeding of poultry. Certainly the good-looking hen is not likely to lay any more eggs than the unsightly ons. Nevertheless, there is a real value in having a flock uniform in color and markings, and withal beautiful. The young especially are stimulated by the beauty of the fowls to take an interest in them. This interest may develop into something of value to the ones that are moved by it.

• • •

Feed up the poultry for moulting time. A well-fed flock will sometimes molt so easily that the process will be hardly noticed, and will even continue to drop a few eggs every day. It is often easy to get meat from the slaughter houses. When pigs or hogs are killed there are waste portions that may be cooked and kept for a few days. This will greatly stimulate the production of new feathers and will correspondingly relieve the strain on the system.

• • •

We notice in a poultry paper the expression of the editor, "Never, never, feed soft messes of any kind." To us this appears a rather queer suggestion. It is queer in the light of modern experience, which seems to have demonstrated that the soft mess is a great boon to the poultry, especially if they have been for months confined to a grain ration. Many of our most successful poultrymen feed soft food once a day the year round, and find it of great advantage. The writer of this always had trouble with indigestion in his fowls before he adopted the plan of giving the fowls a breakfast of cooked or scalded ground food. Since that time, a period of five years, no indigestion has appeared, and he attributes that fact entirely to the fact that the whole-grain ration was in part supplanted by a food that required less work by the digestive organs of fowls.

Milking Machine.

Conversing recently with an expert on dairy machinery, I was confirmed in the view that the "Thistle" milking machine, despite its many excellences, has a deteriorating influence on the keeping qualities of the milk. Some experiments carried out by the Highland Society of Scotland, pointed strongly in this direction, and practical users are arriving at the same conclusion, says T. Bowick of London, Eng., in Country Gentleman. One wonders whether butter particles are fractured, or how the trouble comes about. Certain it is that the "Marchland" machine, which has not apparent pulsating action, did not similarly affect the produce. I see that Rider Haggard, who is now a Norfolk country squire, in giving an address on the difficulties that surround the farmer, mentions the great trouble he has in obtaining efficient milkers, and thinks of going in for a machine. But he takes a pessimistic view of things all round. Of course the attractions of the army and police services, railways, mines and (in towns) the building trades cannot be gainsaid, when comparative wages are considered; but to assure us that none save the idle, the aged and the very young are left is an unwarranted and fabulous statement.

The King Bird and the Poultryman.

Don't allow the small boy with the squirrel rifle to go into your groves and practice his marksmanship on the King birds, says Wallace's Farmer. The question is often asked what is the best method of destroying the hawks which prove such a hindrance to the poultry raiser. The success which you meet with in destroying the hawks will be nothing to brag about. It matters not what plan you may adopt to that end. The hawk is an exceedingly wary bird, and you will spend many weary hours trying to trap him, without success. But you can enter into an alliance with the King birds, and when the hawk comes strolling your way in search of a dinner they will furnish him so much entertainment that he will forget what he came for. He will soon learn where a pair of these audacious little fighters are on guard, and will avoid the locality in his flights. The King bird kills some bees, and for that reason everybody so minded think they have a license to slay them without mercy; but bees constitute but a small portion of their subsistence, and nobody ever had a colony of bees seriously weakened by the contributions which they have levied upon it. They beat everything against hawks, and if a few families of them can be induced to make their homes in the premises no other protection is needed. The poultry raiser who sanctions the killing of the King birds on his place is depriving himself of the services of some mighty good friends.

The Old Sitter.—In the meantime the good wife had procured a few old biddies from a neighbor and set them in old barrels. We passed by them several times each day for all the long twenty-one days. We never looked about the temperature, the moisture or the ventilation. The old biddies didn't, either. They just set there and slept. The stupid things. How do they know what the temperature is? One of them is blind in one eye and has her tail feather pulled out. Four of them had sixty eggs. When they began to "pip" the old biddies woke up and said, "Chirr, chirr," with an occasional cluck. Fifty-seven chicks crawled out of those sixty eggs. The old blind hen hatched every egg and has not "crowed" about it, either. She did it with her little "hatchit."—Ex.

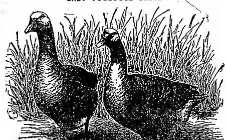
GREY TOULOUSE GEESE.



Manly Miles: These are the two largest geese known; they are very compact in body, dignified in carriage, quiet and gentle in disposition. When 3 years old and well fattened they will frequently weigh forty-five to fifty pounds per pair, sometimes reaching as high as sixty pounds per pair. They will lay from thirty to forty eggs in a season and seldom sit. Their feathers are valuable, of which they yield about half a pound at a picking. The goslings are more hardy than the common variety and grow very rapidly, frequently weighing, when 4 or 5 weeks old, from six to eight pounds each, and at 3 months from fifteen to eighteen pounds. They require no food but pasturage, except in winter. In color the geese and gander are alike, but can be distinguished by the form and voice, the gander being taller and more upright than the goose, while they have larger necks and a higher-keyed voice than the goose. The quality of the flesh is good. On this page we show a pair of gray geese of this variety.

The Commodore's Sentiments.

It was "ladies' day" at the yacht club, and a crusty old member, who hates a crowd and a fuss, was watching one of the club servants paint the "welcome board." He painted a picture of a yacht clubman, with a broad, happy grin dividing his face from ear to ear. Then he put these words beneath: "This is a pretty big board, but if we were to tell you how glad we are that ladies's day has come again, we would need a board three times as big as this one."

"Huh!" grunted the crusty member, as the man put the last curlicue to the last letter; "what makes you say that?"

POINTERS ON MOSQUITOES.

Male Is a Musician, but Female Is Bloodthirsty.

When a man hears for the first time that it is the female mosquito that does all the biting it makes him feel right glad. Further comfort is afforded by the knowledge that the male mosquito has probably the keenest musical sensibilities of any of his class of insects. He has quite a brush of hairs on his antennae, and with them he hears. Mayer stuck one of his kind on a glass plate and sounded tuning forks about. When one tone was made certain hairs would vibrate, while all the others were still. Another tone would start another set to vibrating, and so on. Also, if the tuning fork were at one side of the mosquito, the hairs on that antennae trembled most violently, so that when the male hears—or, rather, feels—the voice of his beloved in one antennae, he wheels about so that vibration is equal in both and flies straight ahead to meet her. That is about all there is to the male mosquito, though, except that he cannot bite, for the sufficient reason that he has no apparatus with which to saw through the skin. So to speak, he has the pumps, but no drill. But the female is thoroughly equipped for getting through even a politician's hide. The only mystery is what possesses her to want to bite at all. How did she come by her hankering for blood? The scientists give it up. If she laid her eggs in the wound, like the carrion fly, it would be easy to answer the question, but she doesn't. If she stung in defend herself, like the wasp, it would be easy. It must be her brutal passion for blood that prompts her to attack helpless human beings. She cannot get this craving by inheritance, for the chances are that none of her ancestors as far back as William the Conqueror ever had a taste of human blood, and yet sit out on your front steep of an evening, and a mosquito, not half an hour out of the water, will make as straight for you as if she had been born for that purpose. When one thinks of the great clouds of these torments that live and die in swamps where no warm-blooded animal ever comes, for fear of being mired, one can easily believe the estimate of entomologists that not one in a million ever samples red blood.—Ainslee's Magazine.

JEFFERSON DAVIS' HOME.

The House Which He Built and Lived in When an Officer.

At Fort Gibson, Indian Territory, one of Uncle Sam's deserted army posts, stands a two-story house, part frame and part log, that was for a time the most pretentious residence in the radius of 500 miles, but now stands deserted by all save bats and owls and now and then a stray hoot owl, whose dismal and lonesome cry only brings back long forgotten memories of what this house has been. The house was built in 1848 by Jefferson Davis, ex-president of the Southern Confederacy, who at that time was an officer in the United States army. It was here that Davis was in the zenith of his glory as a defender of the United States flag. It was here that Davis, then a lieutenant, fell in love with, wooed and won his wife, the daughter of Gen. Taylor. The post was a wild and woolly spot in those days. It was the only trading point for miles around and was infested with gamblers, desperadoes, Indian traders, fugitives from justice in the States, with now and then a gang of cowboys, who would come in to the post to get "red eye" and incidentally shoot up the town and anybody who objected to them shooting up the town. Here in the shadow almost of the post have arisen and thrived such desperadoes as the James gang, the Daltons, the Starrs, Cherokee Bill, etc., who terrorized the country for so long until civilization and the farmers cleaned them out. This old house has seen many stirring times; it has sheltered many fair women and brave men, and if it had a tongue it could doubtless tell many state secrets as well as many interesting stories of the early days in the Indian Territory. The post was deserted in 1892 and now only a few buildings stand where there was once a thriving post of several thousand souls, and where the deer and turkey used to roam in the broad prairie, almost in pistol shot of this house, are neat and cosy farm houses, surrounded with peace and plenty. Such is the passing of the "wild and woolly" day in the Indian Territory.

Egg from a Great Auk Sold for $1,500

An egg of the great auk was sold at auction for 300 guineas, says the London Standard. J. C. Stevens, the auctioneer, said that in 1834 the Comte de Raoul de Berace bought the egg from the owner of a St. Malo fishing smack. The count's collection was purchased by Baron d'Hammonville. The egg to be sold was one of four great auk eggs belonging to the baron. There were seventy-one recorded eggs of the great auk, twenty-four of them being in museums and forty-two in private hands; fifty-two were in British collections. The first egg which the baron sent over fetched a record price, at the time, of 300 guineas. The egg now submitted, although not having the finest marks, was, perhaps, the largest ever offered for sale, being three and three-quarters inches in length.

Some Strange Epitaphs.

All that remains of a man called William Button lies buried in a churchyard near Salisbury, England. On his tombstone is engraved the following:

"Oh, sun, moon, stars, and ye celestial poles!

Are graves, then, dwindled into Button-holes?"

On the death of a celebrated cook some years ago a tombstone was erected over his grave by one who had long enjoyed his culinary efforts. The epitaph reads:

"Peace to his h'ashes!"

"Good-(K)night."

DR. KEELEY'S FAVORITE.

Minneapolis Institute Looked Upon With Favor by th Old Men.

Minnesota can be proud of her record in many things. One thing in particular has interested medical science of late years in relation to the climate of Minnesota. It is said by statisticians that the best results have been obtained from the Keeley Cure in Minnesota, as compared with other states. Whether it is entirely the climatic conditions or the discipline, or whatever it is, the result is there to show for itself.

The Minneapolis Keeley Institute is located at the corner of Tenth street and Park avenue, a beautiful location, with an immense green lawn and beautiful shade trees. The Institute was formerly a young ladies' seminary. The discipline is not too rigid, although it is not at all loose. The patients are controlled by the management from the time they enter, and, although everything is done for their comfort and pleasure, they are protected so that they derive the full benefits of the treatment. The Institute is not a prison. Every man who takes treatment there goes with the intention of observing the few, necessary, simple rules. If he does not observe the rules, or shows an unpleasant disposition, he is discharged promptly.

As soon as a man has become familiar with his surroundings he decides that he will enter heartily into the spirit of the thing. There are no bums or loafers found in the Minneapolis Institute. They are not desired. The average run of patients at the Minneapolis Institute consists of doctors, lawyers, merchants, business men and some farmers. They form a pleasant, happy convention of good fellows, and thoroughly appreciate the benefits they derive from the Keeley Cure. Very, very few ever drink again. If they do drink, they do it wilfully.

Imitators of the Keeley Cure promise impossible things to lure the unwary. There is no cure but the Keeley Cure. Explanatory literature will be sent to any who will send name and address to the Keeley Institute, corner Tenth street south and Park avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

The Fifth Age.

Until a few days ago, I had always supposed that there were but four ages in a woman's life—the young, the still young, the well preserved and the elderly—but a man I know has added to my knowledge a fifth age. It comes in somewhere between the still young and the well preserved, I imagine, I said to him, maliciously:

"How old is Mrs. Blank? Is she a young woman?"

"Not exactly," he answered; "she's—well, she's at the age when a woman always tells you, when she introduces her eldest son to you, that she was married ridiculously young."—Washington Post.

Of for the Bliss of a Loving Kiss.

"If you could have just one wish," he said, as they sat in the hammock and wondered if the people on the porch could see them, "what would it be?"

"Only one" she asked.

"Only one," he repeated. "Would you wish for unlimited wealth or fame, or—"

"I would wish," she interrupted, "that the moon would go behind a cloud."—Chicago Post.

HARD UP FOR PRESIDENTS.

So the Villager Thought, and He Knew the Boy.

When he was fifty he returned to his native town, "just to see how the old place looked." He found it unchanged. The old store where, as a lad, he had clerked it, and sold calicoes and groceries to the old farmers, was just the same. He contrasted the sleepy old place with himself, and felt a glow of satisfaction when he thought how much those thirty years had done for him. "They ought to be proud of me," he said to himself.

"Wall, I declare, is it really you, Hank?" said the old man, incredulously. "We've heerd you've been prosperin' fust rate since you went West. They've made you a railroad president, or sunthin o' that sort, ain't they? I heerd so, but I couldn't believe it. It's reely true, is it? Wall, all I've got to say is, they must be purty hard up for railroad presidents out there."

PE-RU-NA

FOR WOMEN

The debilitating drains and discharges which weaken so many women are caused by Catarrh of the distinctly feminine organs. The sufferer may call her trouble Leucorrhoea, or Weakness, or Female Disease or some other name, but the real trouble is catarrh of the female organs and nothing else.

Pe-ru-na radically and permanently cures this and all other forms of Catarrh. It is a positive specific for female troubles caused by catarrh of the delicate lining of the organs peculiar to women. It always cures if used persistently. It is prompt and certain.

The microbes that cause chills and fever and malaria enter the system through mucous membranes made porous by catarrh. Pe-ru-na heals the mucous membranes and prevents the entrance of malarial germs, thus preventing and curing these affections.

Detailed reports of the accident sustained by the cruiser Newark recently as she was entering the Golden Gate, show that what might have been a serious accident was averted by the fact that the ship was only under half-speed, and that, owing to the thoughtfulness of her engineer, Commander Morritz, a double force in the engine room enabled the steam to be cut off promptly.

Criminal Record.

An old miser was murdered near Viroqua, Wis., and his body partially eaten by rats and dogs.

The duel between the editors of the Porvenir and Cubano Libere, which was to have taken place recently at Santiago de Cuba, did not transpire, both parties having been arrested. The pugnacious journalists were liberated after a short detention.

In the superior court riot trials at Darien, Ga., Judge Seabrooke granted a change of venue in the case of John Delegal, Ed Delegal and Mirandi Delegal, for the murder of Deputy Sheriff Townsend. The case will be tried in Effingham county, Alabama, at a special term of court called to assemble next Wednesday. The prisoners were transferred from the jail to the court house twice during the day, each time under guard of a squad of soldiers. Judge Seabrooke said that which influenced his decision was the presence of the military.

DREYFUS IS GUILTY

CONCLUSION OF THE FARCE AT RENNES.

Court-Martial Fixes His Sentence at Ten Years' Detention — Prisoner Weeps Bitterly When Informed by His Lawyers, but Recovers Himself and Listens to the Official Notification With Impassiveness — Belief That the Five Years' Solitary Confinement Already Undergone Will Wipe Out the Sentence.

Rennes, Sept. 11.—The expected has happened. Dreyfus has been condemned, but though a majority of those in the court room fully expected the verdict, they were completely stupefied when it was given, and the silence which prevailed in the room and the way men turned pale and caught their breaths, was more impressive than any other manifestation could have been.

Maitre Demange sank back in his chair and tears trickled down his cheeks, and Maitre Labori turned as white as a sheet, while all around the court men looked at each other in silence. As the audience left the court room fully ten or fifteen men were crying openly, and the majority of those present walked quietly down the street for more than a block without speaking a word. It was like a funeral procession.

Meanwhile a tragedy was being enacted in the little room off the court room, where Dreyfus listened to the reading of the verdict. He had been told the result by his lawyers, and had wept bitterly, but when in the presence of the officials of the court-martial, he listened impassively to the sentence. His wife, who was waiting in torture and suspense at her house, bore the news bravely, and, when visiting her husband in the afternoon showed the onlookers, who were in the streets, no sign of her suffering as she walked from her carriage to the prison. Mathieu Dreyfus was not present in court, but visited his brother after the verdict had been rendered. He found him perfectly calm, and without any manifestation of surprise at the finding of the court. The prisoner simply shrugged his shoulders, uttering an expressive "bah," adding, as he embraced his brother, as the latter was preparing to leave, "Console my wife." The general belief is that Dreyfus will be pardoned; but this will not satisfy his friends, who vehemently declare that they will refuse to accept the verdict, and will continue the battle until the judgment is reversed. The verdict, they say, is directed more against the Jews than against Dreyfus, and if allowed to stand will make their existence in France impossible. Maitre Labori and Maitre Demange took the midnight train for Paris. They will sign an application for a revision of the case, although there is no hope that the verdict will be reversed.

Scenes of great excitement occurred at Rennes in the evening. The anti-Dreyfusards broke loose and started a demonstration which, but for the prompt and rigorous measures by the police, would undoubtedly have developed into serious disorders.

WITH MARVELOUS FORTITUDE

Capt. Dreyfus Bears the Shock at His Unjust Sentence.

Rennes, Sept. 11. — Dreyfus has borne the terrible shock with marvelous fortitude, one might almost say with unnatural calm. Saturday he seemed stupefied when Maitre Labori communicated to him the verdict. He passed a quiet night and rose when his orderly brought him water at 5 o'clock yesterday morning, just as he did during the trial when it was necessary. Mme Dreyfus and Mathieu Dreyfus visited him during the course of the afternoon, his brother subsequently leaving for Paris. The application to the court of revision was taken to him at noon by Maitre Labori's assistant and he signed it. Yesterday he spoke but little, though he seemed in better spirits than might have been expected. The meeting with his wife was naturally very affecting, but both held up as well as possible. He said to her: "I am not uneasy regarding myself as I shall soon be free, but I think of you and my poor children. They will be branded as the children of a traitor."

He is convinced that the ten years' imprisonment to which he is sentenced will be wiped out by the five years' of solitary seclusion he has undergone on Devil's Island, and he expects to be released by Oct. 15, which will be five years from the date of his former condemnation.

M. Hadamard, father of Mme. Dreyfus, said that Mme. Dreyfus and the family were hopeful and looked forward to some favorable developments. "The verdict," he added, "is an infamy. Capt. Dreyfus is in poor health as every one knows. He has been extremely ill from the moment of his arrival in France and has been put on a special regime. His health has not improved, and the nervous effect of Saturday's terrible blow is bound to react on his general condition."

The town yesterday was perfectly calm. There has not been a sign of a demonstration nor a cry for or against Dreyfus or the Jews hooted anywhere. A number of people gathered to see Mme. Dreyfus visit the prison, but they were quite respectful.

There is one extraordinary difference of opinion respecting the exact effect of the judgment — whether he can be degraded again and whether the five years' solitary confinement he has undergone will be regarded as equivalent to the ten years' detention to which he is now sentenced and he will be released next month. This matter is quite aside from the general impression that he will be pardoned in a few days by President Loubet, who will find some ground to exercise clemency.

Maitre Demange thinks the five years will count for nothing, and that Dreyfus, according to law, will have to suffer ten years' detention. Many others, however, including several lawyers, hold a contrary opinion, and declare that he will be released in October.

Quiet at Paris.

Paris, Sept. 11.—The day has been one of absolute quiet, with no public excitement, not even in the Rue de Chabrol. There was a rainfall in the afternoon and the streets were practically deserted. Slight disturbances occurred yesterday at Marseilles and Belfort when the verdict was published. Demonstrators attacked the residence of Jacques Dreyfus, brother of the condemned, at Belfort, breaking the windows and otherwise damaging the structure. Many persons were arrested.

Indignation in England.

London, Sept. 11.—It would be impossible to describe adequately the indignation the verdict of the Dreyfus court-martial has evoked everywhere in England. The excitement in the Jewish quarter in London is only natural. Special prayers were offered Saturday in all the synagogues on behalf of Dreyfus, and as soon as the verdict was known Jews and Jewesses were seen at every street court, expressing indignation, and many sobbed hysterically.

LYNCHING THREATENED.

Mob After a White Prisoner Charged With Murder.

Jackson, Miss., Sept. 11.—A report reached the city Saturday afternoon that a mob was gathering between Brandon and Raleigh to lynch a white prisoner named James McAlpin, charged with murder. Gov. McLaurin left the city immediately and reached Brandon late at night. He left instructions for the Mississippi Rifles to follow him if necessary to escort the prisoner to Smith county. A late dispatch says the governor left in a buggy overland from Smith county, and if he meets with the mob will endeavor to persuade it to disperse. Smith county is the governor's old home. McAlpin killed David Painter while on his way home from church.

FOUR MEN KILLED.

Bridge Gives Way Under a Train Load of Granite.

Columbia, S. C., Sept. 11—Two hundred feet of trestle on the Columbia, Newberry & Laurens road over Broad river near this city gave way under a train load of granite. Several cars and the engine fell fifty feet into the water. Four men were killed. William Bates, an extra fireman, went down with the wreck, but was dug out from under tons of granite without a scratch and James Watson, superintendent of explosives at the granite quarry, jumped from the train and landed fifty feet below unhurt. The bridge had just been completed and only the day before was pronounced in first-class condition.

SHOOTS A DEPUTY MARSHAL.

Bardstown, Ky., Sept. 11. — James Beam, a distiller of this vicinity, quarreled with Deputy Marshal Peter Coyle and the latter was shot twice in the abdomen, the wounds being pronounced of a dangerous character. A grudge, it is alleged, existed between the men on account of the closing to the saloons. A trial in the police court brought the difficulty to a culmination. Beam and his friends claim that Coyle shot himself. Beam, however, was arrested and taken before the county judge and released on bonds. It is thought Coyle cannot recover.

YELLOW FEVER IN NEW YORK.

Several Cases Are Imported From Key West.

New York, Sept. 11. — The Mallory line steamer Lampasas, which arrived from Galveston and Key West on Thursday last, brought ninety-five passengers, of whom sixty-six were from Key West. The Key West passengers were panic-stricken when they boarded the steamer and fled from the infected city because they feared the epidemic. Four of the number are now patients at the Swinburn Island hospital.

Later — Health Officer Doty reports that all of the four patients from Key West, removed to Swinburne Island, have developed yellow fever.

WORK OF TRAIN RODDERS.

Mail and Express Cars Rifled But Little Booty Secured.

Cochise, Ariz., Sept. 11.—Express Train No. 10 on the Southern Pacific was robbed here by four masked men who blew the safe open and took everything in sight. The amount of their booty is said to be small.

The train was stopped, the engine, mail and express cars were cut off from the rest of the train and run a mile further up the road, where the bandits stopped to complete their work.

SEVEN MILES OF SHIPS.

New York, Sept. 11. — The Dewey naval parade is expected to be the greatest naval spectacle that the country has ever seen. It will be at least seven miles long, and probably much longer.

Two Brakemen Meet Death.

Centralia, Ill., Sept. 11. — Saturday was a fatal day for employes of the Illinois Central on the Cairo division. Barney Lomax, a brakeman, fell from the cars near Duquoin and had both legs cut off. He died later. Clyde Mayes, also a brakeman, was run down by an engine at Cobden and instantly killed. A switchman at Mound was also run down and killed.

Fun and Frolic at Sioux City.

Sioux City, Iowa, Sept. 11. — This will be a week of fun and frolic in Sioux City. To-day the carnival amusements will begin and they will be kept up until Saturday night. In addition to the carnival parades there will be the best race meeting held in Western Iowa this year and two boxing carnivals.

Lightning Plays Pranks.

Wabash, Ind., Sept. 11. — Lightning played a remarkable freak here when it struck the residence of Will Alber, ran into the bathroom, tore the closet to pieces, and then ran along the plumbing the the house, literally flooding the place. Loss, $400.

AMES IS SNUBBED

CHILLY RECEPTION ACCORDED THE THIRTEENTH COMMANDER.

Not a Cheer or Friendly Word of Greeting Met the Colonel as He Stepped on Board the Sheridan—Cold, Formal Salutes From Officers and Men—Rumor in Circulation That Ames Has Been Discharged—Enthusiastic Greeting for Gen. Reeve—South Dakota Officers Are Under Arrest.

San Francisco, Sept. 10—Whether or not there is an iota of truth in the charges of cowardice made against Col. Ames, the members of the Thirteenth Minnesota regiment, almost to a man, are unfriendly to their commanding officer. When Col. Ames, accompanied by his wife, went aboard the Sheridan yesterday morning he was given a cold reception.

The launch bearing the colonel pulled alongside the transport, and he was standing forward in full view of the soldiers, who readily recognized him, but not a cheer or a friendly word of welcome came from the hundreds of kahki-clad men hanging over the Sheridan rail, and as the colonel ascended the gangplank the silence was painful to all onlookers. No one can tell what feelings surged in the breasts of soldiers who thus received their commanding officer. They stood there stolid and coldly saluted him, and he acknowledged the military courtesy which must be given to his rank. Mrs. Ames followed immediately behind her husband, and the significance of the slight overcame her, and she could barely restrain the sobs which almost choked her. The Minnesota men, noticing her agitation and sympathizing with her distress, gave three vigorous cheers, intended solely for her. When the colonel reached the hurricane deck where the officers of the Thirteenth are quartered he received only a perfunctory military salute, which, of course, he returned.

The colonel firmly declines to discuss anything in connection with himself or the restrained relations with the Minnesota officers. He further refuses to state whether he will resume his command.

An unverified rumor is in circulation among the Minnesotans that Col. Ames has received his discharge from Washington, and that he will not be further connected with regiment during the few remaining weeks it is in the service. The frigid greeting given Col. Ames was emphasized by the marked contrast in the reception accorded Brig. Gen. Reeve, who was pulled aboard the Sheridan by the soldiers in defiance of the quarantine and customs laws. Gen. Reeve explained to the men that the quick run of the Sheridan had disarranged the plans of Gov. Lind, but that the Thirteenth would receive the greatest reception in the history of Minnesota when the men reached home. In the afternoon Gen. Reeve escorted a party of Minnesotans on board the Sheridan, composed mostly of mothers and wives of returning soldiers who were impatient to greet their loved ones. Gen. Reeve and Dr. Ritchie were tacitly appointed masters of ceremonies, and right well they performed their task. First of all, the freedom of the vessel was secured for the enlisted men, who, for the first time in months felt a relaxation from severe military discipline. Late in the afternoon Gen. Reeve received a telegram from Gov. Lind and Mayor Gray instructing him to arrange a breakfast for the Minnesota boys. Without a moment's delay the general, assisted by Dr. Ritchie, fulfilled the order. An elaborate breakfast was arranged for to be served at 6 o'clock this morning aboard the Sheridan, after which the regiment will disembark and proceed to the Presidio.

North Dakota and California volunteers will escort the Minnesotans to camp. The Minnesota ladies now here are determined to show their appreciation of the boys. They have secured tally-hos and carriages and will ride in the procession.

The esteem which the California volunteers have for the Minnesotans amounts to brotherly affection. These men who fought side by side in the bamboo brakes and stampeded Filipinos from trench after trench have become wonderfully attached to each other. "Nothing is too good for the Minnesota boys", is the unanimous expression of the men from the Golden State. Just before the First California regiment embarked at Manila for the homeward trip they were banqueted by the Minnesotans, and now the Californians have prepared to return the courtesy. Upon the arrival of the Thirteenth at the Presidio they will proceed to the camp of the Californians, where lunch will be awaiting 2,000 men. Members of both organizations will mingle at the board, and it is safe to say the Gophers will not reach their own tents until very late in the afternoon.

Col. Friedrich Report.

St. Paul, Sept. 10. — The following dispatch was received from Col. Friedrich, commanding the Thirteenth:

The transport Sheridan, bearing the Minnesota and South Dakota regiments and 200 discharged soldiers, entered the Golden Gate at 5:30 on the evening of Sept. 7. The condition of the troops is excellent. The improvement in general health during the voyage was quite remarkable. Excepting two days of very rough sea, the weather the weather was cool and invigorating. The rations were much better than on the former voyage. The regimental fund was liberally used in buying extras for the men. The hospital facilities of the transport were quite good. There is no serious case of sickness in the Thirteenth. We remained at Nagasaki three days and in Yokohama two days and were given a splendid reception by American residents in the latter city. Tremendous enthusiasm was manifested on first sighting the American shore. Greetings of officers and men to friends at home.

OFFICERS UNDER ARREST.

South Dakota Regiment Also in Hot Water.

San Francisco, Sept. 10.—There has been considerable trouble among the men and officers of the South Dakota regiment, as the result of which Surgeon Maj. Warne, Lieut. Col. Stover and Lieut. Horace C. Bates are now under arrest awaiting an official investigation of charges preferred against them by Col. Frost, commanding the regiment. It is expected that a court martial will be ordered but no action will be taken until the matter has been passed upon by Maj. Gen. Shafter. It may be stated, however, that Surgeon Maj. Warne is alleged to have written a letter to Senator Pettigrew of South Dakota in which Col. Frost was referred to in uncomplimentary terms. This letter was given to the press, and when a copy of it was read to the colonel at Nagasaki Surgeon Maj. Warne is said to have been placed under arrest. The paper which contained this communication also contained a letter from a sergeant in the South Dakota regiment, thought to have been inspired by Lieut. Col. Stover, stating that a regular army surgeon at Manila had stated that men were sent to the firing line when in no condition for fighting. It is also alleged that Stover told the men not to fight if ordered to do so when they were not in proper condition. Lieut. Bates is in trouble presumably for agreeing with Lieut. Col. Stover. All the officers in trouble are highly spoken of by the men, who say that their criticisms were well founded.

CROWD GOES WILD

ROUSING RECEPTION TO THE THIRTEENTH MINNESOTA.

Regiment Now in Camp at the Presidio With Col. Ames in Command —March Through the Streets to the Camp Was a Continual Ovation—South Dakota Boys Come in for Their Share of Attention—White Dove of Peace Settles Down Over the Minnesota Camp and All Is Now Harmonious.

San Francisco, Sept. 11.—Saturday was a gala day in San Francisco. Every returning regiment from the Philippines has been received by the people of this city with open arms, but to none of them has the welcome been more cordial or more spontaneous than to the Thirteenth Minnesota. The regiment is now in camp at the Presidio and Col. Ames has assumed command.

The regiment was astonished when Col. Ames arrived at the camp soon after the troops did and informed Lieut. Col. Friedrich that he would take command. Lieut. Col. Friedrich at once turned over the command to his superior in rank and left the camp for the city, as did nearly all the other officers of the regiment.

It was a few minutes after 8 o'clock in the morning when the regiment received orders to leave the transport and prepare for the march to camp at the Presidio. The two regiments [illegible] filed off the transport, which had been brought into the transport dock, and formed in line, the South Dakota having the right of line. During the waiting before the start for the parade the ladies of San Francisco visited the soldiers and each man was presented two bouquets. One for the end of his gun and the other to pin on his coat. Carriages were furnished for the ladies and visitors of the two regiments, and, after a delay of an hour the procession got under way. Market street was a mass of people. It was impossible to find room on the sidewalks and the street was so crowded that the street cars were forced to suspend operations until the procession had passed. It was an enthusiastic reception, and one that warmed the hearts of the boys in blue who were returning home after a year and more of suffering and privation in a foreign land.

The South Dakota regiment came in for a good share of the applause and cheers, but it was not until the Minnesota boys came in sight that the crowd broke loose. The men of the regiment may forget many things in connection with their war experience, but the reception which they received here will live with them forever.

There has apparently been a great change in the feelings of the enlisted men of the regiment toward Col. Ames. When he visited the transport he was barely noticed; but when it was announced at the camp that he had taken command of the regiment again hundreds of the enlisted men gathered before the headquarters tent and gave him a number of hearty cheers. Col. Ames went out of his tent and for half an hour was engaged in shaking hands with the men.

Peace Now Reigns.

San Francisco, Sept. 11. — There is peace in the Thirteenth Minnesota. The misunderstanding that has existed for some time has been explained and now the regiment resembles a happy family.

"Have you change for a five?" asked Maj. Bean, as he approached Col. Ames at the camp at the Presidio yesterday afternoon.

"No, I have not the change, but I can lend you a couple of dollars," was Col. Ames' reply.

Maj. Bean took a dollar, thanked the colonel and walked back to his tent. It was a small incident, but it indicated the arrival of peace, for it is the first time the two men have spoken since the transport Sheridan arrived in the harbor Thursday morning.

This conversation between the men who are supposed to be leaders of the two factions in the regiment was noticed by other officers and men of the regiment, and was a cue for them all to bury their personal animosity. The regiment is now a unit and the dissatisfaction which has heretofore existed is a thing of the past.

Nearly all the enlisted men have stood by Ames and state that he was a good officer and not a coward as has been charged.

There is no question that every member of the regiment will return on special trains to be provided for them. The men are all anxious to return home as soon as possible, and all state that they will go back to Minnesota as soon as mustered out.

South Dakota's Row.

The South Dakota situation remains the same. Lieut Col. Stover, Surgeon Major Warne and Lieut. Bates are still in quarters under arrest. Gov. Lee is expected to arrive in the morning and nothing will be done until his arrival. Col Frost will press the charges against the three officers, and a court-martial is probable. It is possible that this will delay the muster-out of the regiment. The North Dakota is the only regiment at the Presidio that has not had a fight or a misunderstanding. The work of physical examination is progressing rapidly, and the regiment will be mustered out in another ten days.

NOT MUCH OF AN EATER.

It Took, So He Said, Very Little to Satisfy Him.

Captain B. W. Morgan, every inch a Welshman himself, likes to tell this story when there is another Welshman in hearing: He went home to dinner one day and found a paper hanger at work in the house. He asked the time, and Captain Morgan told him it was noon.

"I guess I'll knock off and go home to dinner then," the paper hanger remarked.

"Stay and eat with us," the captain said, and the invitation was accepted.

Captain Morgan was attentive to his guest during the meal. He had a prodigious appetite. The captain helped him to roast beef several times, until at last he had some curiosity to see just how much the fellow would eat without crying enough. The game was growing quite interesting when the fellow began to show signs of quitting.

"Will you have some of the plum pudding?" the captain asked him to revive his failing appetite.

"No, thanks," he replied. "I've had enough, I think."

"Well, I don't mind trying it," he said.

The captain helped him to a section of the pudding weighing about a pound, and he ate it with much relish. Then he shoved his chair away from the table and leaned back for an after dinner chat.

"I'm not much of an eater," he said, not noticing the smile on the captain's face. "It takes very little to satisfy me. Say, you ought to see the Welsh eat."

"Are they hearty eaters?" asked the captain.

IT WAS GENUINE.

The Signature of William Shakespeare That Admiral Luce Had.

At the time of the New Orleans exposition, in the winter of 1884-5, Admiral Luce was in command of the north Atlantic squadron and was sent down there to add to the gayety of nations, which no other old seadog could do better than he. Upon his return the flagship was anchored in New York bay, where it was visited by many people. One day a party came aboard which included among others a very pretty girl and a very dignified and learned Englishman. As Admiral Luce was entertaining them in his cabin he asked the pretty girl if she would like to see an original autograph of William Shakespeare.

At this the dignified and learned Englishman pricked up his ears and remarked that he had made a study of the autographs of Shakespeare and was positive there was no authentic example in America. Admiral Luce replied that he was very positive his was authentic and that its genuineness had never been questioned. This made the Britisher quite mad, and he delivered a lecture on the fraudulent autographs and manuscripts that were brought over to America and exhibited as originals.

"Well," replied the admiral, "I am convinced that my autograph of William Shakespeare is genuine, and I am going to have the pleasure of showing it to this young lady." Whereupon he went to his desk, took out his visitor's book, turned back a few pages and then pointed out the signature, "William Shakespeare, mayor of New Orleans, Jan. 12, 1885." The Englishman gave a painful gasp and retired.—Chicago Record.

The Clever Romans.

It seems quite surprising that the ancient Romans did not acquire the art of printing with movable types, inasmuch as they came so very near to it. They had wooden blocks carved with words in reverse, by means of which they stamped those words on pottery, while the latter was as yet unbaked and soft. Incidentally it may be mentioned that they knew the modern method of mending broken pots by means of rivets, and many pieces of pottery thus restored have been dug up.

In ancient Rome there was one daily newspaper, which was written entirely by hand. Furthermore the Roman senate had a publication which corresponds to The Congressional Record, being a report of the daily proceedings of that important legislative body. It likewise was written by hand. Speaking of baked clay, one might mention the fact that the little boys of Rome 2,000 years and more ago were accustomed to play knuckle down with marbles of that material just as children do now.

Goat's Milk.

Modern Medicine says that goat's milk, contrary to the general impressions, differs from cow's milk not in being more digestible, but in being less digestible and less nutritious, although it contains a larger amount of solid matter than cow's milk. It is indeed the most indigestible of all milk.

Goat's milk has a peculiar and unpleasant odor and flavor, due to hircic acid or hircine. It contains an excess of fat and is therefore altogether too rich for an infant's diet.

Derided.

An Austin colored waiter told a Boston man at a hotel that in eastern Texas a white man had married a negro woman.

"Was he not derided?" asked the Bostonian in the classic speech of the "Hub of Culture."

"He was, sah," beamed the negro. "Dey rided him out oh tawn on a rail."

A HISTORICAL RIDE.

IT WAS WORTH THREE STARS TO THE AMERICAN FLAG.

Marcus Whitman's Wild and Perilous Journey of 4,000 Miles From Oregon to Washington and the Results Which Followed In Its Wake.

The ride of Marcus Whitman was over snow capped mountains and along dark ravines, traveled only by savage men. It was a plunge through icy rivers and across trackless prairies, a ride of 4,000 miles across a continent in the dead of winter to save a mighty territory to the Union.

Compared with this, what was the feat of Paul Revere, who rode 18 miles on a calm night in April to arouse a handful of sleeping patriots and thereby save the powder at Concord?

Whitman's ride saved three stars to the American flag. It was made in 1842.

In 1792, during the first administration of Washington, Captain Robert Gray, who had already carried the American flag around the globe, discovered the mouth of the Columbia river. He sailed several miles up the great stream and landed and took possession in the name of the United States.

In 1805, under Jefferson's administration, this vast territory was explored by Captains Lewis and Clark, whose reports were popular reading for our grandfathers, but the extent and value of this distant possession were very slightly understood, and no attempt at colonization was made, save the establishment of the fur trading station of Astoria in 1811.

Strangely enough, England, too, claimed this same territory by virtue of rights ceded to it by Russia and also by the Vancouver surveys of 1792. The Hudson's Bay company established a number of trading posts and filled the country with adventurous fur traders. So here was a vast territory, as large as New England and the state of Indiana combined, which seemed to be without any positive ownership. But for Marcus Whitman it would have been lost to the Union.

It was in 1836 that Dr. Whitman and a man by the name of Spaulding, with their young wives, the first white women that ever crossed the Rocky mountains, entered the valley of the Columbia and founded a mission of the American board. They had been sent out to Christianize the Indians, but Whitman was also to build a state.

He was at this time 35 years old. In his journeys to and fro for the mission he soon saw the vast possibilities of the country, and he saw, too, that the English were already apprised of this and were rapidly pouring into the territory. Under the terms of the treaties of 1818 and 1828 it was the tacit belief that whichever nationality settled and organized the territory, that nation would hold it. If England and the English fur traders had been successful in their plans, the three great states of Washington, Oregon and Idaho would now constitute a part of British Columbia. But it was not destined to be.

In the fall of 1842 it looked as if there would be a great inpouring of English into the territory, and Dr. Whitman took the alarm. There was no time to lose. The authorities at Washington must be warned. Hastily bidding his wife adieu, Dr. Whitman started on his hazardous journey. The perils, hardships and delays he encountered on the way we can but faintly conceive. His feet were frozen, he nearly starved, and once he came very near to losing his life. He kept pushing right on, and at the end of five terrible months he reached Washington.

He arrived there a worn, bearded, strangely picturesque figure, clad entirely in buckskin and fur, a typical man of the prairies. He asked audience of President Tyler and Secretary of State Webster, and it was accorded him. All clad as he was, with his frozen limbs, just in from his 4,000 mile ride, Whitman appeared before the two great men to plead for Oregon.

His statement was a revelation to the administration. Previous to Whitman's visit it was the general idea in congress that Oregon was a barren, worthless country, fit only for wild beasts and wild men. He opened the eyes of the government to the limitless wealth and splendid resources of that western territory. He told them of its great rivers and fertile valleys, its mountains covered with forests and its mines filled with precious treasures. He showed them that it was a country worth keeping and that it must not fall into the hands of the English. He spoke as a man inspired, and his words were heeded.

What followed—the organization of companies of emigrants, the rapid settlement of the territory and the treaty made with Great Britain in 1846 by which the forty-ninth parallel was made the boundary line west of the Rocky mountains are matters of history.

The foresight and the heroism of one man and his gallant ride had saved three great states to the Union.—Omaha World-Herald.

The Wise Man.

The wise man will not expect too much from those about him. He will bear and forbear. Even the best have foibles and weaknesses which have to be endured, sympathized with and perhaps pitied. Who is perfect? Who does not need forbearance and forgiveness?—Samuel Smiles.

A PAIR OF BIG FEET.

The Princess Bismarck changed the political history of France unwittingly, and but for her the Franco-Prussian war might never have been waged.

Bismarck was unfriendly to France, but the Empress Eugenie hoped with her beauty to influence him so that the little trouble with France and Germany might be smoothed over. She therefore invited the German prince and his wife to visit the court of France, and the Prince and Princess Bismarck arrived in great state at the Tuileries.

That evening there was a grand reception, and Eugenie received the guests in a gown which made her so ravishingly lovely that even Prince Bismarck, German, stolid and in love with his wife, stood and gazed upon her with admiration. And Eugenie was not slow to observe the effect of her beauty upon him. She called him to her side, and Bismarck came with his wife upon his arm.

Now, the Princess Bismarck was tall and gaunt and ugly, and her feet were generous. As she walked she showed a great deal of sole.

While Bismarck stood talking with Eugenie an audible titter was heard along the line of ladies. Bismarck, who was quick as a flash, followed the glance of their eyes and saw them rest upon the feet of his wife.

That settled the matter. The political history of France was altered from that moment.

A year later, when Paris was besieged, Bismarck himself fired a cannon over the ramparts, and those who were near him heard him shout:

"Take that for the feet of the Princess Bismarck!"

The slight was avenged.

THE MYSTERY OF DREAMS.

A Case In Which the Coincidences Were Remarkable.

On an occasion during the civil war I dreamed that I was standing beside a road when there came marching along it a strong column of prisoners, with guards at intervals on the flanks. I asked one of these guards who the prisoners were and where they had been captured. He informed me that they had been taken in an engagement with the enemy on the day before and that there were 1,900 of them. I then asked some bystander what day of the month it was and was told that it was such a day of a certain month, some six weeks later than the date of the dream. The whole dream was extremely distinct, and it made a strong impression on me. I related it to a number of my comrades within the next few days and then thought of it no more.

Six weeks later, on the morning of the very day that had been mentioned in the dream as the date when the column of prisoners had passed before me, I was on picket two miles distant from the point where I had seemed to be when I saw them. It was soon after breakfast, and I was standing by the side of the road at the fire talking to the officer of the picket when an aid to the commanding general came riding down the road. He had been a schoolfellow of our officer's at West Point and reined up when he recognized his friend. He told us that he had good news, that there had been a sharp engagement with the enemy the day before and that our people had captured 1,900 prisoners, who had just passed the headquarters that morning on their way to the rear.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Slow Trains.

Slow railroad trains are probably not peculiar to any locality. The story of the conductor who waited for the hen to complete the dozen of eggs for the market is a part of the folklore of widely diverse regions.

There used to run over a Vermont road—and also, it may be remarked, over a Wisconsin road—what was known as the "huckleberry train," the jest being that it was so slow that passengers could jump off at the front end of the train and pick huckleberries for awhile and then get on at the rear end as it came up.

The engineer of the Vermont train of this title is imaginatively declared to have shot two partridges one day from his cab, which the fireman "retrieved" without any additional "slowing up."

Exasperating, Truly.

Mrs. Higsley—Clara, I must insist that you send young Mr. Granley away earlier. It was long after 11 o'clock last night when you closed the front door after him.

Clara—I know, mamma, and I have made up my mind a dozen different times to make him leave early, but he has a way, somehow, of always giving the impression long after the shank of the evening has passed that he is just about to say something one has been waiting for. It's awful exasperating.—St. Louis Republic.

A Snow Hurricane.

The buran, or snow hurricane of the Pamirs is a meteorological phenomenon of great interest. Even in midsummer the temperature during a snow buran frequently falls to 14 degrees F., while in the winter of 1892-3 it dropped to 45 degrees below zero at the end of January. The buran comes with startling suddenness, the atmosphere growing dark with whirling snowflakes where scarcely a minute before the sky was perfectly clear.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK WORLD.
THRICE-A-WEEK EDITION.
Practically a Daily at the Price of a Weekly.

The striking and important events of the last year have established the overwhelming value of The Thrice-a-Week World to every reader. For an almost nominal sum it has kept its subscribers informed of the progress of all our wars and, moreover, has reported them as promptly and fully as if it were a daily. With our interests still extending throughout the world, with our troops operating in the Philippines and the great Presidential campaign, too, at hand, its value is further increased.

The motto of The Thrice-a-Week World is improved. It strives each year to be better than it was the year before, and public confidence in it is shown by the fact that it now circulates more than twice as many papers every week as any other newspaper, not a daily, published in America.

We offer this unequalled newspaper and The St. Hilaire Spectator together one year for $1.65.

The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2.50.

NOT MUCH OF AN EATER.

It Took, So He Said, Very Little to Satisfy Him.

Captain B. W. Morgan, every inch a Welshman himself, likes to tell this story when there is another Welshman in hearing: He went home to dinner one day and found a paper hanger at work in the house. He asked the time, and Captain Morgan told him it was noon.

"I guess I'll knock off and go home to dinner then," the paper hanger remarked.

"Stay and eat with us," the captain said, and the invitation was accepted.

Captain Morgan was attentive to his guest during the meal. He had a prodigious appetite. The captain helped him to roast beef several times, until at last he had some curiosity to see just how much the fellow would eat without crying enough. The game was growing quite interesting when the fellow began to show signs of quitting.

"Will you have some of the plum pudding?" the captain asked him to revive his failing appetite.

"No, thanks," he replied. "I've had enough, I think."

"Well, I don't mind trying it," he said.

The captain helped him to a section of the pudding weighing about a pound, and he ate it with much relish. Then he shoved his chair away from the table and leaned back for an after dinner chat.

"I'm not much of an eater," he said, not noticing the smile on the captain's face. "It takes very little to satisfy me. Say, you ought to see the Welsh eat."

"Are they hearty eaters?" asked the captain.

IT WAS GENUINE.

At the time of the New Orleans exposition, in the winter of 1884-5, Admiral Luce was in command of the north Atlantic squadron and was sent down there to add to the gayety of nations, which no other old seadog could do better than he. Upon his return the flagship was anchored in New York bay, where it was visited by many people. One day a party came aboard which included among others a very pretty girl and a very dignified and learned Englishman. As Admiral Luce was entertaining them in his cabin he asked the pretty girl if she would like to see an original autograph of William Shakespeare.

At this, the dignified and learned Englishman pricked up his ears and remarked that he had made a study of the autographs of Shakespeare and was positive there was no authentic example in America. Admiral Luce replied that he was very positive his was authentic and that its genuineness had never been questioned. This made the Britisher quite mad, and he delivered a lecture on the fraudulent autographs and manuscripts that were brought over to America and exhibited as originals.

"Well," replied the admiral, "I am convinced that my autograph of William Shakespeare is genuine, and I am going to have the pleasure of showing it to this young lady." Whereupon he went to his desk, took out his visitor's book, turned back a few pages and then pointed out the signature, "William Shakespeare, mayor of New Orleans, Jan. 12, 1885." The Englishman gave a painful gasp and retired.—Chicago Record.

The Clever Romans.

It seems quite surprising that the ancient Romans did not acquire the art of printing with movable types, inasmuch as they came so very near to it. They had wooden blocks carved with words in reverse, by means of which they stamped those words on pottery, while the latter was as yet unbaked and soft. Incidentally it may be mentioned that they knew the modern method of mending broken pots by means of rivets, and many pieces of pottery thus restored have been dug up.

In ancient Rome there was one daily newspaper, which was written entirely by hand. Furthermore the Roman senate had a publication which corresponds to The Congressional Record, being a report of the daily proceedings of that important legislative body. It likewise was written by hand. Speaking of baked clay, one might mention the fact that the little boys of Rome 2,000 years and more ago were accustomed to play knuckle down with marbles of that material just as children do now.

Goat's Milk.

Modern Medicine says that goat's milk, contrary to the general impressions, differs from cow's milk not in being more digestible, but in being less digestible and less nutritious, although it contains a larger amount of solid matter than cow's milk. It is indeed the most indigestible of all milk.

Goat's milk has a peculiar and unpleasant odor and flavor, due to hircic acid or hircine. It contains an excess of fat and is therefore altogether too rich for an infant's diet.

Derided.

An Austin colored waiter told a Boston man at a hotel that in eastern Texas a white man had married a negro woman.

"Was he not derided?" asked the Bostonian in the classic speech of the "Hub of Culture."

"He was, sah," beamed the negro. "Dey rided him out ob town on a rail."

A HISTORICAL RIDE.

IT WAS WORTH THREE STARS TO THE AMERICAN FLAG.

Marcus Whitman's Wild and Perilous Journey of 4,000 Miles From Oregon to Washington and the Results Which Followed in Its Wake.

The ride of Marcus Whitman was over snow capped mountains and along dark ravines, traveled only by savage men. It was a plunge through icy rivers and across trackless prairies, a ride of 4,000 miles across a continent in the dead of winter to save a mighty territory to the Union.

Compared with this, what was the feat of Paul Revere, who rode 18 miles on a calm night in April to arouse a handful of sleeping patriots and thereby save the powder at Concord?

Whitman's ride saved three stars to the American flag. It was made in 1842.

In 1792, during the first administration of Washington, Captain Robert Gray, who had already carried the American flag around the globe, discovered the mouth of the Columbia river. He sailed several miles up the great stream and landed and took possession in the name of the United States.

In 1805, under Jefferson's administration, this vast territory was explored by Captains Lewis and Clark, whose reports were popular reading for our grandfathers, but the extent and value of this distant possession were very slightly understood, and no attempt at colonization was made, save the establishment of the fur trading station of Astoria in 1811.

Strangely enough, England, too, claimed this same territory by virtue of rights ceded to it by Russia and also by the Vancouver surveys of 1792. The Hudson's Bay company established a number of trading posts and filled the country with adventurous fur traders. So here was a vast territory, as large as New England and the state of Indiana combined, which seemed to be without any positive ownership. But for Marcus Whitman it would have been lost to the Union.

It was in 1836 that Dr. Whitman and a man by the name of Spaulding, with their young wives, the first white women that ever crossed the Rocky mountains, entered the valley of the Columbia and founded a mission of the American board. They had been sent out to Christianize the Indians, but Whitman was also to build a state.

He was at this time 35 years old. In his journeys to and fro for the mission he soon saw the vast possibilities of the country, and he saw, too, that the English were already apprised of this and were rapidly pouring into the territory. Under the terms of the treaties of 1818 and 1828 it was the tacit belief that whichever nationality settled and organized the territory, that nation would hold it. If England and the English fur traders had been successful in their plans, the three great states of Washington, Oregon and Idaho would now constitute a part of British Columbia. But it was not destined to be.

In the fall of 1842 it looked as if there would be a great inpouring of English into the territory, and Dr. Whitman took the alarm. There was no time to lose. The authorities at Washington must be warned. Hastily bidding his wife adieu, Dr. Whitman started on his hazardous journey. The perils, hardships and delays he encountered on the way we can but faintly conceive. His feet were frozen, he nearly starved, and once he came very near to losing his life. He kept pushing right on, and at the end of five terrible months he reached Washington.

He arrived there a worn, bearded, strangely picturesque figure, clad entirely in buckskin and fur, a typical man of the prairies. He asked audience of President Tyler and Secretary of State Webster, and it was accorded him. All clad as he was, with his frozen limbs, just in from his 4,000 mile ride, Whitman appeared before the two great men to plead for Oregon.

His statement was a revelation to the administration. Previous to Whitman's visit it was the general idea in congress that Oregon was a barren, worthless country, fit only for wild beasts and wild men. He opened the eyes of the government to the limitless wealth and splendid resources of that western territory. He told them of its great rivers and fertile valleys its mountains covered with forests and its mines filled with precious treasures. He showed them that it was a country worth keeping and that it must not fall into the hands of the English. He spoke as a man inspired, and his words were heeded.

What followed—the organization of companies of emigrants, the rapid settlement of the territory and the treaty made with Great Britain in 1846 by which the forty-ninth parallel was made the boundary line west of the Rocky mountains are matters of history.

The foresight and the heroism of one man and his gallant ride had saved three great states to the Union.—Omaha World-Herald.

The Wise Man.

The wise man will not expect too much from those about him. He will bear and forbear. Even the best have foibles and weaknesses which have to be endured, sympathized with and perhaps pitied. Who is perfect? Who does not need forbearance and forgiveness?—Samuel Smiles.

The flesh of young giraffe, especially that of a young cow, is extremely good, somewhat like veal, with a gamelike flavor. The tongue, from 15 to 20 inches long, is also very good. But the marrow bones afford the greatest luxury to the South African hunter.

The Army and Navy.

Have covered themselves with glory during the war. The Army and Navy vest pocket memorandum book published by the Northern Pacific is a compact digest of information relative to the navies and armies of Spain and the United States at the beginning of the war. It has a map of Cuba, illustrations of naval ships, glossary of navy and army terms, translation of Spanish words, etc. Send ten cents to Chas. S. Fee, general passenger agent, N. P. A PAIR OF BIG FEET.

The Princess Bismarck changed the political history of France unwittingly, and but for her the Franco-Prussian war might never have been waged.

Bismarck was unfriendly to France, but the Empress Eugenie hoped with her beauty to influence him so that the little trouble with France and Germany might be smoothed over. She therefore invited the German prince and his wife to visit the court of France, and the Prince and Princess Bismarck arrived in great state at the Tuileries.

That evening there was a grand reception, and Eugenie received the guests in a gown which made her so ravishingly lovely that even Prince Bismarck, German, stolid and in love with his wife, stood and gazed upon her with admiration. And Eugenie was not slow to observe the effect of her beauty upon him. She called him to her side, and Bismarck came with his wife upon his arm.

Now, the Princess Bismarck was tall and gaunt and ugly, and her feet were generous. As she walked she showed a great deal of sole.

While Bismarck stood talking with Eugenie an audible titter was heard along the line of ladies. Bismarck, who was quick as a flash, followed the glance of their eyes and saw them rest upon the feet of his wife.

That settled the matter. The political history of France was altered from that moment.

A year later, when Paris was besieged, Bismarck himself fired a cannon over the ramparts, and those who were near him heard him shout:

"Take that for the feet of the Princess Bismarck!"

The slight was avenged.

THE MYSTERY OF DREAMS.

A Case In Which the Coincidences Were Remarkable.

On an occasion during the civil war I dreamed that I was standing beside a road when there came marching along it a strong column of prisoners, with guards at intervals on the flanks. I asked one of these guards who the prisoners were and where they had been captured. He informed me that they had been taken in an engagement with the enemy on the day before and that there were 1,900 of them. I then asked some bystander what day of the month it was and was told that it was such a day of a certain month, some six weeks later than the date of the dream. It was soon after breakfast, and I was standing by the side of the road at the fire talking to the officer of the picket when an aid to the commanding general came riding down the road. He had been a schoolfellow of our officer's at West Point and reined up when he recognized his friend. He told us that he had good news, that there had been a sharp engagement with the enemy the day before and that our people had captured 1,900 prisoners, who had just passed the headquarters that morning on their way to the rear.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

NEW YORK WORLD.
THRICE-A-WEEK EDITION.
Practically a Daily at the Price of a Weekly.
The striking and important events of the last year have established the overwhelming value of The Thrice-a-Week World to every reader. For an almost nominal sum it has kept its subscribers informed of the progress of all our wars and, moreover, has reported them as promptly and fully as if it were a daily. With our interests still extending throughout the world, with our troops operating in the Philippines and the great Presidential campaign, too, at hand its value is further increased.
The motto of The Thrice-a-Week World is improved. It strives each year to be better than it was the year before, and public confidence in it is shown by the fact that it now circulates more than twice as many papers every week as any other newspaper, not a daily, published in America.
We offer this unequalled newspaper and The St. Hilaire Spectator together one year for $1.65.
The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2.50.

That he desires to have the tax which he pays on said land go toward the support of the school in the district in which he resides and that said land is but one mile from the school house in district No. 27, while it is two miles from the school house in District No. 81.

D. 1899, at the county auditor's office in Red Lake Falls, in said county; and whereas, it was further ordered in and by said order, that notice of the time and place of said hearing be given by posting a notice of said order in one public place in each of the school districts to be affected by said petition, and by handing to and leaving with the clerk of each of said school districts, personally, a copy of said notice, at least ten days before the time appointed for said hearing, and whereas, at the said session of the said board of county commissioners, commencing on the 5th day of September, A. Hearing was then had on school petition of Frank Laplante

On motion duly carried the same was laid on the table until January meeting.

Hearing was then had on the following ditch petition:

Petition For a Public Ditch.

To the Honorable, the Board of County Commissioners of Red Lake County, Minnesota:

The petition of the undersigned respectfully shows:

That your petitioners are the owners of certain lands in Red Lake County, over and through which the hereinafter described ditch, drain or water course, as well as the hereinafter described side, lateral, spur or branch ditch or ditches, will pass, and which lands will be liable to be affected by, or assessed for the expense of the construction of the same; and that the construction of said hereinafter described side, lateral, spur or branch ditch or ditches is necessary to secure the object of the improvement contemplated by the construction of said main or principal ditch. That the following is a general description of the proposed starting point, route and terminus of said proposed main or principal ditch, viz:

Commencing at or near the centre of the northwest quarter of the north east quarter of section twenty-one in township one hundred and fifty-three of range forty four, and running thence southeasterly through the southeast quarter of the north-east quarter of said section twenty-one, thence southeasterly through the west one-half of the southwest quarter of section twenty-two in said town and range: thence southerly through the central portion of the northeast quarter of section twenty-seven in said town and range, to abunt the centre of the south line of said last-mentioned quarter section, thence southeasterly through said section twenty seven, to the southeast corner of said section twenty-seven, thence south on the line between sections thirty-four and thirty-five to about the south west corner of the northwest quarter of said section thirty five, thence southeasterly to the southeast corner of the south west quarter of the southwest quarter of section thirty-five, thence easterly through the south portion of north half of the northeast quarter of section three, of town one hundred and fifty two of range forty four, thence southeasterly through the northwest quarter of the north west quarter, the southeast quarter the northwest quarter the northwest quarter and the east one half of the southeast quarter of section two in said last-mentioned town and range: thence southeasterly through the southwest of the southwest, and southeast of the southwest quarter of section one in last mentioned town and range, thence southeasterly through the northeast of the north west the northwest of the northeast; and the south half of the northeast of section twelve in township one hundred and fifty two, range forty-four, thence east along the quarter line running east and west through section seven, of township one hundred and fifty two range forty three to the Red Lake River;

Said last named point being the terminus of said proposed main or principal ditch.

Your petitioners further state that there are large tracts of lands lying adjacent to and in the vicinity of the line of said proposed main or principal ditch which will be directly and greatly benefited by the construction thereof, said lands being low and wet, and at certain seasons of every year they are covered with water, thereby rendering said lands unproductive and useless. That said water, during portions of every year, becomes stagnant and foul, rendering the atmosphere in the vicinity thereof impure and unwholesome, thereby endangering imperiling and affecting the health of the occupants of said lands and of the public. That for the reasons aforesaid the construction of such ditch, or ditches, is necessary, and also for the reason that by the construction thereof, there will thereby be removed from off said lands, said waters, thereby promoting the health of the public at large; that the same will be of great benefit to the public highways in the vicinity thereof, by preventing in many places the overflowing of such highways.

That large tracts of lands that are unproductive and useless will thereby be reclaimed and very greatly increased in value, all to the great benefit, utility, convenience of the public as well as your petitioners.

Therefore your petitioners respectfully ask that such proposed ditch or ditches be constructed as provided by the laws of Minnesota, and that the same may be of such width and depth as to insure the effectual and permanent drainage of said lands.

Flax is poison to itself. Flax following flax is invariably a failure. Four other crops, better six, should intervene before trying a second crop on the land. It is not a very good forerunner for any kind of crop, save as it is used in subduing a tough sod. The flax crop will be found to follow the breaking plow on the new farm and here it may be used to advantage.—Clear Lake Mirror.

Sixteen men from here—all expert river drivers—left early Sunday morning and by evening had the two million feet log jam at the rapids near the upper Falls broke and the logs moving at a rapid rate. This is the first log jam that the St. Hilaire Lumber Co., have experienced in their three years of business at this point and it was all an account of letting the water out of the upper Falls dam.

E. H. Pierce has severed his connection with the Grafton (N. D.) Record, the brightest and neatest looking paper that comes to our exchange table. A. L. Woods of the firm Pierce & Woods is now sole proprietor of the paper. "Hits and Mrs." will be greatly missed. We wish Mr. Woods success with the Record, and Ed will have his fortune made by clipping all his "Hits and Mrs." and publish them in book form.

The Clarkfield Advocate and the Nobles County Democrat shifted the cut last week, the former now runs 16 pages while the latter runs 8. Both good papers—all at home print and contain the same number of inches. Its only a matter of taste, but the Democrat tried both and found that the majority of its readers were better pleased with the six column quarto—hence the change back to its former size.

Be careful to return to the postoffice mail matter not belonging to you that you may have received through mistake. A new postal rule that recently went into effect is that persons who from carelessness or from any other reason take mail from the office that belongs to another, and who fail to return the same, are liable to a fine of $500 or one year's imprisonment. This applies to newspapers thus taken from a postoffice as well as to other mail matter.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS,

And Its Surroundings As Seen By Mrs. Rev. A. M. Lunds Who Has Been A Resident of That City For The Past Five Months. The Land of Cotton.

Mrs. A. M. Lunds returned yestesday from San Antonio, Texas, where she has spent the past five months for the benefit of her health. She reports feeling better, but may have to go back to the south during the cold winter months. San Antonio is a city of about 60,000 inhabitants; mostly Jews, Mexicans, Germans and Negros. The town is to a large extent different from ours in the north. Most of the dwellings were built years ago, they are one story high with several entrances from the street to the different rooms adjoining each other side by side. Of late years some residences of our modern style have been erected. In front of their dwellings they have planted the so called China-berry and Umbrella trees, that, with their large and thick foliage make a pleasant shade. The sky is clear and has very little moisture, one day is as the other. The thermometer in summer registers about 110 in the shade, and during mid-day it is almost impossible to be out of doors; however, a sunstroke is never heard of, this being due to the dryness of the air. They raise mostly for living vegetables, pears and figs; flour, butter, etc., is imported. For the market they raise corn and cotton. It is quite interesting to visit the large cotton fields, and views what we read about in our schools—the negros picking cotton under their yet severe masters. It makes one understand the just and noble cause that our brave boys fought for—the freedom of the slaves. Along what we term prairies, grows small shrubs and cactus; they burn the thorns of the cactus and feed the rest in place of hay to the stock. While this scenery appears around San Antonio, quite a different one is seen at other places by the traveler in the south.

The Theatre from the Inside.

That there are five thousand theatres in America, and the one million and a half people attend them each week-day night, spending seventy millions of dollars a year on theater-going, are the surprising facts with which Mr. Franklin Fyles, the dramatic editor of the New York Sun, will open an important series in the next issue of The Ladies Home Journal. The series will be called "The Theatre and Its People" and will run through seven numbers of the magazine, lavishly illustrated with pictures made by twelve different artists. The articles will treat of every phase of the theatre, the play and the actor, from the inside, and will tell how a theatre is managed; the actual money which plays have made; how an actor is trained and what the actors are actually paid; how a play is written and what the authors receive; how a play is rehearsed; the first night of a play; how the actresses "make up" and what they use; and in a minute way the two last articles will show what goes on behind the scenes on the stage during a performance. It is a curious fact that this will be the first time that the theatre and the actor have ever been exhaustively treated in a magazine, and that there is no book on the subject in existence.

Two of the locals that appeared in our last weeks issue have spread like oil on troubled waters and now its impossible to tell just where the three fellows reside who went out hunting that forgot to take their guns and dogs along. Of course, as we said before, it was the first offence of the three gunners and no names will be mentioned even to this date.

Help One Another.

Let us help one another This little sentence should be written on every memory. It should be the golden rule practiced not only in every household, but throughout the world. By helping one another, we not only remove thorns from the pathway and anxiety from the mind, but feel a sense of pleasure in our hearts, knowing that we are doing a duty to a fellow creature. A helping hand or an encouraging word is no less to us, yet it is a benefit to others. Who has not needed the encouragement and care of a kind friend? How soothing when perplexed with some task that is mysterious and burdensome, to feel a gentle hand on your shoulder and hear a voice whispering: Don't feel discouraged—I see your trouble, let me help you." What strength is inspired, what hope is created and what sweet gratitude is felt, and the great difficulty is dissolved as the dew before the morning sun! Let us help one another by endeavoring to strengthen and encourage the weak, by lifting the burden of a care from the weary and oppressed; that life may glide smoothly on, and the fount of bitterness yield sweet waters, and He whose willing hand is ever ready to aid us, will reward our humble endeavor, and every good deed will be as "bread cast upon the waters, to return after many days," to us and those we love.—Ex.

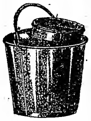
DAIRY AND POULTRY.

INTERESTING CHAPTERS FOR OUR RURAL READERS.

How Successful Farmers Operate This Department of the Farm—A Few Hints as to the Care of Live Stock and Poultry.

Dairy Notes.

Herewith we illustrate a sanitary milk pail in use by the Kansas Agricultural College. The idea is not new, and such pails have been used here and there for a long time. We do not know of any firm that has them for sale, but presume they can be easily manufactured by any tinner. The advantages of this kind of a pail must be obvious to any dairyman. It will certainly prevent from getting into the milk much of the matter that now gets in. The constant falling of dust from the cow into the milk is in a measure checked. If the cow lifts her foot she is not likely to get it into the fluid that is to be used as food for the family. Of course, this must be kept clean, or the strainer on top will become an element of danger rather than safety.



SANITARY MILK PAIL.

* * *

The time is at hand and in some counties is now here when the pastures will fail and the cows will either have to fall off in milk, receive green crops that have been planted for them before this time, or will be turned into the meadows. This latter is not a wise thing to do in most cases, but is done to a great extent. The amount of damage depends a good deal on both the condition of the sod and of the moisture in the soil. If there is a good sod, if the land has been well treated, the grass will be so thickly matted that there will be little damage, unless the ground is so soft that the tramping of the cattle will break the sod. If the sod is thin and the herbage light the cropping will do much damage to the crop next year; but in such cases it would be better to turn the meadow under late in the fall and put it into a cultivated crop for a few years. Where fields are to be turned under either this fall or in the early spring, the cropping now will be so much gain. Where it is expected to keep a meadow permanently it is certainly not a good policy to turn the cattle into it after a heavy rain, when the ground is soft.

Millet as a Feed to the Dairy.

Millet, says a bulletin of the agricultural department just published, is fed principally as a hay and soiling crop. The forage ranks well with that of other grasses in the nutritive content, and its palatability is about that of the average for the coarser sorts. For digestibility, millet forage compares favorably with that from other coarse grasses. Already widely grown as a hay crop, millets deserve more general use for soiling. They are particularly valuable for feeding to dairy cattle, young stock, and sheep. There are many sections of the country where this crop can be made to supplement the pastures in such a way as to allow a material increase in the number of stock that can be kept on the farm. On account of the heavy yield of forage and the good quality of the product, millets are excellent grasses for use in the silo. Frequently a good crop of millet can be raised under conditions which would not admit of growing corn for ensiling, and in such instances it becomes of especial value. One of the best methods of preserving this crop is by the use of the silo. Those who have tried this method have obtained excellent results. A fine quality of ensilage may be made by using barnyard millet and a leguminous crop like soy beans or clover. The seed of the foxtail millets is widely used as food for fowls and birds but is seldom fed to stock. It has, however, been used in feeding young stock, such as calves, with a fair degree of success. The seed is an excellent food for laying hens.

Vaccination for Blackleg.

The Virginia Experiment Station has issued a bulletin for the purpose of instructing stock owners how to obtain and use blackleg vaccine for the purpose of preventing the disease among their cattle. The vaccine is prepared by drying pieces of muscle taken from the swelling of an affected animal. After being finely ground it is heated at a temperature of 92 to 93 degrees centigrade for a period of six hours. It is then pulverized to a fine powder and if kept perfectly dry will keep for a year or more. This dried muscle contains the spores of the germ of blackleg, which spores are so weakened by the heat process that their injection into the animal does not cause a virulent form of the disease, but at the same time protects the animal from any future attack of it. The immunity so produced is said to be lasting in animals over six months of age. In the Year Book of the United States department of agriculture for 1898 the statement is made that from results gotten from the use of vaccine, the loss has been reduced from 10 to 20 per cent to less than 1 per cent. Up to the present time the Virginia station has been supplied with a limited amount of vaccine by the Bureau of Animal Industry, in all, about four thousand doses, of which about 3,800 doses have been distributed to the farmers of that state. Although no call has yet been made for reports of results the station has heard of but two deaths occurring after vaccination, amounting to a very small fraction of 1 per cent, while several have reported their loss as high as 25 per cent before vaccination. Vaccination has now become so general in Virginia that the station has decided to manufacture its own vaccine for free distribution in the state. The only expense to the stock owner in vaccinating his herd is the vaccinating outfit, which consists of a graduated hypodermic syringe, mortar and pestle, glass funnel, cotton for filtering and a small measuring glass.

Our Live Stock

It is doubtful just what position the American stock interests will hold at the Paris exposition next year, as there is a manifest desire among Americans to keep their high-priced breeding stock at home. They are in favor of sending fat cattle that may be killed at the end of their time of exhibition, but they are too fearful of contagious diseases to risk animals that must be returned to this country. It is said to be a fact that stock diseases are far more prevalent in Europe than in this country. America has, at great expense and after years of warfare, exterminated some of the worst diseases, and it is not probable that either the Secretary of Agriculture or the leading stockmen of the country want to give the said diseases a chance to re-establish themselves on our soil. The possibility of contagion at Paris is very great. Animals will be brought from all parts of Europe, and it is possible that more or less disease will be brought with them.

* * *

The government is making slow but sure progress in its investigations of hog cholera and swine plague. Since 1891 this work has been going steadily forward. Progress has been impeded by the fact that one serum could not be produced that would be equally efficacious as against hog cholera and swine plague. Nevertheless it was found that by injecting animals with both kinds of serums or the products of hog cholera and swine plague, a very large percentage of the animals was saved. A report on the tests made in Page County, Iowa, says: "To give the general results with the work carried out under the direction of Dr. Dorset, it may be stated that out of 196 animals treated with the mixed serums 161 were saved, or about 82 per cent. The disease existed on all of the farms where treatment was carried out, a number of animals had already died, and about 50 per cent of the animals treated were ill at the time of injection with the serum. In the check herds there were originally 429 animals, and the disease had begun both in these check herds and in the treated herds about the same time. In the herds which were not treated, only about 15 per cent of the animals recovered. Comparing these two sets it would appear that the serum had reduced the mortality about 67 per cent. It is understood, of course, that all of the animals were under the same conditions after treatment as before. As a rule, the animals appeared to begin to improve very shortly after the injection of the serum. One herd was treated with a culture alone without serum. Only 40 per cent of the herd so treated was saved. In another case a herd which was in very poor condition at the time of inoculation was treated with a mixed swine plague serum and a dead culture. Eighty per cent of these animals was saved, while in a third similar case where the condition of the animals was very poor, only 3? per cent was saved."

Airing Incubator Eggs.

J. E. Stevenson, writing in Rural New Yorker, says: One who advised that airing was unnecessary probably makes a machine with a great amount of ventilation. There are very few machines now with automatic egg-turning devices for turning eggs without removing from the egg chamber, and nearly all authorities prefer taking them out for turning, when they are sure to get a slight airing twice each day. If the change from 103 degrees to 60 degrees or less for the few minutes required for turning is too great, what about the setting hen that must come off occasionally for food and water, even though the temperature is 20 degrees or less? She will stay off in zero weather much longer than the time required to turn the eggs from an incubator. In my opinion the change, if not long enough to chill the eggs, will give stronger chicks than the continually closed machine or the hen that sits more closely. It is much easier to get the desired air space in the eggs when the incubator room is at 50 degrees than when at 80 degrees, and I find it much easier to get out good hatches of strong chicks in the early spring than in hot weather.

The Farm Horse.—Strength is not the sole requisite in a farm horse. The true farmer's horse is one equally serviceable in dragging the plow and trotting to market with a light wagon, says the Rural World. The farm horse should thus be a cross between the draft and road horse. Courage, determination and quickness in taking hold of loads are very important qualities in this kind of a horse. An animal weighing 1,100 pounds with these good qualities will often be more serviceable than the team that weighs hundreds of pounds more. A quick, steady walker, is very essential. Did you ever stop to compute how many days' work you could save in plowing a field with a quick walking horse? The animal that gets over the ground rapidly saves time and money to the owner. A slow walker is poorer for farm work than a slow trotter, and the time lost thereby is much greater.

Economical Feeding.—An economical food is early-cut hay, silage from mature corn, oats and peas. An uneconomical way is to give the herd late cut hay, silage from immature corn, roots, new and untried crops. The reason for the early cutting of hay is because you get more digestible protein or milk forming food than in a late cut. Mature corn only should go into the silo; otherwise it causes an expensive watering of stock. Corn has proven to be more digestible when it is cut just as the kernel begins to glaze. Experiments have proven that the silage of everything is the most economical way of handling the grain crop, owing to the amount of milk given and the amount of butter produced being more on the food from the silo than in other ways of harvesting it.—Prof. J. L. Hill.

CURRENT NOTES OF DISCOVERY AND INVENTION.

To Bring Death Quickly—Paper at the Telephone—Failure of Oil-Fuel Test—A Deadly Motor Quadricycle—Cold Does Not Make Metal Brittle.

Failure of Oil-Fuel Tests.

It has been decided to abandon the trials of oil fuel that have been made on the torpedo-boat destroyer Surly of the British navy on the ground that it is impracticable unless some special arrangements are made for consuming the smoke produced by the oil. The experiments have been in progress about a year, and important results were anticipated by believers in the system, who argued that the liquid fuel not only would be cheaper and cleaner, but would also save labor in stoking. In the course of the tests the Surly went to sea but once, when it was found that the speed and power developed were far less than when coal was used, owing to the low evaporative qualities of the oil fuel. Various appliances were tried to prevent the escape of heat with the smoke, but no solution to the difficulty was found, and owing to the density, dirtiness, and nauseous smell of the smoke, it became a positive nuisance. The failure of these tests is not entirely a disappointment to British naval men in view of the enormous changes that would have to be made not only in adopting the present machinery of war vessels to new conditions, but also in securing and maintaining adequate supplies of oil fuel at coaling stations and naval depots in various quarters of the globe.

A Deadly Motor Quadricycle.

Military attaches in London have expressed considerable interest in a new military motor quadricycle. The machine is driven by an automatic petroleum motor, and mounts a twenty-seven pound automatic Maxim gun, capable of discharging 600 rounds per minute when traveling along at the rate of fifteen miles an hour. The driver is protected by a bullet-proof steel shield of extreme lightness, while in front of him within easy reach he carries, on two specially designed trays, 1,000 rounds of ammunition in cases, each containing 100 cartridges. Should the machine be disabled, the gun can be easily taken from the car and mounted upon a tripod. The other day the operator sent his machine flying around the track at the maximum speed while he fired with startling rapidity 100 rounds in volleys of ten at stationary objects. The experiment was witnessed by the military attaches of the embassies of France, Germany, and the United States, and by a large contingent from the British war office.

Power of the Mannlicher Rifle.

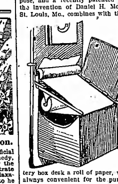
The power of the Mannlicher rifle was recently demonstrated in an accident near Prague, the Bohemian capital. Two gendarmes entered a room in an inn and closed the door, putting their rifles in the corner. One rifle fell and discharged itself, the bullet going through the door into the next room, where a party was dancing, passed through the body of a musician, killing him, and then through the bodies of five other men, all of whom were dangerously wounded.

Electric Lifters.

In some steel manufactories electromagnets have been substituted in place of hooks for lifting plates and bars. The magnet being put into contact with the center of a bar or plate, the current is turned on, and instantly the magnetic grip becomes effective. The crane then carrying the magnet then swings its load to the required position, when the current being turned off, the magnet immediately releases its hold.

Paper at the Telephone.

A desk or table convenient for jotting down memoranda is regarded as a telephone essential. In the wall telephone the battery box is made with an inclined top suitable for this purpose, and a recently patented device, the invention of Daniel H. Moore of St. Louis, Mo., combines with the battery box desk a roll of paper, which is always convenient for the purpose of making notes. The top consists of two parts, hinged, and one folding over the other. The top one forms the ordinary desk top, but being lifted reveals a sheet of paper. This sheet forms the end of a reel, which is held in the top of the battery box, and the necessary notes being made the sheet is drawn along by means of two rollers and the used part severed by means of a convenient knife edge.



Cold Does Not Make Metal Brittle.

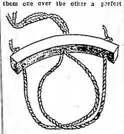
The common belief that steel and iron become brittle and more liable to break when subjected to great cold is contradicted by the results of experiments made at Cornell university. It has been shown there that the strength of steel and wrought iron is least at a temperature of 70 degrees Fahrenheit, and that it increases when the temperature either rises or falls from that point. At 500 degrees above zero and 60 degrees below zero the strength is increased about 20 per cent. The elastic limit also rises slightly with increase of cold.

Steam in Place of Gunpowder.

Maj.-Gen. Schaw has suggested, before the Institution of Mining Engineers in London, the substitution of water for gunpowder in blasting cartridges used in coal mines. His plan is to fill the cartridge with pure water, insert it in the drill hole, and then turn the water into high pressure steam by means of an electric current of low tension. A cartridge made to resist a pressure of 150 pounds per square inch could be caused to burst, according to Gen. Schaw's calculations, within about one minute after the turning on of the current.

To Bring Death Quickly.

A doctor of Baltimore is the inventor of a contrivance for hanging criminals, which he claims will not fail to break the neck, says the News of that city. The number of instances in which the culprit dies a slow death from strangulation are well known, and the device, a cut of which is here published, has worked admirably on dolls and manakins. The contrivance does away with the hangman's knot and cannot slip. A bar of steel, curved to the shape of a human neck, has ropes leading to the center of the inside of the curve, which pass through a hole in the middle of the bar. By pulling the ropes out a few inches and crossing them one over the other a perfect noose is made, easy in slip, but when once attached rigid in action. The inventor would have the condemned stand on a low platform, with no drop, and the other end of the rope attached to a weight heavier than the criminal. When all is ready the weight is dropped from a shelf and plunges heavily to the ground, jerking the criminal in the air with such force as to surely break his neck with the doctor's device. Having reached the zenith of its flight the body would as speedily descend, the neck being thus given another killing wrench, which would certainly cause a fracture if the first movement failed.



Recent Inventions.

To increase the tension of exercising apparatus which employs elastic cords in place of weights, auxiliary cords are provided, with hooks at either end by which they can be fastened in the rings which connect the main cord with the base and grips.

For the amusement of the children a new toy is in the form of a parachute, which is attached to the head of an arrow, to be shot into the air in a closed condition, the stem of the arrow acting as the balance and causing the parachute to open in its descent.

As a protection for cycle frames during shipment an Englishman has patented a covering of felt tubing cut into lengths of the proper size to fit the different tubes, with spring clips secured to the felt on the outside to hold it securely in place on the frame.

Boiler tubes can be rapidly and thoroughly cleaned by a Michigan man's device, an accumulator being formed of sheets built up of strands of vegetable fiber, with wires interlaced, making a circular mass, which is surrounded by a wire cage to scrape the flues.

A Vermont man has patented a snow plow which can be attached to an ordinary pair of sleighs, consisting of a V-shaped plow suspended on two vertical rods, with pivoted levers set in brackets in the box to engage the rods and adjust the height of the plow.

Curves of any desired shape can be drawn by a new Swedish drawing instrument, which has a straight, screw-threaded rod, on which are arranged a number of revolving sleeves, which carry flexible steel strips, to be formed into the desired curves by moving the sleeves.

Churns can be operated by the feet by the use of a new mechanism, in which an upright frame carries a sliding head, to be attached to the dasher, with springs to raise the head, a pair of hinged pedals being attached to the base to depress the dasher in the cream.

An electric door-opener has been patented by which a push button can be used to draw the latch and allow a caller to enter, a sliding bar being suspended in proximity to a magnet, so that a push on the button completes the circuit and pulls the bars out of connection with the latch.

An English woman has patented a separable muff lining, which can be fitted to a muff of any size, being formed of a soft fabric shaped into a tube, with flanges at either end, the central portion being provided with longitudinal tension cords to take up the lining until it is the right length.

Boston, Mass., a Model City.

Boston, Mass., is generally regarded as near a model city as the United States can boast of. It has the best paved streets, the most comprehensive sewerage system, the most adequate water supply and the most satisfactory public park scheme of any city in the country, while its school and library facilities are also of the best. The city auditor's report, just published, gives an idea of what all that costs the 500,000 people resident there. The total expenditure of the year was $40,203,678.34, of which $34,071,748.83 was for regular department expenses. The public library cost $324,368, the parks $551,878, the schools $3,302,487, and the water $3,302,487. The total expenditure for parks since the present system was adopted is $15,196,320, of which $6,540,138 was for land and $8,656,182 was for construction.

A Fraternal Privilege.

"No, Mr. Kicker," said the sweet girl, "I can only be a sister to you."

"Well, then," he savagely replied, as he heard a subdued chuckle, "as your brother I shall claim the privilege of lying under the sofa while you make fools of the other fellows."—Brooklyn Life.

WON'T MAKE IT PUBLIC.

Dr. Keeley Declines to Let Others Know His Wonderful Formula.

Various doctors have endeavored to have Dr. Leslie E. Keeley make public the formula for making his wonderful remedy, but Dr. Keeley has absolutely declined to do so. Considerable ill-feeling was engendered on the part of some doctors, who evidently tried to get possession of the wonderful old man's secret for their own benefit. A few days ago Dr. Keeley was a guest of Manager Frank R. E. Woodward at the Institute in Minneapolis, located at the corner of Tenth street south and Park avenue.

"After making my discovery," said Dr. Keeley, "I spent eleven years in experiment, perfecting the treatment. I maintain all information in relation to the making of the remedy a secret, because I believe that the only protection for suffering humanity lies in guarding the formula so that it can be successfully administered. In the hands of the ignorant, or the careless, or the young doctors of an experimental turn of mind, its use would soon become abused and discredited.

"If I believed my remedy would be made in all its purity, handled only by the educated members of the medical profession, and administered in the proper way, I would most cheerfully make it known to the world. That such would be the case is impossible, however. Unscrupulous persons would pretend to improve on it and adulterate it for added pecuniary gain. This would result in reported failures, which would finally utterly discredit it."

Dr. Keeley denounces the frauds which claim to use his medicines, and says the Minneapolis Institute is the only real Keeley Institute in Minnesota. He is very proud of the Minneapolis Institute, because it does such good work.

There are many frauds and imitators which promise impossibilities. There is no cure but the Keeley Cure. Those interested in the subject of the Keeley Cure can secure information by writing to 629 Tenth street south, Minneapolis, Minn.

Reform Press Bureau.
St. Paul, Sept. 18, 1899.

Occasionally we come in contact with a man of the best of parts, one who loves his country, who is patriotic enough to vote whenever the election comes round, but who with all his intelligence, education and refinement, because he is himself in comfortable circumstances whether the country is really prosperous or not, will not investigate or has not investigated, the financial question as it is presented in politics. Such a God-fearing and well-meaning man, a Republican, wrote to us the other day:

"I agree with you in some things political, especially numbers (so and so, referring to the platform on which Governor Lind was elected) but I should disagree with you if you advocated free coinage of silver at 16 to 1; or if you proposed to interfere with our protective tariff."

On the one point, we have sent the friend documents by which, if he will religiously read, he will be convinced that free coinage is absolutely the only road by which our producers can be relieved from the ruinous competition of silver using countries, and which will aid, at least, in checking that absorption of the wealth of the country in the hands of the few, which is rapidly impoverishing the masses and destroying the small dealers, rapidly producing the two classes of the Old Country, the very rich and the very poor; that this ruinous foreign policy of the past two decades is the cause of trusts and combines, against which warning after warning is given daily by our ablest public men, as threatening the very besom of destruction.

As to the cherished tariff, it is not wholly responsible for the threatening conditions, as witness the fact that the trust exists in free trade England. But mark this point, that the trust flourishes only or best in the lands of the gold standard and absolute sway of the money power. Still it means much that old time extreme protectionists like ex-Senator Washburn recognize that those trusts flourish most where most "protected," hence his recent earnest appeal to his party to prepare to attack the monster evil so portentous of disaster, immediately the congress meets, his remedy being to remove the tariff from those trusts controlled articles!

What means it that the pulpit thunders that sin, insanity, suicide, poverty, crime and all forms of wretchedness, are constantly on the increase in beloved America, where with our intelligence and opportunity we should be the happiest and most prosperous people of the world? It means that we are reaping the fruits of the wicked financial system, the chief feature of which is concentration of wealth in the hands of the few, while degradation and enslavement are the inevitable portion for the masses. Senator Washburn has shown this in his own individual case, in the changes he has seen. "As a young man," said he, "all the world was open to me for a fair field, for a fair fight." Now such avenues to individual success are closed, being in the grip of monopoly, trusts and gold!

It is impossible to express the enormous concentration, under the special privileges due to wicked legislation and non-enforcement of law. In 1860, when our population was 35,000,000, and our wealth $16,000,000,000, our producers owned 46 per cent of the total wealth, and the non-producers 54 per cent. Five years later, when no great increase in relative ownership had occurred, Lincoln delivered his famous warning of the danger of concentration of wealth and political power. That danger increased faster than Lincoln ever dreamed might be the case. By the census of 1890, when our population had grown to 12,500,000 families, and our wealth to $60,000,000,000, TWO PER CENT of the total population owned THREE-FOURTHS of all our wealth. But in 1898 the non-producers of the country, who are only 2 per cent of our 75,000,000 population, owned 83 per cent of all our wealth, while the producers of wealth, who are 98 per cent of all the population, owned but 14 per cent of the total wealth.

When Babylon fell, 2 per cent of her people owned practically all her wealth. When old Egypt fell, similar conditions obtained, and when Persia fell, 1 per cent of her people owned all her lands. Relatively we are making giant strides toward the fate of Babylon, Egypt, and Rome. And yet well meaning country-loving men say do not touch the system, either the financial or the tariff, under which this condition has been produced.

There is every prospect that the Thirteenth's reception will be a successful and happy affair, except for the apparent determination of partisan cliques in both the Twin Cities, to reap Republican advantage through the presence of President McKinley. The president can come without the slightest impropriety, provided the coming is properly managed, and provided the president does not, as on recent occasions, do any stump speaking on his own account. And he can well afford to leave that to Roosevelt, Depew and the rest, who will do Hanna's bidding next year.

Apropos, the Minneapolis preparations, for instance, seem more like arranging for a big Republican convention. The people remark that committees are made up almost exclusively of prominent Republicans. The managers have asked for and received Democratic money, but keep affairs exclusively in goppite hands. Selah.

Mr. Towne will return to America better equipped than ever for the great battle in which he will be so valiant a knight. It may possibly be exposing a secret, but in view of the great work before him, both in the campaigns this fall and his own next year, there is talk of a great reception to him on his return to the state, an ovation from his congressional district.

There is, these days, a large amount of "Remembering of the grades," meaning the state grain department. The manifest improvement of the department, with the installing of the "reform" officials gives encouragement to all. The farmer is really taking new hope, while the buyers universally testify to a feeling of relief, for they know that it is not necessary to "watch" anybody.

Speaking with a Minneapolis buyer the other day, he said that all who have come in contact with the new head of the weighing department, Hon. John O'Brien, are convinced that Governor Lind landed the right man in the right place in his appointment. "We are beginning to get a let-up," said he, "from the constant friction of varying weights, and 'overs and shorts' are not requiring any such amount of attention as formerly."

What a nasty lot of scandals have followed that department, for years past. As far back as 1893 these were brought out quite fully in the Moore investigation, the report of which, smothered in the Republican legislature, was made to Governor Merriam, and is on file. In a single case there disclosed, there was a shortage of 15,000 bushels: That was the C. C. Wolcott case. To test the reason of the shortage, Mr. Wolcott caused 40 cars of wheat to be loaded out of a Minneapolis elevator, as if to be shipped out of the city, and managed to have the same 40 cars immediately weighed into another elevator in Minneapolis, all the weighing being done by the state officers. The weight in was short $1,000 worth of wheat, and the parties interested were paid the money, and the matter was kept still until brought out in sworn testimony in the Alliance investigation.

If much has been recently accomplished by political success of the reform forces, we must recollect that primarily more was done, in agitation and struggle by the pioneers of the reform movement.

The report above referred to, if not to be found in the legislative files, can be seen in the files of the Henning Advocate of July 7, 1893, then conducted by Frank Hoskins. Mr. H. paid the penalty of his aggressiveness and courage, but has lived to see substantial results.

All that the goppite press have found to criticise recently, was the alleged fact that he "forgot" to appoint delegates to the Chicago Republican trust convention. Governor Lind is not one of the "forgot" kind. He well knows the cause of the trusts and the true remedy, and that if it were possible for the creature to be greater than the creator, the Republican party might possibly overthrow the trusts. However, having whole control of the government at the coming session of congress, it is only decent to give them a chance to see what the creature can do with the maker in this case.

Once more the St. Cloud reformatory board has met and Houlton still hangs on, in spite of the rottenness proven even by Republicans themselves. And the band plays on.

The state board of equalization has materially raised the valuation of farmers' sheep, now let us hear from corporation franchises.

Why all this anxiety and trouble, such as affected Senator Washburn so deeply? Will there not be in December an administration Republican in every branch, with powers to legislate all the way from premiums for dead Filipinos to the total destruction of the trusts? What are you afraid of anyhow?

Writes Martin E. Tew of the Thirteenth, one of the heroes of that fighting regiment, of the feeling of the regiment on the Filipino question:

"If we were in the places of the Filipinos we would consider ourselves cowards and ignominious knaves if we did not fight. I presume there are those who will call me a "traitor" for saying this, but no one can accuse me of failure to do my duty as a soldier. Nearly all the soldiers feel just as I do in regard to this war, and there will be a good many broken heads if the imperialists attempt to label these men as "traitors" when they return home."

When the political kissing bug has got in his work on Your Uncle Loren Fletcher's third term ambition, the congressman will look very like thirty cents.

And by the way, in the Hennepin county district the talk is that P. B. Winston will run against Fletcher. That would settle it.

And speaking of Governor Lind's having sent no official representative to the trust-excusing convention, was not Professor Folwell, professor of gold standard economics in the university, there, and was not also Brother Hanley of the grain growers association?

This week all eyes are again Chicagoward, in the meetings of the Democratic National Sub-Committees, Minnesota represented by Hon. Thomas D. O'Brien of the Executive Committee.

KILLED IN A RIOT

BLOODY STREET FIGHT AT CARTERVILLE, ILL.

Negro Miners and White Miners Indulge in a Shooting Affray in Which Six of the Negroes Are Killed and One Mortally Wounded—Negroes Worked Up Into a Frenzy and Further Trouble Is Feared—One Company of Militia Is Sent by Gov. Tanner, and Another Will Follow.

Carterville, Ill., Sept. 18.—Carterville was the scene of a bloody riot about noon yesterday in which six negroes were instantly killed and one wounded unto death, while two others received slight wounds. Trouble has been hovering ever since the militia was recalled by Gov. Tanner last Monday. The white miners of this place have refused to allow the negro miners to come into town, always meeting them and ordering them back. Yesterday, however, thirteen negroes, all armed, marched into town, going to the Illinois Central depot, where they exchanged a few words with the white miners there, when the negroes pulled their pistols and opened fire on the whites, who at once returned the fire, when a running fight was kept up. The negroes scattered but were closely followed by the whites, running up the main street, while the remainder took down the railroad track. Here the execution was done, all who went through the town escaping. After the fight was over six dead bodies were picked up and another mortally wounded. They were taken to the city hall, where the wounded man was attended to and an inquest held over the dead ones.

Trouble has existed here off and on for more than a year, but no fatalities occurred until June 30, when a passenger train on the Illinois Central was fired into and a negro woman was killed. These negroes were on their way to the mines, having come from Pana. A short time afterward a pitched battle ensued between the union and non-union forces, during which time the dwellings occupied by the union negroes were burned. Several arrests were made and the parties are in jail at Marion on the charge of murder, awaiting trial. The mayor has taken every precaution to prevent further trouble, and none will occur unless the negroes make an attack. It is now rumored, however, that the state militia will be here within a short time. If they arrive no further trouble is looked for. Supt. Donely, of the Brush mines, where the negroes reside, reports that the negroes are worked up into a frenzy, and that while he is doing all in his power to hold them in check he is afraid that he cannot do so much longer, and that unless the militia arrives shortly further trouble may be expected.

Company C, Fourth regiment, I. N. G., arrived here late last night and will endeavor to preserve order. Forty miners from the Herrin mine district left that place for this city, armed with Krag-Jorgensen rifles, and are determined to assist the white miners here if their services are required.

Gov. Tanner Sends Troops.

Springfield, Ill., Sept. 18.—Gov. Tanner has ordered two companies of the Fourth regiment, under command of Col. Bennett, to Carterville. He received a telegram yesterday afternoon from Samuel Brush, manager of the St. Louis and Big Muddy Coal company at Carterville, that five of a crowd of his negro miners who had gathered at a depot preparatory to leaving, had been killed, a mob having fired upon them. Later advices reported seven killed and a number wounded. Late last night Gov. Tanner received the following telegram from Sheriff Gray: "Company C has reported to me. The situation is critical. There are many armed men in Carterville and in the vicinity of the Brush mine. The military company is not sufficient to disperse the mob."

SMALLPOX AT THE PRESIDIO.

One Case Appears at the General Hospital.

San Francisco, Sept. 18. — Smallpox has broken out at the Presidio hospital. The case is that of a member of the newly organized Thirtieth volunteer regiment, who was sent to the hospital on Tuesday, supposed to be suffering from chickenpox. Saturday the doctors decided that the disease was smallpox and the patient was sent to the pesthouse. Ward 1, in which the man had been, was fumigated, and the hospital was quarantined. A number of Minnesota men are in the hospital, but the doctors refuse to say whether they are in the same ward.

"I would be willing to say that there is not a man in the Minnesota regiment who would catch the smallpox if he had been in the next cot at the hospital," said Dr. Ritchie last evening. "They were all exposed in Luzon, and those who have not had it are not going to have it. It is thought that the disease will not spread, but the hospital has been closed to all visitors and most of the Minnesota men who are convalescent have been sent back to camp."

Gov. Lind received a letter asking if he would receipt to the captains of the companies for such arms and equipment as he wanted for the return of the regiment. He is visiting relatives across the bay and will not return until morning, when he will probably answer in the affirmative. The captains of the companies are held personally responsible for the arms, and they will not take them back unless Gov. Lind receipts for them.

GIVEN A HEARTY WELCOME.

German Catholic Central Society Meets at St. Paul.

St. Paul, Sept. 18.—St. Paul has extended a hearty welcome to the visiting delegates of the German Catholic Central Society of North America, and they will begin their deliberations at the state capitol this morning with a feeling that the famed hospitality of the North Star State is something deeper and more tangible than a name. The city turned over its streets that a peaceful pageant of 12,000 men might attest the greatness of the organization to which these visitors belong. A mighty battalion of men, followers of the Catholic faith, marched to the strains of thirty bands, while St. Paul and the population of the surrounding country to the number of 50,000 looked on and applauded.

Yesterday was really the preparatory step for the work that will begin today. The delegates visited the capitol early in the morning and listened to addresses of welcome by Mayor Kiefer and F. M. Kerst, the first president, and response in their behalf by President A. Weber. At Assumption church they attended the celebration of high mass by Archbishop Ireland, and listened to a sermon.

The real work of the convention begins this morning when the business session begins at the state capitol at 10 o'clock. It is expected that nearly six hundred delegates will be in their places, representing the prominent German Catholic societies of the country.

INDIANS OBSTREPEROUS.

Uintahs Leave Their Reservation Without Permission.

Denver, Sept. 18.—News has reached Gov. Thomas that a band of Uintah Indians have left their reservation in Utah without permission to hunt in Colorado in violation of the state game laws. It is feared the Uintahs will be joined by the Ourays and Uncompahgres, and that later will seek to be avenged on the settlers for the killing of three of their tribe in a battle with game wardens two years ago. The governor has appealed to the authorities at Washington for a detail of United States troops to afford protection.

FIRE LOSS LIGHT.

Milwaukee Escapes a Big Conflagration.

Milwaukee, Sept. 18.—A fire which threatened to be destructive broke out in the foundry of the Milwaukee Harvester company's big plant. The flames, however, were gotten under control when damage aggregating $10,000 was wrought. Several barrels of resin stored in the foundry caught fire and twelve firemen were overcome from the fumes. They were quickly restored to consciousness and none of them suffered serious injury. The work of the two fire tugs prevented what would have been a heavy loss.

ROBBED AND KILLED.

Tramps Attack West Superior Men and Kill One.

Duluth, Minn., Sept. 18.—A special to the News-Tribune from Fargo, N. D., says: W. Howard and E. M. Jenkins, his son-in-law, of West Superior, were held up by tramps on a Northern Pacific train near Casselton. Howard was pushed off the top of a box car and lay near the track until morning in a heavy rain. He died in the evening from his injuries. The two men had $25 and a watch, which were taken. Howard and Jenkins were on the road to Montana to work in the silver mines.

BOERS MEAN FIGHT

THAT IS THE PLAIN ENGLISH OF IT.

The Transvaal Note Is Regarded as an Unsatisfactory and Dangerous Composition—Suzerainty and the Right of Interference Repudiated by President Kruger—All the Dispatches From South Africa Speak of the Imminence of Hostilities and the Preparations for Them.

London, Sept. 18.—The Morning Post says: "The Boers mean to fight. That is the plain English of it."

The Standard says: "The Transvaal note is unsatisfactory and, indeed, a dangerous composition. It might be going too far to say that the last hope of peace has vanished or that diplomacy had said its final word, but it is clear the leaders of the Transvaal have brought the country to the very brink of a disaster, which the British government has done its best to avoid."

The Daily Mail says: "President Kruger's defiance has terminated a long period of unrest and uncertainty in South Africa, for whatever may be the issue of the present situation, one thing is plain, that dualism in South Africa will end forever."

The Daily Chronicle says: "We regret that the Boers, by rejecting a fair offer made in fair language have taken a line given fresh point to the argument of their enemies that President Kruger is a shifty and impracticable politician, fit only to be spoken to across a line of bayonets."

These extracts fairly represent press opinion in London. All the papers characterize the attempt to represent Conyngham Greene as suggesting the Transvaal's former proposals as mere shifty prevarication.

The Pretoria correspondent of the Morning Post, in his summary of the Transvaal reply, says the Transvaal repudiates suzerainty and the right of interference, and denies that either State Attorney Smutz, of the government, would withdraw its denial of a right to interfere in the affairs of the Transvaal. The correspondent adds: "The reply anticipates a final alternative of a British note by saying that further suggestions on the lines indicated are vain."

All of the dispatches from South Africa this morning talk of the imminence of hostilities and the preparation for them. In Johannesburg it seems to be taken for granted that the Orange Free State has approved President Kruger's note and promised active assistance in the event of war.

PETITION FOR CONFEDERATION.

First Address From South Australia Is Received in London.

London, Sept. 18.—The first address praying for confederation arrived this week from South Australia. Others are expected soon. The secretary of state for the colonies, Mr. Chamberlain, is expected to bring in the federal enabling bill early next session, which is the only step now required to fill the desire of the Australians. The joint majority in favor of the commonwealth bill in the colony is estimated at 200,000. Lord Jersey, it is rumored, will be the first governor general, and Sir George Turner the first premier.

CRUELLY TORTURED.

Yaqui Indians Capture a Chief Who Remained Loyal to Mexico.

Mazatlan, Mex., Sept. 18. —Private advices from Sonora show that Chief Tetabiat, of the Yaquis, who remained loyal to the Mexican government, was seized by the rebels and cruelly tortured, being stripped, slashed with knives and his body shockingly mutilated, while the Yaquis danced about him, taunting him and crying out: "Take your peace, now you are punished for siding with the Mexican government." This incident indicates the character of the Mexican Indians who are as cruel as the Apaches.

Warning to Americans.

London, Sept. 18.—A meeting of the creditors of Scots' American exchange has revealed unsecured indebtedness to the amount of £3,039, and peculiar methods of business. The collapse is a warning to Americans, as doubtless many bogus and other concerns will be started here in anticipation of a rush to Paris with less capital and cause for existence than characterized their predecessors.

Senator Elkins' Great Scheme.

During the presidential campaign of 1892 Senator Quay and Senator Elkins, who were managing the Republican interests, and ex-Senator Brice and Henry Watterson, who were in charge of the Democratic headquarters, used to live at the same hotel and frequently dined together. One evening, as they were sitting at the same table, Mr. Brice looked over to Senator Quay and asked:

"How are you folks off for money?"

"We are very hard up," replied the Republican chairman. "How are you getting along?"

"Well," said Brice, "whenever we want money I go down into my own pocket for it. I have not been able to get much anywhere else."

"You are lucky to have a pocket to go into," said Senator Quay. "If I had money of my own, I would not grumble."

"But," said Brice, "I have to borrow it."

"Gentlemen," said Senator Elkins, "I have a suggestion to make. Suppose we four go down town tomorrow and borrow $1,000,000 upon our joint indorsement and divide it between the two parties and then let whichever one wins pay the notes?"—Chicago Record.

Gladstone's Peculiar Eyes.

There is an anecdote in Blackwood's of Gladstone and Professor Blackie which confirms the story of the statesman's eaglelike eyes. At a dinner the two men were opposite, and when Gladstone gave in a forcible way his idea that Homer was no longer recited but chanted, the professor cried out, "Mr. Gladstone, I don't believe a word of it!" Then he rose to argue the matter and said one sentence, but got no further. He had met Gladstone's gaze and seen his outer eyelids widened to their fullness in a steady glare, and his tongue stumbled and he sank back into his chair in confusion. The writer concludes:

"Go to the zoo for it. Take your umbrella. Make your way to the place where the eagles, vultures, falcons and such like creatures blink on their perches. Select a bird. Stare at him with insult, and you will see the outer lids expand as Mr. Gladstone's did. Poke at him with your umbrella. The flinty vertical lids through which he looks at the sun and opens to paralyze his prey will part, and then you will see what Blackie saw and understand his feelings."

Not the Advice Expected.

After spending more than a quarter of a century in active business life in the city a certain merchant purchased a ranch which he considers to be admirably adapted for dairy farming. Having had no practical training in agricultural pursuits, he is dependent for his knowledge of the art upon those books which purport to tell the urban bred how to do the trick. He desires to learn all he can concerning dairying and for advice betook himself to his friend and pastor, Rev. Dr. Stebbins, in whose omniscience and wide reading he has absolute confidence.

"Do you know anything good on milk, doctor?" he asked the venerable man of God.

The jovial pulpiteer, who knows more of the "sincere milk of the word" than of any other lacteal fluid, answered solemnly:

"Yes, my dear sir, I believe I am familiar with the best thing on milk that can be found anywhere."

"What is it, doctor?" eagerly and unsuspectingly asked the budding rancher.

"Cream," ejaculated the preacher as he hurried round the corner.—San Francisco News Letter.

An Interesting Experiment.

That the earth revolves on its axis can be proved by a simple experiment. Fill a medium sized bowl nearly full of water and place it upon the floor of a room that is not exposed to jarring from the street. Upon the surface of the water sprinkle a coating of lycopodium powder. Then take powdered charcoal and draw a straight black line two inches long upon the coating—the line should be north and south.

After this is done lay upon the floor a stick so that it will be exactly parallel with the charcoal line. Any stationary object in the room will answer as well, provided it is parallel with the line. If the bowl is left undisturbed for several hours, it will be seen that the black mark has turned toward the parallel object and has moved from east to west, in a direction opposite to the movement of the earth on its axis. This proves that the earth in revolving has carried the water with it, but the powder on the surface has been left a little behind.

To Extract a Splinter.

The easiest way to extract a splinter deep in the flesh of the hand or foot is by means of steam. A rather wide mouthed bottle is filled two-thirds full of boiling water, and the injured spot is held close over the opening. The suction draws the flesh down, and a little additional pressure is used to assist the exit of the intruder. In a few moments the steam extracts the splinter, and the inflammation rapidly subsides.

Glove Silver.

Glove silver was the strange name given to a custom which prevailed in England during the middle ages—namely, the granting of a certain sum of money to servants to buy gloves with on Lammas day, or, as it is called now, Bank holiday.

Hindoo Carpenters.

In India the carpenters have an almost universal objection to sharpening their tools. They never set their saws, and when they get a grindstone they cut it into pieces and use the fragments for anything except to put an edge on chisel or ax.

WHEN LIGHTS ARE LOW.

The rooms are hushed, the lights are low,
I sit and listen to the wind
That comes from out the distant hill.
It comes and croons in an undertone
Of alien regions vast and lone,
Of pleasures lost in a land unknown,
Then steals away, and all is still.
'Tis good to listen to the wind
When rooms are hushed and lights are low.

When those we love have come and gone,
'Tis weary to be left behind—
To miss sweet eyes where late they shone,
To look for what we may not find,
Long cherished forms that haunt the mind
Soft voices that were once too kind;
To live and miss them one by one
Is weary work. Who'd stay behind
When those we love have come and gone?

A TRAGEDY IN A PICTURE.

His Snap Shot of a Drink That Killed Two Men.

"The most remarkable snap shot picture in the world is owned by a friend of mine in a town in Georgia," said an enthusiastic amateur photographer. "Its story is extremely curious. It seems that he went one day to a blacksmith shop to get a shot at the men at the forge. The smith was engaged on a difficult piece of ironwork and had two helpers. Just behind them on a shelf was a pint flask full of yellowish white liquor, evidently the corn whisky for which the native Georgian has a peculiar liking.

"As my friend was preparing to take his picture one of the helpers caught sight of the bottle and communicated his discovery by dumb show to his companion. The smith's back was turned at the moment, and the first man reached stealthily for the prize, while my friend, unnoticed in the corner, quickly aimed his camera. It was a comical scene, and in his mind he had already named the photo 'The Stolen Drink.'

"The helper uncorked the flask and took a swift gulp, and his comrade snatched it and did likewise. Then for a brief, breathless instant they looked at each other, and as they did so their foolish grin gave way to such a stare of questioning horror as I never saw before upon a human face. I know because it was then that the camera clicked, and the picture is as clear as crystal. The flask contained carbolic acid. Within an hour both men were dead.

"When my friend took one print, he broke the negative so as to make the photograph absolutely unique. It shows the forward end of the shop. In the foreground is the anvil, with the smith bending over his work. Behind him are the two helpers, one still holding the flask, looking at each other. You can see tragedy in their eyes as plain as print. It is a frightful and dramatic tableau that could not be duplicated by any sort of art."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Chant of the Cyclone.

Ever see a cyclone, say? Bite the world and munch away? Eat up houses, fences, trees, just as easy as you please? Get a hustle on its jaws? Swipe the earth with fiendish claws? Hump its back and take a run through the orchard just for fun? From a hill to hollow flit, seeming to get strength from it? Never seen one? Well, I jing! It's a pesky sort of thing.

Ever see a cyclone, say? Take its track and speed away? Switch its tail and snort and bound, just like lightning o'er the ground? Get a swift move with its feet, racing for the winning beat? Then cavorting up and down, heeding no laws of the town? Pushing everything aside? Out upon a gayly ride? As though owning all the track, ever onward, never back? Never seen one? Well, I swow! It's a buster, anyhow!—Kingsley (Ia.) Times.

Yachting on Salt.

Save during the rainy season Lake Lefroy, in western Australia, is quite dry. But as the water evaporates as the hot weather approaches a smooth, glassy floor of crystalline salt is deposited. Those living on the shores have found a means of utilizing this.

All boats which sail on the lake when possible are, during the rainy season, fitted with four wheels, and thus are enabled to continue their travels. As Lake Lefroy has an area of 100 miles, and the surrounding country is extremely rough, this means a great saving in expense, labor and time. The speed attained by these wheeled yachts is very considerable, though not quite equal to the pace of the ice yachts so popular in Canada.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A Senatorial Slander.

Two ladies visiting in Washington during one of the sessions of congress went to the capitol to hear the proceedings in the United States senate. Most of the galleries being filled, they approached the doorkeeper of the senators' gallery, where admission is by card. As they did not possess this passport, the doorkeeper suggested that they procure one from any senator they might be acquainted with.

"But we do not know any senator," they replied.

"Well, it is very much to your credit," said the doorkeeper. "Pass right in, ladies."—San Francisco Argonaut.

"Well, he doesn't look it. What does he do?"

"He's a professional flagpole painter."

"Oh," she said to a young man recently, "I did come so near seeing a dreadful accident yesterday! It was just too shocking!"

"How did it happen?" queried the youth.

"Why, you see, it was like this: There was a horse coming along at the corner of Prospect and Case—a horse and a buggy—and they didn't see the motor was so close—that is, the people in the buggy didn't see it—there was a woman driving—a woman and two children, I think—and she tried to drive the horse across the track—the buggy had a top to it, and she didn't hear the bell—and the motor came right up and pushed against the buggy and pushed it along, and the horse jumped a little, and the woman screamed, and the children—well, I couldn't hear the children—but the man wasn't strong enough to stop the motor, and it pushed the buggy right off the track!"

"And where were you all this time?" inquired the interested youth.

"I stood by the curb."

"Yes."

"I was so nervous, you know."

"Yes."

"And I ate chocolate creams just as fast as I could and prayed."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Uncle Sam's Only "Tip."

Tips given to Pullman car porters by government employees while performing official duties are considered legitimate charges against Uncle Sam. They are the only tips which are accorded this distinction. This interesting fact has just been gleaned through the display by a government official of a bill of expenses which he intended to present for a recent trip which he made in the service of the government. He exhibited the statement as an evidence of the close manner in which the government did business. He had to present a receipt for every expenditure made, even a receipt from the Pullman car conductor for his berth.

The only item for which there was no receipt was "Tips, 50 cents." When asked what the tips were for, the officer said: "They were tips which I gave to Pullman car porters. The government allows those, but they are the only tips which are allowed. If I tip the waiter at my hotel or the man who carries my bag, the tip comes out of my pocket, but the tipping of Pullman car porters, a quarter for each journey made on a sleeper, is such a recognized custom that the item for such tips is always allowed by the government to officers when traveling on government business."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

How Emery Is Quarried.

Emery comes from the island of Naxos, in the eastern Mediterranean, whence it has been exported for the last two centuries or more. The beds are in the northeast of the island, the deposits descending into some of the neighboring islands, the emery being found in lenticular masses, resting on layers of schist in limestone almost identical with Parian marble, the finest marble known, which comes from the island of Paros, close by.

There are about 300 men engaged in the trade, all of whom have to be married before they are admitted to the fraternity. The material is much too hard to be dug out or even blasted. Great fires are lighted around the blocks till the natural cracks expand with the heat, and levers are then inserted to pry them apart. This system is continued until the blocks are reduced in size to masses of a cubic foot or less, and they are then shipped as if they were coal. There are said to be 20,000,000 tons yet available at Naxos, and the last reported year's export was 3,950 tons. It is one of the hardest substances known.—Ironmongery.

Don't Put a Bird In the Window.

"Never put a bird in the window," said a bird fancier to the reporter the other day. "I rarely go into the street in summer, or even on a mild day in winter, that I do not see unfortunate canaries hung in the windows. Even if the sun is not broiling the brains under the little yellow cap, a draft is blowing all the time over the delicate body. People have been told a thousand times that they must not put a bird in the draft, yet how few remember that there is always a draft in an open window!"—Berlin (Md.) Herald.

Ink Blots on Paper.

To remove ink from paper pour enough water over a teaspoonful of chlorinated lime to cover the stained portion. Moisten a clean piece of linen and rub it lightly with the mixture. If the stain is not of too long standing, it will disappear. If more than one application is required, let the paper dry before wetting the second or third time. If the spot is rubbed, the texture of the paper will be spoiled. Dry it gently with a piece of dry linen.

A Hen Hunt.

An English paper says that the hat of a certain shortsighted master at Eton blew off one day, and as he started in pursuit a black hen dashed out of the gateway. The schoolmaster saw the hen and thought it was his hat, and all Eton was electrified by the spectacle of a hatless and breathless reverend man hunting a black hen from one end of the street to the other.

Strong Bank Notes.

So firm is the texture of a genuine Bank of England note that burning can hardly destroy it. The authorities have in a little glazed frame the remains of a note which was in the great fire of Chicago. Though completely charred and black, the note is sufficiently legible to establish its genuineness and be cashed.

Eddystone.

The smallest inhabited island in the world is that on which the Eddystone lighthouse stands. At low water it is 30 feet in diameter. At high water the lighthouse, whose diameter at the base is 28¾ feet, completely covers it. It is inhabited by three persons.

The Ink Plant.

The juice of the ink plant, which can be used as ink without any preparation, comes out on the paper at first a red color, but after a few hours it changes to black.

NEW YORK WORLD.
THRICE-A-WEEK EDITION.
Practically a Daily at the Price of a Weekly.
The striking and important events of the last year have established the overwhelming value of The Thrice-a-Week World to every reader. For an almost nominal sum it has kept its subscribers informed of the progress of all our wars and, moreover, has reported them as promptly and fully as if it were a daily. With our interests still extending throughout the world, with our troops operating in the Philippines and the great Presidential campaign, now at hand, its value is further increased.
The motto of The Thrice-a-Week World is improved. It strives each year to be better than it was the year before, and public confidence in it is shown by the fact that it now circulates more than twice as many papers every week as any other newspaper, not a daily, published in America.
We offer this unequalled newspaper and The St. Hilaire Spectator together one year for $1.65.
The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2.50.

Should he be Called Away.

Preston Times: Some people object to life insurance on religious grounds. This should not be. If it is wrong to protect the loved ones with a life policy it is equally wrong to leave them a farm or any other property. Many a mother has been saved from suffering and want by a legacy in the form of life insurance. Here is a striking instance as reported in the Modern Woodman, and an improvident husband can well ask himself if he can afford to leave his family penniless should he be called away:

In a private letter to the editor, a Neighbor tells of a visit he made with the clerk of their camp when they called at the home to hand the widow the order upon the Head Banker of the Modern Woodmen of America for three thousand dollars, the amount of the certificate her husband had held in the society. After she had signed the certificate and received the cash upon her order from a neighbor who knew her pressing need, she said with a choking voice: "You gentlemen do not know what this means to me. A mortgage for $500 on this house is due tomorrow; I have not a relative in America: the man who holds this mortgage is good when I pay on the day it is due. Tomorrow is the last day and I have only eighty-seven cents beside the money William left me on his life." Wiping the tears from her eyes she continued: And to think, I always was so opposed to his joining. Our church, you know, objected and I thought I must be a good Christian and they said it was a sin to not trust the Lord; but William knew best. He said—and they thought him rough and unchristian—that we should not bother the Lord to do for us what we could do for ourselves, and he joined. And it is what will keep my children from being sent out to become charity children. Now I will pay and work and my babies will be with me." Our correspondent says it was one of the most touching incidents he had ever witnessed, and adds: "If the society should stop doing business tomorrow, I would be well repaid by this one incident for all I have paid in during the ten years I have been a member."

Speaker Reed sent for a certain man to come to Washington; a freshet had destroyed part of the railroad bed and made travel impossible; he wired to the Speaker: "Washout on the line, can't come." Reed telegraphed back: "Buy a new shirt and come anyway."—Farm Journal.

A local newspaper very wisely remarks: "It is impossible for a newspaper reporter to be everywhere or hear everything that happens in a common city. Consequently many good items will be omitted unless patrons will take pains to supply newspapers with news. This paper invites information of interest of every sort. If you are entertaining guests from abroad, let us know about it. If a member of your family is seriously ill, your acquaintances will be interested to learn of it. It is the aggregate of such similar items that makes a complete local page. If sometime you feel slighted, or feel that you or your friends have not received the notice that might be expected, ask yourself whether you have seen to it that the newspaper has had information of your doings: if you have not, the fault is yours not ours."

Origin of the Elevator.

The elevator originated in Central Europe. The earliest mention of the elevator is made in a letter of Napoleon I, addressed to his wife, the Archduchess Marie Louisa. He writes to her that when in Schoenbrunn, then the summer residence of the Austrian emperor, near Vienna, he used the "chaise volante" (flying chair) in that castle, which had been constructed for Empress Maria Theresa. It consisted of a small, square room, sumptuously furnished with hangings of red silk, suspended by strong ropes with counter weights, so that it could be pulled up or let down with great ease, in a shaft built for the purpose about 1760.

PROGRESS.

With time, comes progress and advancement in all lines of successfully conducted enterprises. Success comes to those only who have goods with superior merit and a reputation. In the manufacture of laundry starch for the last quarter of a century J. C. Hubinger has been the peer of all others and today is placing on the market the finest laundry starch ever offered the public under our new and original method.

Ask your grocer for a coupon book which will enable you to get the first two large 10 cent packages of his new starch, RED CROSS, TRADE MARK brand, also two of the children's Shakespeare pictures painted in twelve beautiful colors as natural as life, or the Twentieth Century Girl Calendar, all absolutely free.

All grocers are authorized to give two large packages of RED CROSS STARCH, with twenty of the Shakespeare pictures or ten of the Twentieth Century Girl Calendars, to the first five purchasers of the Endless Starch Chain Book. This is one of the grandest offers ever made to introduce the RED CROSS laundry starch, J. C. Hubinger's latest invention.

WOMEN HARNESSED.

COMMUNITY REGARD THEM AS BEASTS OF BURDEN.

Are Traded for Cattle—Wooden Yokes Used, to Which Half a Dozen Women Are Harnessed, Over Whom Whip Is Cracked.

Hitching women in plows and using them as beasts in the fields is a new wrinkle in the napkta of civilization. In civilized America the custom is already established in all its literal details—women are being formed into teams and harnessed to heavy plows, which a burly son of ease in the shape of a man tranquilly drives through his fields as most of us have seen horses and mules driven on American farms. The place in America where women are used as draught animals is next door to the United States—up in the northwest territories, in and around Manitoba. The women are of the European peasantry, imported into Canada by the Canadian immigration bureau for the purpose of furnishing labor for the Manitoba farming districts.

Wooden yokes are used, and to these yokes a span of women are harnessed. There may be six or eight women to one plow. And the women never think of complaining. They see nothing wrong in their degradation. They have known no other life, and it has not yet occurred to them to demand any other. They are back a few centuries in the progress of civilization. Western Russia has been to dark and too slow for them to see or learn of the rapid strides their sisters have taken elsewhere in the world. To obey their big, heavy-fisted, dull-browed lords has been the only thing they knew in all the centuries.

Just what the dominion government thinks of them remains a mystery as yet. It is morally certain that sooner or later some official action will be demanded by the daughters of civilization in neighboring communities regarding the prostitution of their Russian sisters to slavery and drudgery in the harvest fields.

The government cannot ignore this demand when it comes. It will be interesting to watch the official hand of civilization fall upon the simple-minded Europeans and strive to break them of their racial characteristics, the growth of thousands of years.

OVEREXERCISE.

Interference with digestion is a by no means uncommon effect of excessive exercise, and so far as training is concerned it is one of the most destructive. The blood cannot flow in full stream to every part at once. As Dr. Brunton says: "Every one knows that while moderate exercise tends to produce appetite, a long and exhaustive exertion tends to destroy the appetite, and even to produce actual sickness, as one finds in mountain-climbing."

People differ greatly in this respect, but in some—great, ponderous men, as they may seem—the digestion is so easily upset by muscular exercise that, although they may be giants for a momentary exertion, anything like sustained effort disturbs digestion and cuts at the very root of their nutrition.

Interference with digestion so lowers nutrition, while accumulation of waste products so poisons the system that in either case further exertion becomes impossible—the very will to make it passes away. But it is different in regard to the heart. The heart, although strained, may yet be driven on to its own destruction. Every muscular effort not only demands from the heart an increased flow of blood, but also drives an increased quantity toward it. So long as the heart can pass this forward all is well, but when it fails not merely is the circulation of the blood rendered imperfect, but serious damage is done to the heart itself. If when the heart was overdriven it merely struck, the enfeebled circulation would soon put a stop to further effort.

The willing heart, however, taking at each beat a wider sweep, and driving into the vessels a larger quantity of blood, so meets the call that the athlete can struggle on, perhaps to win his race. But the strained heart suffers, the stretched muscle does not quite come back, the dilated cavity does not quite close at each contraction, and permanent mischief is set up. Thus it is, that exertion, driven to the limit imposed by the heart, is overexercise in the most serious sense of the word. If it is the heart that stops it, the chances are that it has already gone too far.

Transplanting Nerves.

The transplanting of skin has been frequently reported lately, but the grafting of nerves seems a step further in surgical progress. A man who suffered severe injury to the wrist from a circular saw lost sensibility in the hand. Five months after about an inch and a half of the sciatic nerve of a young bloodhound was attached to the end of the median nerve and a similar operation performed upon the ulnar nerve. In three months sensibility was almost complete throughout the hand. In the American Journal of Medical Science twenty cases of nerve transplantation are reported.

The Wind Made Snowballs.

Last March there was a remarkable exhibition at Grafton, N. H., of the comparatively rare phenomenon of "snow rollers." Partially fallen snow was rolled by the wind into innumerable cylinders, some of them as large as a barrel, which dotted the hills and fields. Similar rollers have been seen in recent years in Connecticut, in Kansas and in the state of Washington. The size varies with the strength of the wind.

KEELEY CURE INFLUENCE.

Saloonkeepers hate the Keeley Cure because it has had a powerful influence against their business. Their best customers have taken the cure, and every year the saloons in the large cities grow fewer and fewer. They are about all owned now-a-days by the breweries.

It is not infrequent that some Keeley Graduate remarks: "I used to pay for at least two licenses a year." Or: "I supported such and such a saloonkeeper's family for so many years."

It is not so unreasonable when you come to think of it. A young man earns, say, $1,000 a year. He barely pays his living expenses, generally runs into debt and injures himself physically, just to have a "good time (?) with the boys." There are hundreds in the small towns and thousands in the cities who do this regularly. The bulk of their earnings goes for liquor.

This is one reason why so many young young men do not marry. They spend all their earnings for drink and in conviviality, and save nothing. The treating habit has ruined more men than bullets have killed in battle.

The influence of the Keley Cure has been wonderful. Thousands of young men who formerly expended their entire earnings for liquor now save their money. They can afford to marry now, and many happy homes result. But it is in the homes where misery formerly held sway that the Keeley Cure has done its wonderful work.

The unpretentious Keeley Institute, which is located at the corner of Tenth street and Park avenue, Minneapolis, has saved thousands of men from the drink habit and helped them to take their places among manly men.

Many have been ruined by fraudulent cures. The Keeley Cure is the only real one. Keeley literature will be sent promptly if interested parties will write to 620 Tenth street south, Minneapolis, Minn.

Brass Band Killed Horse.

Music caused the death of a beautiful three-year-old filly at Florence, Ala., the other day. A farmer drove the valuable young mare into a town, and as he was driving up the principal street a brass band suddenly struck up its blatant music. The mare never had heard any sound like that before, and so startled was she that she dropped dead in the shafts of the trap. A veterinary surgeon who examined the carcass declared that the mare had died of heart failure, due to excitement caused by the sound of the unaccustomed music of a brass band.

JOHN C. HUBINGER.

Remarkable Career of a Well-Known Western Capitalist, Manufacturer and Philanthropist.

Among the leaders of the progressive element for which the middle west is famous, Mr. John C. Hubinger, of Keokuk, Ia., reigns without a peer. As a manufacturer, as an enterprising capitalist and as a philanthropist his fame has spread over many states, and his financial enterprises have developed many obscure towns into progressive, thrifty and wide-awake cities. Mr. Hubinger, although but 47 years of age, can look back upon scores of commercial victories, each one of which has benefited mankind, for his liberality is as bountiful as his business sagacity is marvelous. He was born in New Orleans, La., his parents being of French and German origin. When he was four years old, his family removed to Kentucky, in which state young Hubinger received a public school education. Almost before reaching man's estate he secured patents on a number of valuable mechanical inventions, thereby laying the foundation of his present fortune.

By inclination and force of circumstances his attention was early directed to the manufacture of starch by improved processes, and in the course of time he became the head of a concern having an annual business of millions of dollars. But genuine ambition never quite satisfied with existing conditions, works ever toward perfection, and after years of painstaking study and research Mr. Hubinger has made a discovery, which he considers the crowning event of his wonderful career, and which is embodied in a new article of commerce, known as Red Cross Starch (Red Cross trade mark.) He is planning to distribute millions of packages of this starch to the housewives of America, at a merely nominal price to the consumer, in order to make its merits known without delay. Thus, for but 5 cents two large 10c packages of Red Cross Starch may be had, together with two magnificent Shakespearean views printed in 12 beautiful colors, or a Twentieth Century Girl Calendar; or for only 20 cents 10 packages of the starch and the entire series of eight Shakespearean views and one Twentieth Century Girl Calendar—views alone easily worth $1.00. Watch this paper for future premium announcements, of which every lady will certainly want to take advantage.

While Mr. Hubinger will devote his best energies to the manufacture of this new and wonderful starch, he will not retire from the various financial enterprises in which he is interested—street railways, electric lighting plants and the Mississippi Valley Telephone Co., with 10,000 telephone subscribers in Minneapolis and St. Paul—nor will his augmented activity interfere with his social obligations and exercise of the splendid hospitality which he dispenses at his palatial Keokuk home. Mr. Hubinger's family, consisting of himself, wife and four children, is the pivot around which his activity revolves, and while fond of promoting great enterprises, he is still fonder of his home circle, where he spends every moment of time not taken up by business or public cares.

Thought It Was a Cornet.

A parish beadle in Scotland was recently much exercised at the appearance of a strange old gentleman who, when the sermon was about to begin, took a huge ear trumpet in two parts out of his bag and began screwing them together. The beadle watched him until the process was completed, and then, going stealthily up to him, whispered: "Ye munna play that here! If ye dae, I'll turn ye oot!"—Answers.

IT IS A HARD JOB.

TRACING CIRCULATOR OF SPURIOUS COIN.

After a "Shover of the Queer" Beginning and Ending in Cincinnati—Ruses Worked by the Gang—Pose as Shopkeepers.

New Orleans Times-Democrat: "The tracing of counterfeits back to the 'shover' is curious and exciting work," said an ex-government employe. "One day back in the seventies a bank clerk in Cincinnati detected a 'queer' twenty-dollar bill in the deposit of a small retail grocer. He sent for me and I started to work. I found that the grocer had received the bill from a shoe dealer, who had it from a dentist, who had it from somebody else, and so on, until I finally traced it to an invalid woman who had used it to pay her physician. When questioned she said the money had been sent to her by her brother, who lived in New Orleans. I looked up her brother's pedigree and was certain I had my man. He had a bad record, was the proprietor of a dive, and was just the sort of person likely to be a confederate of counterfeiters. I came here with the handcuffs in my pocket, but as things turned out I was a little premature. The man proved to my complete satisfaction that he had received the money as rent for a small house he owned in Pittsburg, Pa. That was discouraging, but I couldn't give up after going so far, and took the next train for Pittsburg. The tenant of the house turned out to be a traveling oculist, who spent most of his time on the road. He was then away in the west, but I saw him on his return and he at once recognized the bill. It had been given him by a patient in Cincinnati, the very point from which I started. The patient was a boss carpenter. I got his address from the oculist and made a bee line for the city. I had a premonition that something very strange was going to happen, and I wasn't disappointed. The carpenter was an honest old fellow and told me without hesitation that he had received the bill from Mr. —— for repairing his barn. Mr. —— was the small grocer in whose bank deposit the counterfeit had turned up. I flew for his store as fast as a cab could carry me and found it closed. He had skipped. Afterward it was shown beyond question that he was the regular agent of a gang. His shop was a mere blind. That the bill which he gave the carpenter should get back again into his own till after traveling all around the continent was one of those miracles of chance for which there is no explanation."

ETHICS FOR TYPEWRITER GIRL.

The New York Christian Advocate, the eastern organ of the Methodist Episcopal church, has created a sensation in religious circles here by advice it recently gave to an inquirer. "Suppose," wrote the applicant for information, "that a young woman employed as a stenographer has to write what she knows to be flat contradictions of truth, what she knows is meant to deceive and the object of the deception is to take pecuniary advantage of others. Also that sometimes profane language and language of questionable character on other moral grounds is dictated, should she write it or modestly decline to do so?" To this query the Advocate makes answer: "We know an instance of a young woman who declined to write profane language and lost her situation in consequence. We highly approve her course. She may be a machine in a certain sense, but if she professes to be a Christian or a modest woman she ought not to write anything which no one having any respect for Christianity or modesty would utter in the presence of a modest woman. But on the question of flat contradictions of truth in the way of business statements, it is quite possible that a stenographer may be altogether too sensitive. How does she know what view her employer may take of what seems to be a flat contradiction to truth? He is not bound to explain to her all his business affairs and make known to her all elements involved in every transaction in which profit and loss are concerned. With regard to his business dealings she is but a machine, and her ears are not polluted by statements of fact or otherwise. Her mind should be sufficiently under control not to reason about anything that he dictates, except to direct attention to verbal or other mistakes in composition. But no stenographer, male or female, should write things, which, passing through their ears into their minds, and to the machine through their fingers, could not be defiled. The stenographer need not make so much of an issue. If a man happens to use profane language let her furnish the copy without the profane language. Then if the change is made it will be by the man's insisting upon it, and if he does insist upon it she will do well to quit her place, trusting in the 'Power that makes for righteousness.'"

Use of a Great Name.

Here's a tip for some of our old friends who have big names and need a little ready money: Turner Beall, president of the Produce Exchange Trust Company, used to be a secretary of the Produce Exchange and of the New York Southern Society. Among the men of his acquaintance he admires none so much as does Colonel William de Hertburne Washington. A little while ago he asked Colonel Washington if he might use his name in a financial transaction. Having implicit faith in Beall, the colonel consented, and was pleased to receive a short time afterward a check for $15,000, his share of a deal made by his friend on the strength of the name of Washington.

The first election ever held in Maryland at which women were allowed to vote for municipal officers was held in Arundel recently. The census recently taken showed that there were 353 persons at Arundel.

A few bottles of your medicine have given me almost complete relief, and I am sure that a continuation of them will effect a permanent cure. Pe-ru-na is surely a wonderful remedy for catarrhal affections."

The most common form of summer catarrh is catarrh of the stomach. This is generally known as dyspepsia. Congressman Botkin was a victim of this disease twenty-five years. Pe-ru-na cures these cases like magic. Address Dr. Hartman, Columbus, O., for a free book.

The microbes that cause chills and fever and malaria enter the system through mucous membranes made porous by catarrh. Pe-ru-na heals the mucous membranes and prevents the entrance of malarial germs, thus preventing and curing these affections.

NAVY BREAKS LOOSE

OLANGAPO BOMBARDED BY WATSON'S SHIPS.

After Bombardment a Landing Party Carried the Entrenchments, Routed the Enemy and Destroyed One Large Krupp Gun—One Casualties Were One Man Seriously Wounded and One Prostrated by the Heat—Mounting of a Large Gun by Insurgents Started the Engagement.

Manila, Sept. 25.—The United States cruiser Charleston, the monitor Monterey and the gunboats Concord and Zafiro, with marines and blue jackets from the cruiser Baltimore, left Cavite Sept. 18 and proceeded to Subig bay to destroy an insurgent cannon there. Owing to the weather the operation was postponed until Saturday, when the warships for three hours bombarded the town of Olangapo and the intrenchments where the gun was situated. Men from the Charleston, Concord and Zafiro were then landed under a heavy insurgent fire, proceeding to the cannon, which was utterly destroyed by gun cotton, and then returned to the ships. The Americans had one man wounded. While waiting in Subig bay for better weather the Americans descried Filipino reinforcements moving toward Olangapo. At 6:30 a. m. Saturday the Monterey began the advance upon the town, which was about three miles east of the monitor's anchorage. The Charleston, Concord and Zafiro followed. At 7:25 the Monterey opened fire with her secondary and main batteries, the Concord and Charleston joining immediately. At 7:38 the insurgent cannon answered, the first shot passing close to the Monterey's smokestack. The gun was fired twice only. The American bombarding then became general. At 9:30 the Monterey advanced to a range of 600 yards, using her main battery. Two hundred and fifty men were landed about 800 yards east of the cannon at 11 o'clock under a severe shore Mauser fire. The men from the Charleston were the first to reach the beach, but the Concord's men were the first at the gun, which they reached at 11:15. The cannon was found to be a 16 centimeter Krupp gun, presumably obtained from the Spaniards. Meanwhile the warships continued to shell the shelving beach on the east and west side to silence the insurgent fire upon the steamers from the trenches skirting the beach. Gunner Olsen exploded fifty rounds of guncotton, in three discharges in the cannon, which had suffered from the fire of the warships. The Americans then returned to the boats, the firing inland being kept up to protect the embarkation. The warships were reached at 11:56. Cadet Brinzer, with the Concord's launch armed with a Gatling, did excellent work on the left of the landing party. Capt. Myers, of the marines, captured a muzzle-loading field piece. Lieut. McDonald was in command of the landing party, and the movement was splendidly executed and controlled. The number of the Filipinos there could not be ascertained. The Monterey fired for four hours—twenty-one shots from her ten-inch guns and seventeen from her twelve-inch guns. The town, which was riddled with shells, took fire at several points.

Admiral Watson's Report.

Washington, Sept. 25.—Acting Secretary Allen, of the navy department, received a cable from Rear Admiral Watson yesterday giving a brief account of the engagement at Subig bay. It is dated the 24th, at Manila, and says: Mandora discovered heavy gun mounted opposite Kalliklan point, Subig bay. Sent Charleston, Monterey, Concord and Zafiro with detachment of marines and sailors from Baltimore to capture and destroy. Attacked insurgent position 23d; after bombardment, landing party carried intrenchments, routed enemy and destroyed one 16-centimeter Krupp gun. William Sheppherd, apprentice, second class, Charleston, seriously wounded. Charles Haffke, coal passer, Concord, heat prostration. Insurgent fire heavy but poorly aimed. Enemy's loss unknown. Full report mailed.

The important feature of the engagement is the fact which is disclosed that the insurgents have been able to obtain Krupp guns. It was known at the time of the outbreak of the insurgents against the Americans that the artillery of the insurgents consisted of a few obsolete guns captured from the Spaniards. Acting Secretary Allen says that it is evident the navy at Manila does not intend to allow any fort to be erected by the insurgents which can be reached by the ships, and he is convinced that the squadron under Rear Admiral Watson will be able to keep the shores guarded and repeat the lesson of Saturday if the insurgents are found to be operating on the coast.

Big Dam Springs a Leak.

Austin, Tex., Sept. 25. — The great dam across the Colorado river here which was constructed by the city a few years ago at a cost of $1,000,000, has sprung aleak and the waters in the lake formed by the dam are gradually receding. This has caused the municipal electric light and power plant to shut down, and the city is without lights and street car service.

STAND OR FALL TOGETHER.

That's the Way Orange Free State Officials Feel About the Transvaal Question.

London, Sept. 25.—The Transvaal situation presents no new features. Dispatches from Johannesburg report a complete dislocation of the Rand mining industry. The exodus continues and all the mines are closing. The Bloemfontein correspondent of the Manchester Guardian, a pro-Boer organ, says:

"Both President Steyn and Mr. Fischer (of the Orange Free State) inform me that the volksraad is absolutely unanimous that the two republics should stand or fall together. President Steyn said: 'Suppose we remained neutral and the Transvaal were conquered, it is not likely that we would long be permitted to stand outside British control. Let a rich gold field be discovered and what would become of us?'"

WILD FOR WAR.

Britishers Won't Stand for an Anti-War Demonstration.

London, Sept. 25. — The attempt to hold a pro-Boer, anti-war demonstration in Trafalgar Square, London, yesterday afternoon resulted in a drastic failure. Thousands assembled, but not to support the speakers. On the contrary, the crowd waved union jacks and sang the national anthem and "Rule Britannia" like mighty invocations. The speakers, who were quite inaudible, were received with groans, decoyed apples and eggs and other missiles. There were cheers for Mr. Chamberlain, secretary of state for the colonies, and hisses for President Kruger. Some soldiers who were present were carried shoulder high by the crowd. There were several ugly rushes for the platforms, which were surrounded by opponents of the demonstration who yelled fiercely. Finally the mounted police were telephoned for to clear the square. Batons were freely used, several persons were trodden upon by the horses and thirty arrests were made. The opponent of the meeting finally proposed resolutions in support of the government's policy, which was carried amid wild enthusiasm.

Last evening the promoters of the demonstration held a meeting in private, and after a long discussion carried the following resolution: "In consequence of the organized interruption of the anti-war demonstration in Trafalgar Square, fomented by a section of the yellow and stock-jobbing press, this committee resolves to hold a public meeting in one of the large metropolitan halls at an early date."

Laborers refuse to unload the relief cargoes unless paid double. At Angula 700 inhabitants are wildly appealing for immediate supplies of rations of food, the recent hurricane having destroyed all the provisions and wrecked the shops and habitations and the sea having washed into the wells and rain cisterns.

TWO BLOODY FIGHTS

MEXICANS AND YAQUIS HAVE A CLASH.

Gen. Luis Torres Had Declared the Campaign Suspended Until October, but the Yaquis Hadn't Figured It That Way—In One Fight the Yaquis Were Dispersed With Nine Killed, Mexican Loss Was Five Killed—In the Second Battle the Indians Left Eighty-seven Dead on the Field.

Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 25.—Official reports of two battles between Mexicans and Yaquis have just been received here. Gen. Luis Torres had declared the campaign suspended until October, but the Yaquis were not consulted on that point. Lorenzo Torres also appears to have made different arrangements. On Sept. 14 Lorenzo Torres crossed the river to Vicaro, a town supposed to have been captured by Luis Torres in August, and found the Indians. They attacked his rear guard and a running fight ensued. The report says the Indians were dispersed and nine killed. The Mexican loss was five killed and nine wounded, among the latter Lieut. Marvo, of the Eleventh battalion, one of the best officers on the Mexican side.

The report of a battle on the 18th comes from another source also, and its statements of the killed may be accepted. According to this report the forces under Col. Hernandez, number not stated, encountered 1,000 Indians near Lake Zaqueca, a small lagoon between Torin and Potam. The Indians retired from the open field and sought cover in the thick woods, where the combat raged for more than two hours, beginning at 6 o'clock in the morning. The report says the Indians were defeated and dispersed, leaving on the field eighty-seven dead. The Mexican losses are stated as fourteen killed and thirty-six wounded. Maj. Ituiz, of the national guard, was mortally wounded and Julian Espinosa, a captain of the Yaquis who are friendly to the Mexicans, and a lieutenant in the ten-year-war, was killed.

An interesting feature of the reports is the statement that several inhabitants of river towns who were prisoners of the Yaquis have been released and have returned to headquarters in Torin. Heretofore the Mexicans have represented the Yaquis as invariably torturing and killing all prisoners.

BOLD ROBBERY.

Old Woman Relieved of $50,000 Which She Was Hoarding.

City of Mexico, Sept. 25. — A sensational robbery took place in a suburb of this city. Guadalupe Vasquez, an old woman eighty-five years of age, living with her widowed daughter, was the victim. The women were alone and employed no servants, which is unusual in this country among people having property. Every one thought them exceedingly poor, but this was only apparent, for they had a great sum of money in the house, there being kept in a steel box no less than $50,000 in bank bills, the proceeds of the sale of a hacienda near this city. Besides this sum there was many thousands of dollars kept in the wardrobes, in stockings and between the leaves of books.

In some way news that the women had a great amount of money got to the ears of some men who came to the house and hired a large corral at its rear, for the purpose, she says, of keeping pigs. Their purpose was robbery, as now appears, and yesterday morning, the mother being alone in the house, these men came and, on the pretense of having a message to deliver, were let in by the old woman, when they seized and bound her with ropes. They took the steel chest with $50,000 and decamped, but omitted to search for other money. The women, on being interrogated by the officials, said that they had heard that bank clerks had been stealing money from banks and they were afraid to deposit their funds. Many arrests have been made and the police are confident they have discovered the robbers.

A WARM WELCOME.

Greets Montana's Brave Volunteer Soldiers.

San Francisco, Sept. 24.—The United States transport Zealandia arrived from Manila via Yokohama yesterday, having on board six companies of the First Montana volunteers.

An enthusiastic greeting was extended to the returning soldiers, whose safe arrival was announced by the blowing of steam whistles and the discharge of cannon. Notification of the Zealandia's coming was promptly given and two tugs went out to greet the transport. One tug had on board a number of officials of California and San Francisco and members of the local reception committee, reinforced by a brass band. The other carried Gov. Smith of Montana, United States Senator Carter and party of Montanans, who were vociferous in their joy at beholding their soldier boys and kin once more. The Montana delegation took out to the transport 1,000 bottles of beer and an equal number of sandwiches and about a ton of fresh fruit. All was for the delectation of their fellow citizens who are required by the regulations to remain on board the transport until to-day. The health of all on board is excellent and there was but one death en route, that of James Ashton, Fourth U. S. cavalry, who died on Sept. 16 of pleuropneumonia. Aside from this case there was no sickness during the trip.

After the quarantine office had completed its inspection of the Zealandia and had certified to the good health of all on the ship, permission was given to the Montana reception committee to board the transport. Gov. Smith was the first man on board and he was greeted by the brave soldiers, who were the first volunteers to be mustered into the service last year. The governor, in a neat little speech, welcomed the boys home in the name of the people of Montana. He told the volunteers how proud of them their people at home were, and there was more cheering, and the band played "Home, Sweet Home," "A Hot Time," and other popular tunes.

The Zealandia then raised anchor and started toward her dock. The tugs fell into line, and thus escorted, the steamer moved slowly down the bay to anchorage off the government pier amid the blowing of whistles, the ringing of bells, the booming of cannon and kindred forms of jubilation. The men will be landed this morning, and, with a military escort from the Presidio, will march to their camping grounds on the military reservation, where they will remain until mustered out of service. The Zealandia brought 339 of the Montana regiment, 211 discharged men of the volunteer army, members of the hospital corps and 42 other passengers. The Montana regiment left in Manila Lieut. Col. Bruce Wallace, appointed colonel of another volunteer regiment and 62 men who reenlisted as well as nine sick, 2 officers and 90 enlisted discharged. Companies D, F, G, H, K and M arrived yesterday. The remaining companies are on the Valencia, expected to-day or Sunday.

SAWMILL AND NEWSPAPER.

The mill will have two band and one gang saw, and will employ about 250 men.

A. G. Bernard of Walker, proprietor of the Walker Pilot, will start a newspaper at Cass Lake in the near future.

A large party of hunters from Chicago arrived at Cass Lake a day or two ago, and are up on the lakes hunting ducks. They live in the Shamrock, Hunter & Dwyer's large tow boat, and go back and forth to the hunting grounds in row boats.

C. C. Hastings will open a lumber yard at Cass Lake in a few days.

Charleston, S. C., Sept. 24. — Warrants were sworn out yesterday by Vice Consul Witt, acting for the government of Norway, against Anderson and Thomas, the Norwegian sailors from the bark Drolt, who, according to their own story, killed and ate a companion while drifting in midocean on a raft. The men are still very sick and the warrants were not served, but a guard was placed over the sailors. They will be sent to Norway as soon as able to travel.

The Holland Is a Wonder.

Green Points, N. Y., Sept. 24.—The submarine torpedo boat Holland made a remarkable showing during her trial yesterday in Little Peconet bay. The little diver worked admirably and the new steam engines worked successfully, the boat getting under water and out of sight in a short time. The trial consisted of sending the boat over a mile course submerged, when it came to the surface with the torpedo discharged from the tube. The run was made in good shape and the torpedo successfully discharged.

BRIEF BUT BLOODY

HOT SKIRMISH WITH INSURGENTS NEAR ANGELES.

Military Train Ditched by Filipinos and Then Subjected to a Raking Fire—Americans Quickly Rally and Put the Enemy to Flight—Two Americans and Six Filipinos Killed—Insurgents Do Not Respond to an Offer to Buy Their Arms—Church Property Is Respected.

Manila, Sept. 24.—A party of insurgents ditched a railroad train a mile and a half south of Angeles yesterday morning and then opened fire upon the derailed cars from a bamboo thicket close to the track, killing two Americans and wounding five others. Lieut. Home and five of his scouts who were on the train, made a vigorous defense and caused the enemy to flee. Six dead rebels were afterward found in the thicket from which the rebel fire came. Gen. Wheaton, with six companies, proceeded from Calulet to the relief of the train, but his services were unneeded.

-o-

New York, Sept. 24. — A special to the Herald from Washington says: Word reaches the war department showing that Gen. Otis has sought to imitate the policy employed in Cuba, of buying Filipino arms, and that his efforts have been unsuccessful. The natives were given to understand that upon the surrender of a gun the military authorities would pay the person surrendering it $40 and guarantee him immunity from arrest for previous armed opposition to the United States and protection for the future. Notwithstanding this tempting offer not one bonafide surrender of a gun is reported. One native, it is said, appeared with gun in hand, and the military officials began congratulating themselves that the end was in sight, and that when the rest of Aguinaldo's troops learned of the good treatment given this man they would follow his example. A requisition was made on the treasury for $40, but before the money was received investigation uncovered the fact that the native was acting as an agent for an American soldier, who captured the gun in action, and wanted to dispose of it at government figures to the military authorities. In view of the disinclination of the natives to sell their guns, it is evident that the revolution is not so much confined to the upper ranks as has been believed. Were the soldiers not in sympathy with their superior officers, it is said by army officers that they would certainly have surrendered in at least small numbers, as they have ample opportunity to reach the American lines without detection.

Washington, Sept. 24.—The war department has received the following cablegram from Gen. Otis regarding the military use of church property in the Philippines:

"Referring to your telegram of the 18th, sixteen churches in different localities are occupied by United States troops. Four only partially occupied and religious services not interfered with. Also three convents occupied. These three and ten of the sixteen churches formerly occupied by the insurgents. Church property respected and protected by our troops."

He Couldn't Reach It.

The following anecdote concerning the famous lecture on "The Holy Land," which, it is said, ex-Governor Oglesby never succeeded in delivering as he prepared it, is related in Franc B. Wilkie's pamphlet on the life of the governor:

He had been invited to deliver this lecture at a country town in Illinois and accepted. A large crowd gathered to hear him, and he was greeted with loud applause as he stepped forward to lecture. He was only to speak for one hour and said in beginning he would preface his lecture with a few remarks on his experience in Europe. At the end of 2½ hours he was still talking about Europe, and because the people seemed so delighted he announced that he would deliver the lecture the next evening.

The same people came back, re-enforced by many more, and at the end of another two hours he stopped without having said anything about the Holy Land, except to announce that as his subject. The third night there was a monster gathering, and Governor Oglesby, after finishing up Europe, started to say a few words about Egypt and the Nile before beginning his lecture. At last he looked at his watch and, with a look of astonishment, turned to one of his friends on the platform and said:

"Well, here it is 11 o'clock, and I'll be hanged if I've got to the Holy Land yet."—Chicago Tribune.

Sam Houston and His Corns.

Professor Hiram Corson of Cornell university, who used to be a reporter for the United States senate, tells this story about Sam Houston: "We reporters took turn and turn about each for an hour. One day I was sitting idly in the reporters' gallery, waiting my turn and looking on. Presently my attention was drawn by Senator Houston. Huge of frame, he was particularly huge of feet, and those extremities were rendered the more conspicuous in those days of boots by being incased in laced shoes. On this occasion there seemed to be an amount of pain in those feet proportionate to their size.

"The senator kept one upon his knee, rubbing it, with an anguished expression and periodically exchanging for the other foot. After awhile he unlaced his shoes and drew them off. Then the nursing of his aching toes continued for a time as before. But no relief came, and at last, to my utter amazement and amusement, he slowly divested himself of a long blue woolen stocking, and, taking the huge jackknife with which he was wont to pass the time whittling, he proceeded deliberately to pare his corns in the senate of the United States."

But He Made a Good Officer.

Some 20 or 25 years ago a gentleman of this place was elected constable, and although he had no opposition his nervousness as to the result was quite noticeable all during the day. After the polls closed and he was declared elected he hied him to the river bank, in the meantime having armed himself with an old pepper box pistol, one of the earliest patterns of the revolver, and shortly after was heard to go through this colloquy with some one unseen. Pointing his pistol at a sycamore tree he exclaimed in dignified and dramatic style:

"Halt! I am constable of this district and command you to halt. You won't, eh? Well, here goes"—bang! "I hate to do it, but it is in the discharge of my official duty. Now, I told you to stop, but you wouldn't"—bang! Just then the old pepper box became unmanageable and bang, bang, bang, bang went the remaining four loads. The firing soon attracted a crowd and the tree was thus saved.

But, notwithstanding the episode of the sycamore and the scars it still shows, the gentleman is said to have made a good officer.—Hazlegreen (Ky.) Herald.

A Girl's Idea of Boys.

At an examination in a certain school for girls an essay on "Boys" was ordered written, and this was one of the compositions:

"The boy is not an animal, yet he can be heard to a considerable distance. When a boy hollers he opens his mouth like a frog's, but girls hold their tongue till they are spoke to, and they answer respectable, and tell just how it was. A boy thinks he is clever because he can wade where it is deep, but God made the dry land for every living thing, and rested on the seventh day. When the boy grows up he's called a husband and stays out nights, but the grew up girl is a widow and keeps house."

An Eye to Business.

A little boy named Peter at a public school saw his teacher faint and fall. In the general confusion it was impossible to keep so many curious heads cool, and the little ones flocked round the prostrate woman and her sympathizing colleagues. But this small boy kept both his color and his coolness. Standing on a bench and raising his hand, he exclaimed: "Please, teacher, can I run home and tell father to come? He makes coffins!"

Evolution.

A girl named plain "Mary" at her birth dropped the "r" when she grew up and became Miss May. As she began to shine in a social way she changed the "y" to "e" and signed her letters Mae. About a year ago she was married, and now she has dropped the "e," and it's just plain "Ma." That's evolution.—Rogersville (Tenn.) Review.

Beau Brummel Reprimanded.

Beau Brummel once insolently replied to an invitation to take tea by remarking that he never "took" anything but physic.

"Yes, you do," frowned his hostess; "you take liberties."

AN INDIAN DETECTIVE

A SIOUX SCOUT WHO WAS A GENIUS IN GROUND READING.

This Human Sleuth Exercised Extraordinary Skill in Trailing a Fugitive—He Had Instinct and a Pair of Eyes That Were Unerring.

Arkichita, a typical Indian, was chief scout at Fort Sisseton, Dakota, in 1882. Although he knew English well, he held the old Indian hatred of its use, and would never speak it except under extraordinary circumstances. He stood about five feet nine inches in height, was slender, but wiry, and was about 34 years of age. Ordinarily he was slow and sedate in his actions—very dignified; but when the necessity arose, he could be as quick as a flash, and had, like every Indian on the northwestern plains, a pair of eyes that could equal any fieldglass.

His services—for he had been employed as a scout for some years—had been very valuable to the government, and, in recognition of this fact, the officer in command had secured authority from the war department to promote him to the rank of sergeant; consequently he went around in a neat uniform with chevrons and stripes, very much impressed with his own importance, which he considered second only to that of the commanding officer; and he took care that every one else also should respect his rank and dignity.

As his native name is the Sioux for "soldier," it is easily seen why he was so named; but he had still another name, which the Indians had given him before his entering military circles, and that, translated into English, was the "grasswalker," or "trailer," from his absolutely marvelous ability to find the trail of anything that left even the slightest trace on the ground as it passed over it.

A desperate soldier named Brice broke jail one night and was pursued the following morning. The trail led to the west for a trifle over a mile; then it turned north for a quarter of a mile and we followed until we came to a tree at the edge of a slough to the northwest of the fort, called the "garden bar slough." Here Arkichita pointed under the tree and said Brice had lain down there to rest.

The trail here led into the slough.

A Dakota "slough" is a shallow lake, the water of which is from six inches to three feet deep, with a soft, muddy bottom, but not generally miry. The center of the slough is usually free from grasses or weeds, but along the edges, from 20 to 60 yards out, long tule grass grows.

This particular slough was a mile long and varied from an eighth to a quarter of a mile in width, and there was a foot of water covering as much soft mud. During the night the wind had rolled the water up considerably. It seemed hardly possible to track anything through it, except where the tule had been broken down. Where that was the case, even I could follow the trail; on reaching open water, however, the case was different.

The eastern end of the slough reached to a point near the fort not more than 150 yards from a brickyard, on which was a kiln that had been built during the summer. The kiln was now ready for firing.

Once I thought Arkichita was baffled, after all; he had come to a dead standstill near the tule. Then an inspiration struck me; perhaps by a circle I could find the trail. Happy thought! I put it into immediate execution and found one. Rather elated at my success, I called. "Come quick; heap trail!" He came over, took one look; just the suggestion of a smile played on his face as he said, "Cow."

I did no more trailing, but understood what was bothering him. The post herd also had waded through here since Brice's escape, and it took all the scout's endless patience and wonderful eyesight to keep the trail where the cattle had passed through it. The grass stem was of no use here.

We had passed over half the slough in this circuitous route, when suddenly Arkichita started, straight as the craw flies, for the edge of the slough near the brickkiln. Was he following the trail?

On he went until he came to the shore nearest the kiln; here he stopped, evidently bothered again. There was a scarcely discernible footprint in the mud and water right at the edge of the slough, apparently the last step the deserter had taken before reaching hard ground. This footprint showed the toes, so the deserter was now barefooted. Another thing about this print was its direction; it stood at right angles to the line previously followed. Either the man had taken a sideward spring for the land from his right foot, or he had turned around and started back over his own trail.

Arkichita went down on his knees and inspected the grass, blade by blade. I kept a respectful distance at one side, astonished at the turn the affair had taken. Now, inch by inch, on his knees, he wrenched the secret from the apparently unwilling surface of the earth. Eighty yards from the kiln, he looked up and glanced at it. The same idea evidently instantly occurred to both of us. The trail was leading to the kiln! Then he rose, and, bending over, slowly advanced to the edge of the brickyard.

After reaching the yard, Arkichita walked slowly around the outer edge of it, examining the ground with the utmost care, until he came to the point from which he started, when he said, "Trail come in—no go out; man in there," pointing to the kiln.

And circumstances proved him to be right, though it was 36 hours before the fugitive was located in the kiln and captured.—Lieutenant W. C. Bennett, U. S. A., in St. Nicholas.

Hard Heads.

A duel among native Australians affords a droll study of physical endurance and natural courtesy. The affaire d'honneur is conducted on orthodox lines. Seconds are chosen and the place of meeting arranged, each party assuring the other that the remembrance of the insult or the casus belli can only be removed with a waddy stick, casually mentioning at the same time the design and weight of his own weapon.

The duel then proceeds somewhat on these lines: The aggrieved one bends forward, hands on knees, and invites his opponent to test the soundness of his club on his (the challenger's) head. Politeness does not demand that the vigor of the blow be modified by regrets or remorse, much less such a reply as, "Not at all, sir; after you."

The descent of the club is reminiscent of the conundrum, "Should an irresistible force come in contact with an immovable mass, what is the result?" In this case a little local warmth is generated. It is now the other fellow's turn, and the game proceeds as before, varied by mutual requests to hit a little harder. Either combatant leaves the field without a stain on his character and tasting the quintessence of satisfied honor should his opponent's club be broken over his head.

Hence These Tears.

"Mamma," said the happy young wife, "do you think it was just the thing to sit there and weep as you did at our wedding? If I had been going to my funeral, you could not have acted more heart broken."

"Oh," replied the distressed lady, applying her handkerchief to her eyes, "I am sorry I made such a spectacle of myself, but I couldn't help it. I have always thought so much of George and he has been so kind to me."

"Why, mamma," exclaimed Alicia Saint Claire, "what do you mean? Am I to understand that you are sorry for George because he married me? The idea! Do you mean to insinuate that I am not"—

"There, there, my child," the mother interrupted, "do not misjudge me. You know how George has always been in the habit of taking me with you and him to the theaters and upon excursions and how considerate he has been of me in every way. If George had been my own son, he could not have been more anxious to promote my happiness."

"Well, was that any reason why you should sit there and blubber all through the ceremony?"

"My darling, don't you understand? I was becoming his mother-in-law."—Chicago Times-Herald.

Disillusioned.

"I'll never say another word about the advantages of a European education for girls," said the woman from the west. "I'll never talk about the charm of the convent bred young woman. I've lost my last illusion, and one of the prettiest young women in Washington acted as iconoclast for my benefit. She is more than pretty. She has a look of being somebody, and she is somebody. She belongs in the diplomatic corps.

"I saw her at a big reception two or three weeks ago, and I watched her with delight. I thought how boisterous and unrefined most American girls seemed beside her. I actually blushed to think how their slang must shock her. So gentle, so quiet, so exquisite. I kept as near her as I could, for I wanted to hear her speak. At last I stood next her in the dressing room. Somebody wanted her to go home. She didn't want to go, and what do you think that exponent of highest European feminine culture said?

"'No,' she said, 'I don't want to go home. I'm going down stairs for more feed.'"—Washington Post.

High Price For Straightness.

One of the difficult problems in practical mechanics is to make a "straight edge." How difficult it is may be judged from an incident which occurred in the shops of J. A. Brashear, the astronomical instrument maker. A customer asked Mr. Brashear what would be the price of "a perfect straight edge of glass 36 inches long."

"It can't be made absolutely perfect," said Mr. Brashear, "but it could probably be made with a limit of error amounting to only a fraction of a wave length of light."

"How much would that cost?"

"About $40,000!"

It turned out that the customer wanted the straight edge for a scraper and that an error of one sixty-fourth of an inch would have been insensible for his purpose.—Youth's Companion.

Spilled Ink.

When ink has been spilled, the first thing to do is to remove as much of the liquid as possible with a damp cloth. Then dip a clean rag into some skimmed milk and sponge the stain. The cloth and milk must be clean for each application. A little benzine or ammonia will remove any grease which the milk may make.

Madrid's Slums.

Madrid abounds in slums, which are even greater eyesores than those of Whitechapel. There are labyrinths of narrow old streets, bordered by the most uninviting hovels, and from the squalor of these abodes spring the components of the ferocious mobs which are the bane of the city.

The Chinese are very fond of foreign song birds. Forty years ago, when canaries were first introduced to that country, a pair cost $12; now they have multiplied to such an extent that a pair can be bought for 75 cents.

It is estimated that there are 240,000 women domestic servants in London, and that 10,000 of these are always out of situations or changing their places.

To Get a Vacuum.

Professor Dewar's achievement in liquefying hydrogen has led to the discovery of an easy method for obtaining an almost perfect vacuum, and that in a single minute. When a glass tube, filled with air and closed at one end, has its open end dipped into a cup of liquid hydrogen, the intense cold condenses the air into a kind of snow which settles to the bottom. If, then, the upper part of the tube, from which the solidified air has fallen, is removed by heating and sealing it off, it becomes a vacuum chamber so free from air that it is difficult to force an electric current through it.

NEW YORK WORLD.
THRICE-A-WEEK EDITION.
Practically a Daily at the Price of a Weekly.
The striking and important events of the last year have established the overabounding value of The Thrice-a-Week World to every reader. For an almost nominal sum it has kept its subscribers informed of the progress of all our wars and, moreover, has reported them as promptly and fully as if it were a daily. With our interests still extending throughout the world, with our troops operating in the Philippines and the great Presidential campaign, too, at hand, its value is further increased.
The motto of The Thrice-a-Week World is improved. It strives each year to be better than it was the year before, and public confidence in it is shown by the fact that it circulates more than twice as many papers every week as any other newspaper, not a daily, published in America.
We offer this unequalled newspaper and The St. Hilaire Spectator together one year for $1.65.
The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2.50.

An Eastern paper says that cards are being circulated through Kentucky bearing the names of Thomas B. Like the good sailor he is, Rear Admiral Schley says he will obey the order for him to assume command of the South Atlantic Squadron, if it is issued by the Navy Department. So far the only order issued directs him to hold himself in readiness to take that command. Meanwhile, Schley, the man whose honors in the Spanish war are second only to those of Admiral Dewey will go to New York to participate, as a private citizen, in the welcome of his old friend, Dewey. Such is the result of not standing in with the clique.

Jim Gets a Raise.

A letter received this week from our old fellow townsman, Jas. A. Mead, announces that October 1st he will be given a position as deputy wheat inspector at Superior. It will be remembered that Jim left here early in the summer to accept a position as helper. The promotion was made from a practical test in the work of inspection and there were only two of the old forces who made a better showing than the Red Lake Falls man. The raise is very gratifying to Jim's friends here as it usually takes about two years' experience before helpers are given an inspectorship.—Courier.

U. S. Mail Service.

Some idea of the wonderful increase of this branch of governmental business is had from the fact that an expenditure of $30,393,209.53 for carrying the mails in 1888 had swelled to $52,294,382.23 in 1898, an increase to nearly double in ten years. In 1879 the total length of our postal routes was 79,991 miles; the last report shows it to be now 174,777. The annual transportation over these routes in 1879 was 97,497,463 miles, the last report showing a mileage of 281,595,612. In other words less than twenty years has seen an increase of 116 per cent, in the total miles of route, and of 191 per cent in the gross of annual mileage.

A partial idea of what this whole system of the transportation in bulk of our mail matter has grown to under enlightened management, and, owing to the great increase in general literacy is derived from the following statements taken from figures in the last annual report of the postmaster-general: Of traveling post-offices, on railway, steamboat, electric and cable tramways, we have 1,268 lines, covering 167,755 miles, with a grand total mileage of 285,565,343. Over these and throughout the service were handled 6,349,662,320 pieces of first-class matter, 5,876,043,900 pieces inferior classification, and 591,492,490 pieces of purely city handling, a grand total of 12,817,198,710 pieces. These if only averaging the length of a medium-sized envelope, would stretch 1,213,750 miles, or a little over forty-eight and one-half times around the earth.—Scientific American.

"DEWEY" LETTER.

The Olympia, with Admiral Dewey on board will arrive at New York from Gibraltar on Tuesday September 28th. The ceremonies in New York will occupy Friday and Saturday, Sept. 29th and 30th. On Sunday evening, Oct. 1st the special train from Washington conveying the reception committee will reach New York and the party will spend Sunday night there. The special train will start from New York on its return trip Monday, with Admiral Dewey and the detachment of sailors from the Olympia on board so as to arrive at the Pennsylvania depot in Washington between seven and eight o'clock on Monday evening Oct. 2nd.

Next day, Tuesday, October 3, the magnificent Sword of Honor voted by Congress will be presented to Admiral Dewey by Secretary Long of the Navy Department. The presentation will take place at the east front of the Capitol, late in the afternoon upon a stand to be erected extending out from the east steps. This stand will purposely be small, accomodating no more than 200 members of Admiral Dewey's party and the invited guests. President McKinley will sit beside the Hero of Manilla upon the stand, while the cabinet officials and other distinguished persons will occupy places about him.

But though the stand has purposely been kept small, the interesting ceremony to be performed upon it, is likely to be witnessed by a larger crowd than has ever assembled in that huge plaza before, even at the most largely attended Presidential inauguration. A railroad rate from all points to Washington of one and one-third fare for the round trip is assured, while tickets will be good for long enough time to allow a stay of four or five days in Washington.

The sword of honor to be presented to Admiral Dewey was voted by Congress last summer, and has been made at a cost of $10,000 by Tiffany of New York. With the exception of the steel blade, and the body of the scabbard, the material used is 22 carat gold. On the pommel is carved the word "Olympia", with the sign of the zodiac for December, the lucky month in which Dewey was born. Around these is a wreath of oak leaves. Below this is the coat of arms of the United States and of Dewey's native state, Vermont, with its state motto, "Freedom and Unity." The guard is beautifully wrought in the shape of an eagle with outspread wings. On the front of the scabbard are the initials "G. D." and under them "U. S. N." On the blade of the sword is engraved the inscription: "The gift of the Nation to Rear Admiral George Dewey, U. S. N., in memory of the victory at Manilla Bay, May 1st 1898."

Diversified Farming.

The farmers of Minnesota have long since learned the lesson of profit in diversified farming, and each year finds them less dependent on the wheat crop than the predecessor. Wheat is a good crop, an easily produced crop and a profitable crop—when you get it. Unfortunately, however, it is not a reliable crop, either as to the certainty of results or the price obtainable. The extent of the crop must depend almost solely upon weather conditions, while the price is often fixed, not by the proper law of supply and demand, but by manipulators in the stock market and dealers in "futures." Mainly for these reasons the farmers of Minnesota are raising less wheat than formerly, as compared to other products, and stock and dairy farm is taking the place of the bonanza wheat farm.

It is only necessary for one to make the rounds at the agricultural building at the state fair for one to be shown the vast agricultural resources of Minnesota. Anything that will grow in any soil in a northern climate will grow in Minnesota, and grow too, in such abundance as to make its production profitable. The display of fruits, for instance, shows that fruit growing, contrary to all preconceived ideas, can be carried on profitably here. With the prices now obtainable and with the specimens of live stock on exhibition, it is clear that the man who has a well equipped Minnesota stock farm has a better fortune than he who owns a Klondike gold mine. And even the humble, clucking hen must not be ignored. She produced $10,000,000 of the wealth of the state last year.

But the dairy is Minnesota's best property to-day. With the best butter bringing 25 cents a pound—and Minnesota butter is always the best—a small farm, well stocked, with a little patch of meadow land, is a fortune for its owner, and one which is made with little labor and almost no investment of capital.

And the area of Minnesota's productiveness is increasing too. As the timber is removed from the former great pine belt the land denuded of its natural shelter becomes perpetually productive, and is being settled up by an industrious and progressive class of farmers, who will in time make it as rich and fruitful as the rolling prairies and rich valleys of the southern countries.—St. Paul Dispatch.

"Mr. Dooley" Creates a Girl.

The author of the famous "Mr. Dooley," Finley P. Dunne has joined the literary forces of The Ladies' Home Journal, and will create this fall in that magazine a new character, called Molly Donahu; who lives across the street from Mr. Dooley. Her creator says that Molly is a bright, pretty girl of nineteen, who has ambitions for the great world of woman's clubs, Browning societies, golf clubs, woman's rights organizations and the "high-toned literary and social life" which thrives on "the elite side of Chicago." Her mother and brother sympathize with her, but her father, who works in the mill, is hard to deal with in that he will insist on sitting at the table in his shirt-sleeves and in his stocking-feet. "Mr. Dooley" is the family's most intimate friend and is called upon frequently to run across and set matters straight.

Dirt in Wheat.

The Duluth Board of Trade has sent out the following circular for the benefit of the farmer:

The farmers of the Northwest little realize the enormous sums of money contributed to the yearly railroad receipts by shipping dirty wheat and other dirty grains to market.

It would seem that if they did, steps would be taken to clean grain at the farm, and even though it were not possible to feed the foul seed, it would appear as though it would pay to clean the grain and burn the screenings.

During the year ending August 31st there were received at Duluth 3,673,000 bushels of wheat dirt and 670,000 bushels of flax dirt, at which, on an average freight rate of 14c per 100 lbs. there was paid in freight $306,000.

More than two-thirds of this stuff was burned here to get rid of it; the balance, about 2,000 cars or 40,000 tons, was sold to feeders as screenings, netting about $150,000.

Here is a value of $500,000 yearly contributed by the country to waste. Probably the figures for Minneapolis would run up as much more.

$1,000,000 seems too large a sum to be wasted in that way.

BRYAN ON TRUSTS

OUR LEADER'S GREAT SPEECH AT CHICAGO.

The Outrageous Garbling and Suppression Done by Associated Press—Good Men Misled—The Speech One of Mr. Bryan's Greatest Productions—Governor Lind's "Forgetting" Most Fortunate—The Purpose to Whitewash Trusts Balked by Mr. Bryan—Melange of National and State Politics—Good Work by Game and Fish Agent Beutner—Progress of the Republican "Welcome" to Thirteenth—State Board of Equalization, Etc., Etc.—Note and Comment of the Week.

Reform Press Bureau.
St. Paul, Sept. 25, 1899.

The wisdom of Governor Lind in "forgetting" to send accredited representatives to the Chicago trust convention, was more than proven by results. That it fell entirely short of being a trust excusing gathering out and out, or failed of such purpose, was due in the self-sacrificing course of Mr. Bryan consenting to appear there. This he did in his view of a clear duty, well knowing the purpose of the trust defenders to in some manner break the force of public sentiment against their dear creature. He also well knew that the monopoly of all monopolies, the Associated Press, was more than liable to discriminate against him, and its performance in that regard was a little more outrageous than has recently occurred. The facts are that while the Associated Press carried every word of the speech of Bourke Cockran, making seven or eight columns, it carried less than two columns of Mr. Bryan's utterances, dropping the most pertinent and effectual portions. Thus it suppressed entirely the basic reform principle, that the root and necessity that have produced trusts, is our vicious financial policy which has appreciated money and lowered prices through a long period of years. Mr. Bryan's unanswerable points were carefully eliminated throughout. The Chicago dailies generally printed Mr. Bryan's speech in full, and this, which is to be regarded as one of his greatest efforts, should be obtained by all who can get it and given as wide circulation as possible.

In the situation that not a paper in Minnesota will probably print the speech in full, undoubtedly the best use of the limited bureau space is to give as many of the points made by our great leader as possible. This garbling and discrimination misled many well meaning men. Thus our usually fair friend, the St. Paul Globe, was led to declare the speech as "stale and unprofitable," while Judge Canty is still commenting on Mr. Bryan's propositions, based on such garbled information. The masses are thus totally deceived. How thoroughly to be despised is the management of this hippogat of hippogats, this monster of monsters, which controls, garbles and suppresses at will, the news of the world! An intelligence trust!

"The real cause of trusts is our long period of falling prices, caused by the rising dollar, due to bad financial legislation. The loss on investments, declines in property, profitless business, and the necessity for preventing further losses, have forced combinations to hold up or increase prices. Such losses, declines and necessities would not have occurred but for rising dollars and the attendant fall in the level of prices."

"The high tariff has aided monopoly, for no one can dispute that an import duty enables a trust to charge for its product the price of a similar product, plus the tariff."

"I want to start with the declaration that monopoly in private hands is indefensible from any standpoint and intolerable." (Applause.)

"I make no exceptions to the rule. I do not divide monopolies in private hands into good monopolies and bad monopolies. (Applause.) There is no good monopoly in private hands. There can be no good monopoly in private hands until the Almighty sends us angels to preside over us." (Applause.)

"In 1859 Abraham Lincoln wrote a letter to some people at Boston, and in the course of the letter he said: 'The Republican party believes in the man and the dollar, but in case of conflict it believes in the man before the dollar.'" (Applause.)

"Man is the creature of God and money is the creature of man. (Applause.) Money is made to be the servant of man—(applause)—and I protest against all theories that dethrone money and debase mankind." (Prolonged applause.)

"Lincoln warned us against monopoly, and Lincoln was right."

"I protest in the beginning against settling every question upon the dollar argument. I protest against the attempt to drag every question down to the low level of dollars and cents."

"If you will go about over the country you will see where the people have subscribed money to establish enterprises, having come under the control of the trusts, have been closed up, and stand now as silent monuments to the wisdom of the trust system."

"We get ideas from the animals about us. We used to protect property, down in Iowa, by putting rings in the noses of hogs. Why did we do that? So that while they were getting fat they would not destroy more than they were worth. And the thought came to me that one of the purposes of government was to put rings in the noses of hogs." (Laughter and applause.)

"The farmer cannot inflate the value of his land by watering the value of that land. The merchant in the store cannot inflate the value of the goods upon his shelves. Why should the corporation be permitted to put out stock that represents no real value?"

"In my judgment, when you take from monopoly the power to issue stock not represented by money you will go more than half way toward destroying monopoly in the United States." (Applause.)

"We have been placing the dollar above the man; we have been picking out favorites in government; we have been bestowing upon them special privileges, and every advantage we have given them has been given them in the detriment of other people."

"When God made man as the climax of creation he looked upon his work and said that it was good, and yet when God got through the tallest man was not much taller than the shortest, and the strongest man was not much stronger than the weaker. That was God's plan."

"We looked upon his work and said that it was not quite as good as it might be, and so we made a 'fictitious' man that is in some instances a hundred times—a thousand times—a million times—stronger than God made man."

"When God made man He breathed into him a soul and warned him that in the next world he would be held accountable for the deeds done in the flesh, but when we made our man-made man we did not give him a soul, and if he can avoid punishment in this world he need not worry about the hereafter." (Applause.)

"The trust is the natural outgrowth of unnatural conditions created by man-made laws. (Applause.) There are some who would defend everything, good or bad, on the ground that it is a part of destiny." (Applause.)

"Put the industrial system of this nation in the hands of a few men and let them determine the price of finished products and the wages of labor paid, and you will have an industrial aristocracy beside which a landed aristocracy would be an innocent thing, in my judgment." (Great applause.)

"Place the food and clothing, and all that we eat and wear, and use in the hands of a few people, and instead of being a government by the people, it will be a government of the syndicates, by the syndicates, and for the syndicates." (Applause.)

"Establish such a system and on the night before election a man will be notified not to come back on the day after election, unless the policy of trusts' candidate is successful." (Continued cheers and applause.)

"I warn the laboring men in the factories that when they join with the monopolies to crush the farmer, as soon as the farmer is crushed the laboring man will be crushed, and his ally will be destroyed. (Applause.) And in a test of endurance the farmer will stand it longer than the laboring man."

"You may drive the farmer down, so he cannot buy coal, but he can burn corn. (Laughter.) But you drive the coal miner down so he cannot buy corn and he cannot eat coal. (Laughter and prolonged applause.) You can drive the farmer down so that he cannot buy factory made goods, but his wife can do like the wife of old—make the clothing for the family off of the farm—but when you close your factories it will take all of the accumulated wealth of the cities to feed your starving men, made starving by your vicious, greedy, avaricious legislature." (Applause.)

"But, my friends, why should we try to see who can hold out the longest in suffering? Why try to see who can endure the most hardships and yet live? Why not try to see who can contribute most to the greatness and to the glory and to the prosperity of this nation?"

"Why, those who can contribute most should make this government what the fathers intended. For 100 years this nation has been the light of the world. For 100 years the best of all nations have looked to this nation for hope and instruction."

"Where we recognize that man has his rights and can defend them, he must also respect the rights of others. Let us show what can be done when we put into actual practice those great doctrines of human equality and of equal rights and make this government what the fathers intended, so that we shall lead the world, step by step, on to higher ground."

The banks of Minnesota are so prosperous under the gold standard, that their return of property for taxation this year is $9,000,000 less than one year ago. This is official, as presented by the board of equalization.

By the way, since the present board refused to raise the bank valuations people are expressing surprise at the attitude of the board and wondering what it is going to do anyhow. People should remember that after all the present board is one-half what the old one was. That is, one-half of the old members hold over, those from the even numbered judicial districts. Therefore, instead of there being full assurance that distinctive and genuine reforms in matters of taxation will be accomplished this year, there is only one-half ground for hope. The people are watching the good half, however, very closely, and as in the old battle days, expect every "man to do his duty."

The Republicans are getting on with labor. In Idaho and Illinois it stands at the point of McKinley's bayonets. In Indiana outrages on the Mine Workers have caused appeals that will reach its membership, now 1,000,000 strong. In Ohio the organized bodies, one after another, are declaring for the McLean ticket, while the Federation of Labor, of which Mr. Gompers is the able head, stands as a unit on the leading questions of the day, opposed to Republican policies, domestic and foreign. Labor should line up solid in 1900 against the G. O. P., and there is every indication that it will.

Those conducting the Republican reception to President McKinley will do well to remember the fate of one Grover Cleveland, once "received" at Minneapolis, and thereupon defeated for reelection, and also that of one Andy Johnson who swung round the circle, and looked worse than 30 cents when it was all over.

STOCKYARDS FIRE.

Loss Now Said to Exceed a Quarter of a Million Dollars.

Chicago, Special.—Officials of the Union Stock Yards and Transit company stated that the loss by Thursday's fire was much greater than at first supposed. The total loss will probably be close to $300,000. Insurance will not cover more than 25 per cent of the loss. Of the 1,400 horses stampeded during the fire, nearly all have been accounted for. The big building will be rebuilt on a more substantial plan.

Washington, Special.—The war department made public yesterday a statement showing that the exports from the port of Havana for the month of August, 1899, usually considered the poorest month of the year, reached the magnificent sum of $2,170,284. The United States alone took $1,342,360 worth of mercantile products, and in addition received $520,000 in gold coin. On this basis the export trade of Havana for the year would reach $26,045,028.

The extensive coffee and spice mills of H. R. Droste & Co., on East Second street, Cincinnati, were damaged to the extent of over $00,000 by fire.

KEELEY CURE IMITATORS.

Many Lives Wrecked by Unscrupulous Persons Who Pretend to Cure.

Many thousands of confirmed drunkards and drug-users are annually restored to sobriety, home, happiness, good citizenship and earning capacity by the genuine Keeley Treatment, administered at the Minneapolis Keeley Institute, and many thousands more would be so restored were it not for the heartless, blackmailing system of robbery practiced by hundreds of so-called physicians who prey upon the community with worthless and disastrous cures. We have a record of more than twelve hundred of these body-destroying, health and home-wreckers, scattered over every state in the Union, the bad results of whose work is truly appalling, and because most of them have stolen Dr. Keeley's livery under which to pose as "Gold Cures," they are able to impose on the unsuspecting, and by offering a cheap price for a worse than worthless service, add disaster to misfortune by their heartless efforts to obtain money by false pretenses. It comes to our knowledge that several parties in the State of Minnesota are falsely claiming to sell the Keeley Remedies and administer the Keeley Treatment. This is notice to all concerned that the GENUINE KEELEY REMEDIES AND TREATMENT cannot be obtained in the State of Minnesota at any other place than THE KEELEY INSTITUTE, corner Park Avenue and Tenth street south, Minneapolis. All others so claiming to supply are impostors and frauds, and the public should be governed accordingly.

CLEAN GUESS.

Which Netted a Broken and Sick Man a Little Fortune.

New York Mail and Express: "Did you ever have a big piece of pure luck when you really needed it badly?" said one who is at present a high railroad official. "I did once, and never again. It happened in Denver in 1882. I was broke. I had just come out of the hospital after a long tussle with pneumonia and I was unable to do manual labor, which was the only thing I could find. One afternoon, when things were at their very worst, I was sitting in the old Charpiot hotel and overheard two men talking very secretly about a big strike in some mine. I inferred from their conversation that it was somewhere in the San Juan district, but they didn't mention the exact location or the name of the property. When they went out I noticed a tiny piece of ore laying on one of the chairs, where it had evidently been dropped while they were examining some specimens. It was brown quartz, literally full of gold. It was ore that made a fellow's heart jump just to look at it, and while I was turning it between my fingers it all of a sudden flashed into my mind that it must have come from the Lady Alice. They had taken stuff from it once, but the vein had 'pinched out,' and the property was supposed to be N. G. Its stock had dropped to nothing. Of course, it was only a guess," continued the speaker, "and there were several hundred chances that it wasn't the Alice at all. I did some quick thinking. There was a banker up town who owned a lot of Alice stock, and in two minutes I was on my way to his office. 'Look here,' says I, when I finally got into his den, 'I have information worth a lot of money to you; what is it worth to me?' 'Not a cent down,' says he, promptly, 'but 10 per cent if I get it.' I handed him the piece of ore; it was about as big as the end of my thumb. 'They've struck that in the Lady Alice,' says I. To my surprise he turned pale as death and yelled for a clerk. 'Run after Smith!' he bawled, 'and bring him back with that stock!' Smith, it turned out, was the messenger, and he was then on his way to deliver a bundle of Alice stock for which the banker had just been offered a couple of hundred dollars. He had thought it a good trade until he saw my ore. Smith came back and the banker tried his best to pump me, but I wouldn't tell him any more. If he had known I was only guessing he would have kicked me out, but the fates were with me. The next day the news of the discovery got to the public; it was Alice, sure enough, and the stock went scooting skyward. Meanwhile the fellows in on the secret had bought up all they could. My banker scooped in a big pot of money and I got $2,500 for my share."

CATCHING HIS FISH.

It Was Done When His Friends Were Not Looking.

It isn't right to spoil a good fish story, but it is just as well to tell the truth about such things once in awhile. At the recent outing of the McFarlane Hunting and Fishing Club at Penetanguishine, Can., the prize for the largest one-day catch of fish was awarded to Philip S. Flinn, says the Pittsburg News. Since the members of the club came back to Philadelphia they have heard rumors that there was something wrong about his phenomenal catch—twenty-eight large bass, not to speak of a number of other fish that were not counted. This is really how it happened: The club occupied a large boathouse. On an island a half-mile away their guides lived. On the return of a member from a day's fishing the guide first rowed him to the boathouse, where the fish he had caught were counted, weighed and scored. Then the guide took the fish to the island to be cleaned. Mr. Flinn was out one day and he had nothing but hard luck. He had only two small fish on his string when the sun began to sink. He waited until all of the other boats were in and their fish counted and taken to the guides' island. Then he ordered his guide to row him to the windward of the island where they would be hidden from view of those at the boathouse. He landed there and going to the quarters of the guides he picked out all of the big fish that had been caught by the other clubmen that day and put them on his string. He and the guide then made a wide sweep in the boat and approached the boathouse from the leeward. There was a commotion when the fish he brought were counted and weighed. Everybody wanted to know where he got them. Some accused him of finding good fishing grounds and keeping the location to himself. He "confessed" at last that he had caught them up at the "old wreck." The next day every member of the club had a line or two in the water at that point. But they didn't catch anything worth mentioning.

The Oldest Sovereign in Europe.

The Grand Duke of Luxemburg, the oldest of the reigning sovereigns of Europe, is 82 years of age. The event is one of some interest to the British royal family, as the grand duchess is a first cousin of the Princess of Wales. The Grand Duke Adolphus, who is one of the richest royal personages in Europe, inherited the throne of Nassau in 1839, on the death of his father, and in 1844 married the Grand Duchess Elizabeth of Russia, daughter of Grand Duke Michael Paulovitch, and niece of Emperor Nicholas I., who brought him a very large fortune. The grand duchess died a year after her marriage, at the age of 19. The grand duke married his present wife in 1851, and she is a daughter of the late Prince Frederick of Anhalt-Dessau. The grand duke lost his throne in 1866, but retained his vast estates and his immense fortune.

PRACTICAL HELP FOR SUFFERING WOMEN

Mrs. Mabel Good, Correctionville, Ia., tells how Mrs. Pinkham saved her life. She says:

"I cannot thank you enough for what your medicine has done for me. I can recommend it as one of the best medicines on earth for all women's ills. I suffered for two years with female weakness and at last became bedfast. Three of our best doctors did me no good so I concluded to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. After taking a few bottles of your medicine, I was able to do all my housework. I know that your medicine raised me from a bed of sickness and perhaps death, and am very thankful for what it has done for me. I hope that every suffering woman may be persuaded to try your medicine."

Get Mrs. Pinkham's advice as soon as you begin to be puzzled. The sick headaches and dragging sensation come from a curable cause. Write for help as soon as they appear.

Mrs. Dole Stanley, Campbellsburg, Ind., writes: "Dear Mrs. Pinkham—I was troubled with sick headache and was so weak and nervous, I could hardly go. A friend called upon me one evening and recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, saying that she knew that it would cure me. I then sent for your medicine and after taking five bottles of it, I was entirely cured. I cannot praise it enough."

BRILLIANT NAVAL PARADE

MAGNIFICENT DISPLAY IN HONOR OF THE NATION'S IDOL.

A Stupendous Marine Panorama, the Like of Which Could Not Be Equaled the World Over, Is Witnessed by Three Million Wildly Enthusiastic People, All Assembled to Pay Homage to the Conqueror of Montejo—Vessels Decked Out in Brilliant Array Pass in Review Before the Multitude—The Admiral at the Head of the Procession Is Given a Tremendous Ovation—Gorgeous Display of Fireworks in the Evening.

New York, Oct. 1.— No Roman conqueror returned to his triumphs of barbaric splendor; no victor, chieftain or prince, coming home from a successful war, ever received such a magnificent ovation as overwhelmed Admiral Dewey as he stood on the bridge of the Olympia at the head of a magnificent fleet of steel thunderers of the deep, followed by a thousand vessels of peace, each tiered and coated black with people, over the black waters of the upper bay, over the broad pathway of the sunlit river whose shores were covered with thousands of streamers and flags that waved in the breeze. The wharves, piers, rock heights and grassy knolls were black with frantic, enthusiastic people, who strived weakly to make their shouts heard above the perfect bedlam of tooting whistles that accompanied the admiral, ashore and afloat.

As the tomb of Grant at Riverside Park was reached the fleet paid its tribute to the memory of the great warrior with a national salute of twenty-one roaring guns. The fleet then anchored and reviewed the almost endless procession of craft that steamed past, all so burdened with humanity that they looked as if they would turn turtle before they got back to their piers. Toward the end the parade got disorganized and it took hours for the heterogeneous fleet to get by. Darkness at last brought relief to the tired admiral, who had stood on the bridge for six hours bowing his acknowledgments to the stentorian expressions of homage. New York has anything approaching this wonderful, remarkable demonstration. The Columbian naval parade, the dedication of Grant's tomb and the reception of the North Atlantic squadron last fall, all pale before this gigantic ovation to the sailor who, in a single morning, destroyed an enemy's fleet without the loss of a man or a ship.

It is not beyond the mark to say that three million people viewed the pageant from shore and that a quarter of a million were afloat. When New York turned out to the celebration yesterday morning a light haze hung over the harbor, but this was soon burned up by the bright sun, which bathed the sea and city with its brilliant radiance. Wind was strong and gusty and kept the flags flapping. The water under the fresh breeze made the dancing little waves which seemed to raise their cresty heads in anticipation of a sight of the conqueror.

People who went down the bay were lost in admiration at the scene along the river front. On the East river, from the bridge to the battery, where sailing craft lie in groves, the spars were covered with such a mass of color as might be compared to a maple-grown hillside in the deep autumn. Tall spars of the clippers were conspicuous for their ensigns and signals. Every craft in the harbor was decked out from stem to stern with all the grace and attractiveness known to skippers. But the display in the East river was not to be compared with that of the North river, up which the procession was to pass. From the peaks of every pier long ropes strung with were stretched to the snubbing-post at the corner, the fronts were decorated with the multitude of gay colors. There were flags on the staffs and lines of flags above the tops.

The vessels at the side were dressed from stem to taffrail and some carried flags on their yards and had their deck houses covered. The wind shook the banners from millions of windows, porticos and even steeples, and never, perhaps, in this generation did hearts that love it, bound so quickly at the sight of the flag. Up the river, far off Jersey shores, and from the misty palisades, it blew.

Very early the fleet of steamships, steamboats, yachts and tugs which were to have a place in the line began moving down the bay to the alloted points where the several divisions were to form, but many of them could not resist the temptation to first visit the anchorage of the men-of-war off Tompkinsville, and before 11 o'clock the Olympia was surrounded by a perfect mob of every known kind of craft, all swarming with people, circling around, or pushing their noses close up to the ship to get a glimpse of the admiral pacing the quarter-deck. The bands on board the excursion boats played stirring airs and whistles and sirens of the other craft made the air hideous by their shrieks. They kept coming, coming in pairs and half-dozens, until they lay a dozen deep, resisting the charges of the patrol boats in their determination to get within shouting distance. Their Recklessness Was Amazing.

They ran across each other's bows; rubbed against each other, they pushed boats' sterns until further movement was impossible in the inextricable confusion. It was with great difficulty that the police boats could clear passage for the admiral's launch when he went off to return the official visit of the mayor, and when he did step in his launch the patriotic skippers grabbed their whistles and made the hills reverberate with such a blast as can only be heard when a Yankee yacht crosses the finish first in a race with mug-hunters. And that was simply the prelude to what continued throughout the day—an almost continuous roar of steam whistles.

Meanwhile the vessels to take part in the parade were massing over against Long Island shore until that side of the harbor became a mass of tangles, spars and framework as far as the eye could reach. The grassy slopes of Fort Wadsworth and Fort Hamilton and the shores of Staten Island were covered with sightseers. The warships lay spick and span, ready for the start, their white sides as virgin snow. Between them and the shore lay the low, long, lean, wicked looking torpedo boats, and still inside of them the graceful row of revenue cutters.

Aboard the Olympia the marines and sailors had been previously inspected from the toe of the first marine to the jaunty cap of the last sailor. All seemed a little before them, and no doubt many would have preferred a programme involving a duplication of the Manila fight to the ordeal they were to go through.

The signal came for the fleet to get under way. The gangways were hauled up and drums beat. A quartermaster hurried a small dark roll of bunting to the main, hauled over fist. It hung there while the bugle sounded the crew to quarters and the marines were mustered aft. Then, just as the signal to weigh was given, a pull on the halyards opened the roll and spread the four-starred flag which Farragut flew as he ran the fort in New Orleans. It was the flag which was presented to Admiral Dewey. As it broke, sailors at their stations and marines at quarters greeted it with the hip, hip, hurrah we got from our ancestors. The flag floated proudly all through the pageant. It is the most precious possession of Farragut's pupil, and when it is struck on Monday it will probably be forever, as it is altogether unlikely that Admiral Dewey will command another fleet. It was exactly 1 o'clock, the hour fixed for the start, when the fleet, with anchors hove, began to move. When the ships had straightened out for their journey across the upper bay the spectacle made will ever be treasured by those who saw it. On the port beam of the Olympia was the escorting ship Sandy Hook, with the mayor and other dignitaries aboard, and in her wake at intervals of 400 yards stretched out a mile long the towering warships, the armored cruiser New York, the battleships Indiana and Massachusetts, the cruiser Brooklyn, battleship Texas, the old frigate Lancaster, the gunboat Marietta and the Chicago, the flagship of the South Atlantic squadron.

Admiral Dewey went up into the after bridge as soon as the start was made and remained there during the parade, outlined against the sky for the thousands ashore and afloat. The guns of the Olympia only spoke once before Grant's tomb was reached. That was when they barked in answer to the deep baying of the guns of old Fort William on Governor's island. When the fleet rounded the stake boat above Grant's tomb on Riverside avenue, and each ship had let go its salute, the sound that arose was inspiring, a mad fantastic roar that continued for almost ten minutes. The parade at this point began to become disorganized, many pleasure craft leaving the line below and crowding so fiercely about the Olympia that she was manoeuvred with great difficulty. The excursion boats, loaded to the guards with people, were almost criminally reckless as they passed along, many of them listed so far that one wheel was buried deep while the other scarcely touched the water. The admiral was sometimes annoyed by the crowding of these craft, but he retained his equanimity through it all, bowing and removing his cap to the exulting and cheering crowds. When the crowd of vessels about the flagship became so dense that the progress of the rest of the parade was impeded the admiral ordered the police patrol boats to clear the way of the ships that had left the line and had spread themselves about the Olympia like a flock of wild fowl. He did not leave the bridge until the approaching darkness turned the ships in the demoralized tail end of the procession back to their piers.

A Heroic Figure

Gorgeous Display of Fireworks.

Never before in the history of New York has this city ever witnessed a greater pyrotechnical and electrical display than that with which the return of Admiral George Dewey was surrounded in the harbor and water surroundings the Island of Manhattan last night. No more picturesque spectacle has ever been presented to so large a concourse gathered on both shores of the North river as that of the great hulks of the battleships of Dewey's fleet silhouetted against the dark background of the sky and shining from stem to stern with millions of incandescent lights, while all around numerous brilliantly decorated yachts and other river craft honored the nation's hero.

Sir Thomas Lipton's yacht, the Erin, was brilliantly lighted with streamers of white lights and the name "Erin" in green between the masts.

From the bay the letters of the Brooklyn bridge "Welcome Dewey" were plainly discernible, and were one of the features of the celebration, many persons going out on the bay in boats to see this display.

There was apparently no end to the display of fireworks. Every wharf landing and pier had its quota of sightseers and the enthusiasm was abundant. From the house tops as well as from the sidewalks powder by the barrel was burned and rockets sent aloft in honor of the hero of Manila bay. Over on the Jersey shore the display was just as generous and the sky was lighted with the blaze of fireworks, making the surrounding seas bright as midday. Staten Island contributed to the general display of fireworks.

Accidental Hanging.

Fort Dodge, Iowa, Oct. 1. — A sad tragedy occurred at Britt, where Dudolph Nissen, a lad of twelve years of age, who was visiting at the home of Isler Nissen, hung himself in the granary. He was all alone at the time, and no one knows just how the tragedy was brought about, but it is supposed he was trying to imitate a wild West horse thief.

LAND PARADE IN DEWEY'S HONOR

TERMINATION OF NEW YORK'S BRILLIANT WELCOME.

Survivors of Two Wars Pass in Review Before the Admiral, Who Stands With Bared Head—Thousands of Men From All Stations Make It a Brilliant Parade—Wild Enthusiasm at the Sight of the Great Naval Hero—Next to Dewey, Schley Receives the Greatest Reception of the Day—Cheers for Miles and Merritt.

New York, Oct. 2.—The land parade Saturday capped the climax. The city, state and nation united in one vast demonstration worthy of the hero of Manila. The earth trembled beneath the tread of 30,000 men and the air was warm with the shouts of millions.

The naval parade the day before was a magnificent and superb spectacle, but the wonder of modern times was the great land parade. Thousands of proud men of our land and sea forces, militia of ten states and the veterans of the Civil and Spanish-American wars swelled the procession and gave it the dignity in size that it held in sentiment. There was stretched down the line of parade on either side a dense, impenetrable mass of people, who overflowed into the building, windows and onto the roofs, sat in embrasures and crowded scaffolding. At Broadway, where it crosses the avenue, the skyscrapers were as crowded at the top as at the bottom, and for blocks down the intersecting streets tenants hung from the windows and fire escapes, and multitudes of them were on the roofs, lying flat and peering over the cornices. The crowd waited good-naturedly to see Dewey, and they waited on unconsciously for three hours and a half while the procession passed. Far down this living lane the column marched, between rows of buildings gorgeous with flags and bunting, and the air vibrated with the shouts of welcome and cheers. When the head of the parade appeared the jackies of the Olympia marched with a rolling step to the accompaniment of Sousa's band. It was a poor American whose heart did not beat higher. Those in the stands leaped upon their seats and everybody greeted the advancing column with cheers. Then came the hero of the day, the admiral of the fleet, with the other officers. The people did not have to give a second glance at the man whose features have been blazoned everywhere for weeks. He was recognized and cheers greeted him. The greeting to the Olympia's men seemed tame to the shout they raised. Admiral Dewey, during his last few days' experience, has become somewhat accustomed to these vociferous greetings, and he took it all calmly, smiling and bowing right and left, and occasionally lifting his gold-trimmed beaver as he rode along. The gallant captains of the ships engaged in the destruction of Montejo's fleet, except poor Gridley, who died a month followed, and each got a rousing welcome. The three rear admirals, Howison, Sampson and Philip, as they rode by with their brilliantly accoutered staffs, were easily recognized and got flattering applause, as did many of the staff officers of the North Atlantic squadron. Both Gen. Miles and Gen. Merritt got ovations. The former seemed to always have his cap off acknowledging the salutations of the throng.

After the Battle,

But it was Rear Admiral Schley who divided honors with the central figure of the day. He received a demonstration second only to that of Dewey. People along the line of march fairly roared at him, straining their already bursting throats to the breaking point. "Hurrah for the hero of Santiago!" "There is the man who soaked Cervera's fleet!" "Hip, hip, hurrah for Schley!" and kindred cries came from all parts of the line. Up Fifth avenue some enthusiastic lady threw him a handful of roses. By the time he got to Madison Square Admiral Schley was up to his arms in roses. The marines and sailors of the North Atlantic squadron, eight battalions of them, attracted much attention. They marched neither the seaman's roll nor landsman's tread, but a combination. The men of the Brooklyn won perhaps the most applause.

The provisional brigade of the army lacked the confident, easy step for which army veterans are noted. They were preceded by a battalion of the West Point cadets in their showy uniforms of grey, with white duck trousers, moving like one man, eight hundred legs moving like clock-work, every cap and bayonet in perfect line.

Gov. Roosevelt, riding a spirited black horse, at the head of the national guard of the State of New York, and surrounded by brilliantly uniformed officers, received a hearty and continuous ovation from one end of the line to the other. Before Madison Square was reached Admiral Dewey and the reviewing party in carriages passed the front of the procession and alighted as the reviewing stand opposite Twenty-sixth street, and took their places in the boxes hung with laurel wreaths that had been reserved for them. There for the first time the admiral saw the great arch of victory erected in his honor. The arch faces the sea. The approaches are guarded by tall colonnades, transforming the street at the reviewing booth into a court of honor. Here the admiral reviewed the entire parade.

Saturday night, the smoker given at the Waldorf-Astoria to the sailors of the Olympia, concluded New York's wonderful reception of Admiral Dewey and his men.

TOO MUCH FOR HIS STRENGTH.

Admiral Dewey Almost Exhausted From the Great Strain.

New York, Oct. 2. —The functions and the receptions that have figured so prominently in the daily life of Admiral Dewey since his arrival off Sandy Hook last Tuesday morning have proven almost too much for his strength. The admiral has been under such a perpetual physical and nervous strain that he is almost exhausted. Saturday's ceremonies were the most taxing on his strength of any that he has yet had to undergo, and he appeared yesterday looking pale and worn, despite the fact that he retired early Saturday evening and enjoyed a good night's rest. The admiral yesterday was too fatigued to do more than remain in his room the greater part of the time and rest quietly. At 10 o'clock Admiral Dewey had an engagement to meet the Chicago Dewey committee, and before he came down sent a message to Mayor Harrison requesting that he be not expected to shake hands with the members of the committee. The admiral explained the request by saying that he had had so much handshaking Saturday that his hand pained him severely. Admiral Dewey rose early in the morning and was served a cup of tea at 6 o'clock. Shortly after he had breakfast, which was sent to his apartments, and which he ate alone. When the admiral had finished his breakfast he sent for his private physician, Dr. Percy, who was closeted with him for a few minutes. Admiral Dewey later called on the members of his family and relatives and chatted with them for some time. He was called on by Mayor Van Wyck at 9 o'clock. He was escorted by the mayor all day. The admiral received many callers, but declined to see many, fatigue being given as an excuse. Among those who were honored by the admiral were the Chicago delegation. At 9:25 Mayor Harrison, with one of the Chicago committeemen, arrived at the hotel. The others came straggling in and at 9:50 all were present. The doors of the ball room were thrown open, and the committee, headed by the mayor, entered. Promptly at 10 o'clock Admiral Dewey came into the room. He wore a civilian suit with a frock coat and dark trousers and carried no hat. The moment he appeared there was burst of applause.

Mayor Harrison, in a few well-chosen words extended an invitation to the admiral to visit Chicago during the corner stone laying, or if not then, to fix his own time and consider the invitation as a standing one. Admiral Dewey replied that it would give him great pleasure at some future time to visit Chicago, but that present engagements would not permit of his being there during the coming celebration.

The corridors of the Waldorf-Astoria were thronged all day with people anxious to catch a glimpse of the great admiral. Early in the morning they began to come in and they were coming and going all day. But none of them was given the pleasure of seeing Dewey. He was not down in the corridors of the hotel at any time. When he was escorted to the room to meet the Chicago delegation he was taken down a private stairway and returned the same way. In every conceivable manner his movements were guarded to keep the persistent crowd from getting near him.

WASHINGTON NEXT.

Nation's Capital Ready to Take the Admiral in Hand.

Washington, Oct. 2.—Elaborate preparations have been made to give Admiral Dewey a glorious and mighty welcome when he returns to Washington this evening, the nation's hero. His arrival in the city will be signalized by an admiral's salute of seventeen guns and a pandemonium of noise from all the cannon, bells and steam whistles in or about the city. From this time until late in the night his presence will let loose the kindled enthusiasm of the thousands who have been eagerly awaiting his coming. A civic parade of 12,000 men is only a small part of the first night's proceeding, for an immense throng of people will file before him for an hour, their numbers being limited only by the breadth of Pennsylvania avenue. Tomorrow will be the great day, for then Admiral Dewey is to be escorted to the capitol by the president and his cabinet and a fine military escort and presented the sword voted to him by congress. The admiral will ride in the same carriage with the president. The exercises will be brief. They will take place on a reviewing stand erected on the east front of the capitol and facing the broad esplanade on which many thousands of persons gather every four years to witness the inaugural ceremonies. A larger crowd than witnessed any of these presidential ceremonies will fill the grounds.

The sash and door company had insurance of $35,000 and the Woodward-Holmes company's loss is partly covered.

President Will Be in Chicago Next Saturday.

Chicago, Oct. 3. — President McKinley has telegraphed to the federal committee that he will arrive in Chicago on Saturday, Oct. 7, to participate in the fall festivities and lay the corner stone of the postoffice building. All the plans of the committee were shifted to make the day brilliant with events.

AN IMPORTANT LAW.

Heavy Penalties For Selling Articles of Food Containing Unhealthy Ingredients.

The following law was passed at the last session of the Missouri Legislature, taking effect August 20, 1899:

Section 1. That it shall be unlawful for any person or corporation doing business in this state to manufacture, sell or offer to sell any article, compound or preparation for the purpose of being used or which is intended to be used in the preparation of food, in which article, compound or preparation there is any arsenic, calomel, bismuth, ammonia or alum.

Sec. 2. Any person or corporation violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction, be fined not less than one hundred dollars, which shall be paid into and become a part of the road fund of the county in which such fine is collected.

The operation of this law will be mainly against alum baking powders. But the manufacture or sale of any article of food or article intended to be used in food which contains any of the substances classed by the law as unhealthful—from Arsenic to Alum—is absolutely prohibited.

The Baltimore and Ohio South Western Rail Road placed in service several months ago five large ten-wheel compound passenger engines for use on fast trains between Cincinnati and St. Louis. The performance of these engines has been eminently satisfactory and up to the highest expectation.

The same line has also in service 50 consolidation compound freight engines, which provides ample power for the entire line in addition to what was already in use. The compound engines were an experiment, but hard service has proved that they were entirely successful, and show a saving of 15 per cent in fuel as compared with simple engines of the same type. Exhaustive tests were made with both the simple and compound locomotives before the order for the entire lot was placed, with the result vastly in favor of the compound locomotives.

CARTER'S DOWNFALL.

The President Confirms the Verdict of the Court-Martial.

Washington, Oct. 3.—The president has approved the sentence imposed by court-martial on Capt. Oberlin M. Carter, corps of engineers, U. S. A., and a formal order was yesterday issued from the war department directing the execution of the sentence.

Robbers Get $500.

Portsmouth, Ohio, Oct. 3. — Twelve masked robbers entered the Mead homestead, twelve miles northeast of this city last night and, firing revolvers, ordered the family to remain in bed. George Gallagher, a nephew of the Meads, refused to obey and was beaten into unconsciousness and the others were tied to the beds. The robbers searched the house, tearing up hearths and pulling down mantels, securing about $500. Mead had, fortunately, deposited $2,500 in bank Friday. The robbers, before leaving, set the house on fire, but the fire went out. Gallagher is badly injured and may die.

Prison Demon Escapes.

Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 3.—John Atkinson, confined in the steel cage at the penitentiary built for himself and the other prison "demons," Murlatt, Hurley and O'Neill, escaped yesterday from his cell and had secreted himself under a bench in the corridor when captured. The steel cage was thought to be absolutely safe, there being two sets of doors and two sets of locks, worked only from the outside by levers and bolts. Atkinson managed, by the use of a stick, to disarrange the whole system of locks and free himself.

Large Yield of Wheat.

Huron, S. D., Oct. 3. — Threshing is progressing rapidly throughout this, Beadle, county, and in every instance the yield of wheat is larger than estimated. Some farmers who thought they would get only from three to five bushels per acre are delighted to find that the machine turns out from five to eight bushels, and some get as high as twelve and fifteen bushels per acre. Oats, rye and barley also give better yield than expected.

An Effective Kick.

Constantinople, Oct. 3.—Customs officials refused to pass 20,000 sacks of American flour arriving directly from the United States on the ground that the flour was unwholesome. The minister protested at the palace and obtained an irade ordering its admission.

Narrow Escape.

AGGIE WANTS PEACE.

Requests Gen. Otis to Open Negotiations.

Manila, Oct. 3.—The Filipino peace commission, which arrived at the American lines Saturday morning, brought a request from Aguinaldo that he be permitted to send a representative of his government to negotiate for peace. Gen. Otis refused the request. There will be another conference.

-o-

Manila, Oct. 3.—Aguinaldo's third attempt to shift his difficulties into the field of diplomacy is the repetition of the other two, an endeavor to obtain some sort of recognition of his so called government.

The Filipino envoys had a conference with Gen. Otis yesterday afternoon. They brought a message from Aguinaldo that he desired peace, and wished to send civil governmental commissioners to discuss terms. Gen. Otis replied that it was impossible for him to recognize Aguinaldo's government in that way. They presented a letter from Aguinaldo as "president of the republic," which was mainly a repetition of his recent dispatches. Gen. Otis to this said that while Aguinaldo was looked upon as general of the insurgent forces he could not recognize him as head of any organized government. Another conference will be held today.

Manila, Oct. 3.—Fourteen American prisoners, all enlisted soldiers, were yesterday delivered up by the insurgent commissioners who arrived at Angeles for a conference with Gen. Otis. It is reported from Iloilo that the Tagals have arrested Virayan, a general, charging him with being a traitor. Tribal discord, it is added, is growing. Many of the rebel soldiers have revolted.

The prisoners returned unanimously praised their treatment. One man said: "We have been given the best the country afforded — fine houses, fine quarters, servants, good food, plenty of wine and a money allowance. Aguinaldo visited us and shook hands. Three of the boys refused to shake hands with him."

Judging from the stories of the prisoners they have been lionized by the people. They report that five sailors, survivors of Naval Cadet Woods' party, arrived at Tarlac Wednesday. Though small importance is attached to their judgment, they agree in saying that the Filipinos all say that they are "tired of the war but will fight for independence to the last." The released soldiers all say the idea of independence has taken firm hold of the Filipinos and they threaten, if conquered, to exterminate the Americans by assassination. Aguinaldo seemed popular among all the people the prisoners met. The country, they say, is full of rich crops.

While Aguinaldo only offered to release the prisoners in Tarlac, there is great disappointment at the fact that Lieut. Gilmore's party failed to arrive. The Filipino commission does not arouse great expectations as to the result of its visit. Maj. Ortes said frankly that they were very tired of the war, but they decline to say what proposals they bring. The Filipinos lunched with Gen. Young at San Fernando.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 4, 1899.

She, Too, Was of a Large Family.

At a little informal married women's luncheon out in Eckington the other afternoon, given by the hostess in honor of her "guest from the west," a dainty, languorous, black eyed woman under 30, the conversation switched to the subject of large families. It appeared that most of the lunchers came from prolific families. Each appeared anxious to give her family's large tribal record for a considerable distance back, and none noticed the alarmed countenance of the hostess as the talk progressed. The hostess made many ineffectual efforts to signal the conversation to a standstill; likewise, she unavailingly endeavored to side track the large family theme. But it was no go, and it was finally up to her "guest from the west" to set forth the numerical contributions of her ancestors to previous censuses. When the question was put to her directly, she exhibited nary a flinch, but, smiling languidly, remarked:

"I am the youngest of 12 daughters and 18 brothers."

"Impossible!" exclaimed all of the women except the hostess, who contemplated the figures on her fan with a drawn, dreary smile.

"Not at all," replied the guest. "You are perhaps unaware that I was born and reared in Salt Lake City."

"Oh!" blankly exclaimed the other women. "Quite so!"

Then the hostess experienced no difficulty in shifting the current of talk into the weather channel.—Washington Post.

Pricing a Pair of Trousers.

Lord Brampton was on one occasion presiding over a case in which the plaintiff was giving evidence against a man who had stolen a pair of trousers from his shop.

"How much were the trousers?" queried Hawkins.

"Well," replied the plaintiff, "it depends who wants to buy them. I sell them to one man for 30 shillings, to another for 25, but you can have them for 23 and 6."

"Sir," cried Hawkins angrily, "I want you to tell me how much those trousers are worth!"

"Well," replied the plaintiff, "shall we say 22 shillings to you?"

"Look here," thundered Hawkins, "if you do not instantly tell me what those trousers are worth, I'll send you to jail for 14 days for contempt of court."

"Well, well!" replied the frightened plaintiff conciliatingly, "you may have them for a guinea. I'm giving them away; still you may have them at that price."

Even the stern aspect of Judge Hawkins could not stop the roar of laughter which broke out on hearing the reply, a roar in which Hawkins, after a few minutes, joined himself.

Snake Eat Snake.

A sight was witnessed one day at the Zoo that has been the talk of the people managing the animals of the garden ever since. Keeper Myers, who has charge of the snake cages, was about to feed the reptiles, when, to his horror, he saw one blacksnake measuring six feet devouring its mate, which was about the same length and size of itself. The reptile had swallowed its fellow head first, and only a foot and a half still remained outside its mouth. It was lying quietly, and about once every 30 seconds a swallowing motion would seize it, when as much as two inches of its meal would disappear. Myers opened the cage and, grabbing the powerless snake by the tail, began tugging away to release it. This proved to be no easy task, as the cannibalistically inclined monster had a firm hold on its breakfast. After several minutes of pulling that brought the perspiration out on the keeper the snake was set at liberty. For a time it seemed paralyzed, but gradually regained its strength.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

His Finish.

"Ah, Hortense," he cried, "I cannot give you up. You must reconsider the terrible sentence you have just imposed upon me. I refuse to believe that you know your own heart."

The proud girl looked at him for a moment as if she were half sorry, and then, becoming firm again, she said:

"No, Percy Hendershot. I have decided! It can never be!"

"But you will tell me," he pleaded, "what I have done to deserve this treatment, will you not?"

"Yes," she answered, "since you ask me to do so, I will. Nothing!"

Remembering, then, that he had never held a job for two consecutive weeks, he staggered out into the misty night.—Chicago Times-Herald.

The Red Sea.

At certain seasons of the year the Red sea is almost unbearable. The water taken from 70 to 80 feet below the surface of the sea at 6 o'clock in the morning will often register a temperature as high as 90 degrees. If, in addition, a sandstorm thinks fit to blow, the whole air is full of a mist made of innumerable particles of fine hot sand, which blind and suffocate at the same time.—Favorite Magazine.

Ventilating Bees.

In tropical countries there are what one can only describe as ventilating bees. During the hot season two or three bees post themselves on their heads at the entrance of the hive and fan the interior with the incessant motion of their wings. They are relieved at intervals by fresh bees who carry on the process. They are kept to their duty by a sort of patrol of bees. This is a well authenticated fact.

The two eggs laid by a pigeon almost invariably produce male and female. Some curious experiments as to which of the eggs produces the male and which the female have resulted in showing that the first egg laid is the female and the second the male.

A CIVIL WAR EPISODE

THE RAID UPON PORT GIBSON AND WHAT CAUSED IT.

Fifty Aristocratic Southern Girls Were Taken as Prisoners of War and Were Carried to Vicksburg and There Held as Hostages.

"I was mixed up in one little unrecorded event of the civil war," said General B., "that was interesting from its very unusualness, and which, as I look back upon it, seems strangely picturesque. We were attached to what was known as the marine brigade, a little fleet of 12 'tinclad' river steamboats that plied up and down the Mississippi river after the surrender of Vicksburg. The term 'tinclad,' by the way, is somewhat misleading, as it is not remotely connected with the white metal, but signifies rather boats heavily planked with oak for the purpose of protecting them somewhat from the ravages of bullets.

"One day our little battalion of four companies was ordered to steam down the river, disembark at Rodney, march to Port Gibson and there consult sealed orders in regard to further proceedings. Imagine our surprise upon reading the instructions that we were expected to capture and carry back to Vicksburg as prisoners 50 of the most aristocratic Confederate young women in the city. However, we had served long enough to obey orders without question, and, provided with guides familiar with the town, we set about our bizarre and not too agreeable task. We first established headquarters at the residence of a prominent Confederate judge.

"Then different squads were sent out to call at the homes of the young women and escort them to the place of rendezvous. The instructions were that they must report at headquarters within two hours on penalty of their family residence being burned to the ground. The only information we could give them (the whole transaction was as much a mystery to us as to them) was that they were to be taken to Vicksburg as prisoners of war, but were on no account to suffer any discomfort or indignity.

"Of course, there was great weeping, wailing and gnashing of teeth from tender mothers, loving sisters and irate fathers and brothers. But the incident had to be accepted as belonging to the fortunes of war, and at the end of two hours 40 of the 50, attended by anxious friends and relatives, were at the rendezvous. Mercy was implored for one delinquent. An additional hour was granted, and, at their own suggestion, several of the young women were dispatched to her home to persuade her to follow their example in gracefully submitting to the inevitable. The result was that before the hour was up the last fair prisoner had put in an appearance, though in a very defiant mood.

"Our troubles, however, by no means ended here. Indeed, they were hardly fairly begun. The next question was how to transport our beautiful captives to Rodney, a distance of some 20 miles, over roads that were in a frightful condition from the devastation of war and consequent neglect. All the good horses, too, like all the good men, were off to the war, and as for carriages, they had most decidedly fallen into a state of innocuous desuetude.

"There was obviously nothing for us to do, therefore, but to gather together all the broken down old horses and dilapidated vehicles in the vicinity, which we somehow managed to hitch together with plow harnesses, bits of rope, straps, etc. With these improvised coaches, drawn up into line, began the process of loading on our victims, and when they were all stowed away it was a motley looking procession, I can assure you. Even the sound of farewells and the sight of weeping eyes could not blind us to the humorous aspect of the scene. You must remember that we were all pretty young fellows in 1863. The civil war was fought by men whose average age was only 23.

"Well, we made our way slowly, amid tears and laughter, to Rodney, where we embarked for Vicksburg. Upon arriving there the young women were taken before the provost marshal, who put them on parole, confining them to the limits of the city. Most of them had friends in the town with whom they chose to remain, and suitable quarters were found for the rest.

"The reason for the whole transaction then transpired. It seemed that some northern young women schoolteachers had been taken prisoners by the Confederates and were at that moment in their camps, where they were forced to wash and mend for the soldiers and perform other menial services. These Confederate young women were, therefore, to be held as hostages until the northern women were released.

"There was little delay in the exchange, and we had our visitors in Vicksburg only 30 days. They were, however, very gay, delightful days. Yankee officers and Confederate maidens intermingled socially, and the acquaintance so rudely forced upon the beautiful southerners proved in some instances a mutual pleasure. I could, indeed, point to more than one romantic marriage that was the direct outcome of our raid upon Port Gibson."—Washington Times.

THE PIANO DETECTIVE.

Work That Keeps a Sleuth Busy Most of the Time.

"Did you ever hear of a piano detective?"

The city hall detective scratched his head reflectively and then was compelled to admit that he had never heard of such an individual.

"Well, there are a dozen or more of them in Philadelphia, and they make good money too.

"Their work is simple. You see, a great many piano firms sell instruments on the installment plan. That is, the purchaser pays, say, $50 down on a $500 or $600 instrument and agrees to make good the remainder at so much a month. By far the greater number of such purchasers are as honest as the day is long, but once in a while a man comes along whose little scheme is to move out the piano a day or two after it is delivered and sell it for a couple of hundred.

"It is the business of the piano detective to circumvent this sort of thing. As a rule, some suspicious movement on the part of the would be defrauder of the piano dealer causes him to be placed under suspicion. The dealer can't step in and take his instrument away under the contract, and the only thing he can do is to watch it. Here is where the piano detective comes in. He hovers around the house in which the suspected purchaser lives, night and day, watching any attempt to make way with the piano. Usually three or four weeks are long enough to settle the question one way or another. If the piano buyer is crooked, he is practically certain to make some sort of a move before the expiration of that time. If he doesn't, it is pretty safe presumption that the suspicion is groundless and the piano detective is called off by his employer, with no one but himself and two or three others the wiser. But the precaution is a necessary one."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

RECIPE FOR RAINMAKING.

Subsulphuric Acid, Water and Zinc Create Artificial Storms.

Some years ago Kansas was overrun with so called "rainmakers" who did a thriving business in vicinities afflicted with drought. The Rock Island railroad had a rainmaker who traveled about the country in a special car and made rain from Texas to Iowa. At the time the process employed was guarded as a secret, and no doubt the mystery surrounding the operation had much to do with the interest aroused among the people. But now comes George Matthews in the Wichita Eagle with a full exposition of the means employed by the Rock Island wizard and others, and the following is the recipe given by him:

"Ten fluid ounces of subsulphuric acid.

"Fifty fluid ounces of water.

"Five ounces of zinc.

"Renew every hour and stir every 30 minutes day and night until rain comes. The moment rain begins to fall remove jar or crock. In territory west of Kansas use one-third less; at sea level use double the quantity. In Kansas work only on southerly winds, which are the moisture bearing winds. Begin an experiment only in a clear sky. One station of the experiment, if successful, will produce a rain 30 to 50 miles in diameter. A better and more certain result can be secured by having three or more stations 40 or 50 miles apart."

According to Mr. Matthews, this mixture left in an open mouthed jar generates hydrogen gas, which rapidly ascends. The theory is that this gas ascending creates a shaft through the hot air down which the cold air rushes, creating a storm center and gathering moisture for precipitation. Matthews claims that of the 200 experiments made by him at least 180 were successful.—Kansas City Journal.

Take the Tombstone Along.

The cemetery superintendents say that there is one peculiarity about the funerals of Chinamen which is never noticed at any other funerals. The tombstone always comes along with the funeral. Most of the tombstones are simple slabs of marble, with the inscription in Chinese characters, which are arranged up and down instead of across the stone. In two or three instances the funerals of Chinamen have been known to be delayed because the friends of the man who was to be buried were waiting for the tombstone to be finished. The stone is always taken to the cemetery in the undertaker's wagon.—Baltimore Sun.

Contrary.

"I think my Uncle Jerry," said Aunt Mehitabel, "was the contrariest man I ever see. I remember of his pickin up a hot p'tater once when we was eatin dinner, an there wasn't no company at the house, nuther. An what do you s'pose he done with it?"

"Threw it at somebody?" conjectured one of the listeners.

"No; he held it in his hand till it blistered him."

"What did he do that for?"

"'Cause anybody else would 'a' dropped it!"—Youth's Companion.

An Easy One.

"Will you have a 15 cent dinner or a 25 cent one?" inquired a waiter.

"Is there any real difference?"

"Certainly."

"What is it?"

"Ten cents."—Ohio State Journal.

NEW YORK WORLD.
THRICE-A-WEEK EDITION.
Practically a Daily at the Price of Weekly.

The striking and important events of the last year have established the overwhelming value of The Thrice-a-Week World to every reader. For an almost nominal sum it has kept its subscribers informed of the progress of all our wars and, moreover, has reported them as promptly and fully as if it were a daily. With our interests still extending throughout the world, with troops operating in the Philippines and great Presidential campaign, too, at hand its value is further increased.

The motto of The Thrice-a-Week World is improved. It strives each year to be better than it was the year before, and public confidence in it is shown by the fact that it circulates more than twice as many papers every week as any other newspaper not a daily, published in America.

We offer this unequalled newspaper and The St. Hilaire Spectator together one year for $1.65.

The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2.50.

Surprised the Band Boys.

Monday evening as the band boys were practicing at their regular meeting place in the Hotel St. Hilaire, they were suddenly interupted when about half way through one of the hardest pieces they had ever tackled by the entering of about fifty of the young ladies and gentlemen of the village who marched in and took possession of the room. It is needless to say that the boys stopped right then and there although some of the boys knew what was going to happen, but without the aid of the ones not knowing anything about it, they soon failed in carrying out their parts in finishing the piece. After finding out "where they were at" the mustered up enough courage to play a few pieces and then turned the room over to the jolly crowd that did the surprising act. Misses Nelson and Hannay were the main ones that engineered the surprise party and it was a complete success to say the least. The room was soon arranged and dancing was the order of the evening. At 11:30 a fine lunch of sandwiches, cake and coffee was served after which dancing was again resumed which was kept up until two o'clock in the morning. The young ladies getting up the party took advantage of the long distance telephone line and invited a dozen or more of their intimate friends from Red Lake and Thief River Falls who responded by their presence. Everyone present had a most enjoyable time from all accounts.

Twenty marriageable maids in DeMotte, Ind., have formed a league to promote refinement among the young men of that city. At a late meeting they passed the following resolution:

Be it resolved that the ladies of DeMotte, Ind., will not hereafter marry a young man who is not a patron of his home newspaper, for it is a strong evidence of want of intelligence and that he will prove too stingy to provide for a family, educate his children and encourage institutions of learning in the community.

In view of this action no self-respecting man in DeMotte should be without a newspaper, even if he has to steal one—Press and Printer.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Regular Correspondent

Much interest is felt in Washington over the reported views of Admiral Dewey about the Philippine war. The Admiral said in part:

"I really believed that this trouble in the Philippines would have been over long before this. It should have been. I suppose that during the rainy season little was done. In my opinion, Gen. Otis has tried to do too much. I told him so. He has taken too many irons. No man can do what he is attempting. He can't be general, governor and judge. No man can. There is the great trouble. The result is very obvious if a man attempts to do too many things at the same time."

The comments of the Admiral are particularly suggestive in view of very general complaints that have been made against the management of the campaign by Gen. Otis. It has been frequently commented on by me in several letters, and the statement made that the dual office of civil governor and commanding-general should be abolished, and Otis required to either attend to the military or civil functions of the office, but not both. If he is competent to do anything which is open to serious questions, it would seem that the civil functions would seem to be more in line with his ability, for he is certainly not aggressive enough as a fighter, to be put in command of the army over such men as Lawton, McArthur and Wheeler. Besides, Otis has had little training as a fighter since the civil war, most of his time being occupied in departmental duties in Washington, where he succeeded in acquiring the pull which enabled him to lend his present position but gained no experience in war tactics. It is tought that the country will take up the complaint of Admiral Dewey, and demand that a fighting general be placed in the Philippines, and the scope of authority of Otis limited to the administration of the civil functions of his office. As long as we are compelled to carry on a war, let us earn the respect of the world by placing it in charge of competent officers.

Dewey Celebration.

Americans are quick to appreciate merit. The Dewey celebration proves that, and it is again forcibly demonstrated in the praise and confidence which is accorded Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, one of the most meritorious remedies ever compounded for indigestion, constipation, dyspepsia, biliousness, liver or kidney disease or any trouble arising from a weak stomach.

"A Gentle Wind of Western Birth"

Tells no sweeter story to humanity than the announcement that the health-giver and health-bringer, Hood's Sarsaparilla, tells of the birth of an era of good health. It is the one reliable specific for the cure of all blood, stomach and liver troubles.

He Had a Cork Leg.

A native Maori chieftain, the descendant of cannibal kings, is now completing his education in Chicago. Cannibalism ended in his tribe, he says, when Bishop Selwyn converted his grandfather; but he tells some stories of it which have a distinctly humorous flavor. For instance:

It is said that once a chief captured a missionary, who was old and thin, and looked as if his flesh would be tough. The missionary warned the chief that he would not make a good dinner, and, pulling up his trousers, cut a slice off the calf of his leg and offered it to the chief.

The chief tasted it, said he didn't like it, and passed it to a sub-chief. The sub tasted it, made a wry face, and passed it on. The next man who took a bite of it spat it out. The missionary was released. After he had gone it was discovered that he wore a cork leg.—Youth's Companion.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

If there is one thing on which the housewife prides herself, it is that of having her laundering done nicely, so that the wearing apparel may be the admiration of all. The washing is a small matter, any one almost can do that, but to have the linens present that flexible and glossy appearance after being ironed requires a fine quality of starch.

Ask your grocer for a coupon book which will enable you to get the first two packages of this new starch—"Red Cross" trademark brand, also two of the children's Shakespeare pictures painted in twelve beautiful colors as natural as life, or the Twentieth Century Girl Calendar, all absolutely free.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucus lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucus surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

New Blackmailing Scheme.

A Vienna man has evolved a new method of blackmailing. He sent to an elderly and wealthy lady a letter to the effect that if she did not forward a large sum of money to a given address he would contrive to have a bottle of deadly microbes uncorked in her room, which would certainly lead to her death. The old lady handed the letter to the police, and the ingenious Viennese got eighteen months' imprisonment.

INTERESTING CHAPTERS FOR OUR RURAL READERS.

How Successful Farmers Operate This Department of the Farm—A Few Hints as to the Care of Live Stock and Poultry.

Great Britain's Cow Population.

A writer in the British Dairy Farmer says:

The steady growth in our imports of dairy produce is largely attributable to the circumstance that the bovine population of Great Britain is increasing at a less rapid rate than the human population, the result being that the home sources of supply do not keep pace with the demand. This is very clearly shown in a table which Major Craigie gives in the new volume of Agricultural Returns (1898). It sets forth for the five periods of five years 1871-75 to 1891-95, and for each of the three years 1896 to 1898, the population of Great Britain, the number of cows and heifers in milk and calf, and the proportion of each of these per 1,000 persons. The following statement shows these proportions:

Period	Proportion of cows to 1,000 persons.
1876-80	78
1881-85	77
1886-90	78
1890-95	76
Year.
1898	73

The number of milk-producing cattle increased from 2,204,000 in 1871-75 to 2,562,000 in 1891-95. Simultaneously the population grew from 26,854,217 persons to 33,823,120. Hence, whilst Great Britain possessed 82 milk-yielding cattle per 1,000 persons over the earliest quinquennial period, these numbers had fallen to 76 over the latest. In the three years which have elapsed since the close of the period 1891-95 there has been a further proportionate decline, though in this respect 1898 is seen to show some slight improvement over 1897. Nevertheless, the human population of our island is increasing at so much more rapid a rate than the bovine that the proportions tabulated above can hardly fail to decline as future quinquennial periods become completed, and consequently our dependence on sea-borne butter must steadily become greater.

Turkey Talk.

From Farmers' Review:—What profit is there in turkeys? is the thing that farm wives want to know, as well as the different methods of rearing and fattening them. We held ours until time for the Xmas trade, which with us closes near the 18th of December. We only received 7¾ cents per pound last year, and considering their age, they weighed well. If one doesn't count their time and bother, all the flock brings is profit except the cost of the corn for fattening, for if the turks are allowed their liberty they will pick up most of their living, except that. One needs to begin fattening at least four weeks before marketing, and six is better. Unless your turks are early it is better to not try to fit them for the Thanksgiving market, keep them for the holiday trade, or even later. One Missouri grower cuts the wing and tail feathers of her poults off about half when they are small. Not for the reason given by some Leghorn breeders that their growth weakens the young, but because they drag the poult down by being so heavy, and also get wet and draggled. Why should clipping the feathers help the cause as far as weakening the poults are concerned, for the feathers have to grow again just the same. It is very necessary to keep the poults strong and growing, then they will manage to stand the growth of feathers. Let me urge again the necessity of cleanliness and entire freedom from lice in connection with the turks, and another thing as important is giving the breeders free range; this will cause the eggs to hatch strong, vigorous poults that can stand a few hard knocks.

We don't advise using grease in any shape or form or quantity on or about poults, use fresh insect powder of any well known brand, fresh tobacco dust, or cedar tea. Pike's lice killer and Lee's lice killer are also strongly recommended. Keep the young dry and warm for at least two weeks. Avoid overfeeding, unclean water and surroundings and soured food for they will surely cause sickness if not speedy fatalities. Don't overcrowd; to our cost we learned it was not safe to give one chicken hen more than fifteen and they must be of one age, else the older will trample the younger to death, then, too young turks require brooding the most of the time and if the hen has some that are old enough to run about the pen she will not hover as much as she should, they will likely get chilled, and if they do trouble is sure to follow. We used the same style coops that we use for the other poultry. A V style with slatted coop in front, but we had them one-fourth larger. Try to set the turk eggs under a gentle hen, and one that is a persistent brooder and not in a hurry to wean her young. They want mothering a long time. If not too large and heavy Cochins or Brahmas would be the thing to hatch and care for young turks. P. R. hens are O. K., but the pullets get tired two soon; they don't like to stay with the young long enough. Keep the turk eggs in a dry, rather cool place. If not dark, exclude the light by covering with cloths, turn half over every day, and you may safely keep them three weeks before setting. Break up the hens when they first want to sit, but let them sit the next time. If you break them the second time their third litter will be so late there won't be much in raising the turks. The hens should lay from 18 to 25 eggs the first clutch, 15 to 20 the second, and the third not more than 12 or 13. Turkey raising is so much like a game of chance that when one once tries, they will try, try again even if they don't make a cent.

EMMA CLEARWATERS.

Making Country Butter.

As to making butter in the country without ice, I say it can be done. Not tallow butter or axle grease, but butter of the gilt-edge variety, writes Mrs. Juliette Lamkin of Texas, in an unidentified exchange. I know whereof I speak, and will give my own experience.

I live in the country where ice is an impossibility. Last summer I had no place to keep my milk and butter except on the north side of the room where the cook stove is kept. Every evening I skimmed the milk, twelve hours old, at the same time straining into the same jar some fresh strippings. The next morning I skimmed the milk of the previous evening and strained the fresh strippings into the jar already on hand; kept it cool as possible, and extremely hot days placed the jar into a tub of cold water from the well. Before dinner it was ready to churn.

By such management churning was an every day occurrence; and I will say, too, that when the cream was "ready to churn" the churning was done immediately, and the cream not allowed to turn to whey, or mold form on the top. Immediately on taking the butter from the churn, it was thoroughly washed with pure, cold water, salted and the milk worked out as much as possible.

The butter through the summer was never white, tallowy, strong or musty. When sending butter to market I always cover it with wet cloths and pack it carefully in jars. I rather prefer summer made butter, and stoutly maintain that good butter can be made in the country throughout the summer without the use of ice, if the above plan is followed.

To Stop the Growth of Horns.

Is there anything that will stop the growth of horns on cattle? If so, where can it be gotten and when should it be applied? This question is frequently asked and to it we make the following answer, says Rural World: At any drug store one can buy either caustic potash or caustic silver (luna caustic), which, when applied to the nubs of horns on young calves, will stop all growth of the horns. It is usually advised to wrap the stick caustic with paper to prevent its burning the fingers while handling, then rub the little knob where the horn is to appear with an exposed end of the stick. If the knobs are cleansed with soap and water to remove all animal grease the caustic will be more effective. A little grease rubbed around the base of the knob will prevent the caustic from burning where it ought not to. Another method of applying is to put the caustic in a phial with a large mouth and put in a little water, just enough to dissolve the caustic. Then fit a wooden stopper of soft wood with lower end long enough to reach the bottom of the phial. With this the liquid caustic can be applied a few drops at a time to the knobs, with no danger of burning the fingers or getting too much on the calf. It should be applied before the horns get started, say when the calf is a week old. Properly one application will kill the horns. Carelessly applied, one may succeed in killing one horn while the other will grow, and thus make a more unsightly head than if both had been allowed to grow.

Seeds and Seed Producers.

The old way was for the farmer to save his own seeds from his own garden and propagate the same kind of fruit or vegetable from year to year. Doubtless there was some advantage in that, for the grower, by having the same variety of plant every year, got to understand and instinctively know what it wanted, and so might be able to do more with it after he had grown it for a dozen years than he could possibly have done with it the first year. But the system also had great disadvantages, for it prevented progress. The same old inferior products were raised year after year. We all remember the old-fashioned pole beans that had to be "stringed" before being used, but the seed of which was carefully saved for each succeeding crop. But specialists have displaced amateur seed savers, and the result has been great improvement in all of our garden products. A good example of this is the "wax" bean, of which there are now many varieties. Who can doubt that the wax beans are a very great improvement over the pole bean? Yet we never would have had this improvement had it not been for the specialist.

The farmer can better afford to buy his seed from men that devote their time to producing the best kind of seed than he can to produce seed for his own crops. The production of seed in an acceptable manner and of first quality requires a vast amount of education along certain lines that it will not pay everyone to follow. The seed producer must watch his plants and see that they do not deteriorate and that only well-conditioned plants are allowed to contribute seed.

Clean and Dirty Milk.—In the case of the milk produced on the Canadian Experiment Station farm, it was found that the number of bacteria present varied from 8,000 to 18,000 per cubic centimeter; while in the milk bought from the ordinary retailers in the town the numbers present ranged from a minimum of 121,000 to a maximum of 1,200,000 per cubic centimeter. It will thus be seen how striking is the difference in the germ content of milk produced where the utmost precautions as to cleanliness are exercised, as compared with that produced under ordinary conditions, and after it has been subjected to various careless processes of handling.—Ex.

Suit the Dealers.—The farmer who makes his own butter—and there is a large proportion of this class—should do the best possible to suit his customers, and in this way secure and retain a good market for his product. It will be found of advantage to defer to the judgment and wishes of dealers. They are supposed to understand the demands of the trade and what is particularly wanted. And among these will be a regular supply of product, uniform in quality from week to week and of the best character. This may be esteemed the point of most importance and the one most difficult to secure.—Ex.

Milk for the creamery must be milk in its proper condition. The farmer that has permitted his milk to get into bad shape had better feed it to his hogs or poultry than attempt to haul it to the creamery where it will be likely to spoil a hundred other batches of milk.

FOUR WEEKS' VACATION.

How Prominent Business and Professional Men Take the Keeley Cure.

It will be very often noticed that some man who is well and favorably known in his community, except for his habit of drinking to excess, will leave home for a month's vacation. He will go away looking debilitated and careworn, and sometimes considerably debauched. His intimate friends will know that he has been drinking heavily, but perhaps the public will hear nothing of it.

His mail goes to Minneapolis, and letters go from Minneapolis to his home or place of business. Inquirers will be told that he is "on a vacation." At the conclusion of four weeks he returns home, clear-eyed, healthy, with a light, springy step, and the look of weariness and anxiety will have disappeared from his face. To those who ask him where he has been, he tells, joyfully, that he has been to the Keeley Institute, Minneapolis; that he is freed from any appetite for liquor, and that he feels as well as he did before he ever took a drink. If he has had stomach trouble or rheumatism, or such ailments as have been superinduced by the use of alcohol, these will have disappeared.

During the month he has recovered entirely from the ill-effects of alcoholism. He is enthusiastic and pleased with his cure, and declares that he never spent four weeks more pleasantly. He feels like a new man. He has, by paying a little more than $100.00, made himself a new man. His wife and family rejoice with him as one redeemed.

He tells his friends how he has been cured by the Keeley Remedies, and generally assists some other unfortunate to take the cure. He also cautions his friends against the fraudulent cures which pretend to do the work done by the Keeley Cure. He is sure of the results of the Keely Cure.

He advises interested persons to write to the Keely Institute, corner Tenth street south and Park avenue, Minneapolis, Minn., for literature and information about the Keeley Cure.

TROUBLE IN SERVIA.

MOST AUTOCRATIC GOVERNMENT ON EARTH.

Even Throws a Russian Nobleman Into Prison — Dr. Sodomsky Forced to Occupy a Cell with the Bones of a Tortured Prisoner.

Grave charges are made in Vienna against the Servian government in reference both to the treatment of the political offenders now under arrest and to the outrageous sentences which are being passed by the court-martial appointed to deal with the culprits.

The most serious charges are made in connection with the treatment of Dr. Sodomsky, scientific adviser to the commission of control over the Servian state monopolies. Dr. Sodomsky is a Russian by birth, education and nationality, and went to Belgrade eight years ago at the express invitation of the Servian government to fill this important post. Dr. Sodomsky is a man of science pure and simple, and has neither the time nor the inclination to take any interest in politics. Still, he was arrested on suspicion of being an accomplice in the contempt to assassinate ex-King Milan, dismissed from his official position, imprisoned for three weeks and then expelled from Servia.

Dr. Sodomsky says: "I was sitting one evening with my wife in front of my house, when six gendarmes entered the garden, seized me and placed me in chains. I was conveyed to prison, and in spite of my repeated requests to be told the reason of my arrest, not a word of explanation was given me. I was thrust into a subterranean cell, damp and dark, and so small that I could not stand upright in it, and had barely room left to lie at full length on the floor. The cell had not been cleaned out probably for years, and its unsanitary condition was too disgusting to describe. The discovery of the bones of a human being on the floor added to the horror of my situation. When I shouted for help a warder came and thrashed me with a huge whip, telling me to die quickly and make no fuss about it. After three days in this cell I underwent a mock examination, and was thrust back into prison. Here I languished for three weeks almost starved to death and brutally maltreated by the warders. My innocence was then established, but instead of being released and compensated I was taken to the frontier and expelled from Servian territory. I can prove that my life in Belgrade was blameless, and it is my intention to appeal to the Russian government to obtain damages for me from the Servian authorities."

A WOMAN'S PARADISE.

Smolensk, Russia, an Adamless Eden Part of the Year.

The last place where one would expect to find a town wholly administered and during most of the time exclusively inhabited by women is in autocratic Russia. In Smolensk, southern Russia, woman reigns supreme, and, under the presidency of a woman, mayor and city council has things all her own way. The town of Smolensk and the neighboring province, which is about fifteen miles in area, are deserted every spring by all the able-bodied men, who proceed to neighboring towns in search of work, remaining away about nine months of the year. In their absence the women cultivate the fields and manage local affairs under the presidency of a woman mayor of their own choice. It did not take the women long to get the upper hand and they have brought into Russia some startling innovations. The property of all the inhabitants of Smolensk is held in common and all their work is done in common—cultivating, building, housekeeping, but each family may occupy a house by itself. There is no currency but labor, and each full-grown inhabitant has to give the city thirty-six hours' labor a week. When a woman is married, the colony makes no other claims upon her, but from an unmarried woman extra work is required, so that she can establish a credit and possess a home of her own.

Count Zeppelin's Airship.

Much interest is felt in the approaching trials of Count Zeppelin's wonderful aerial ship, with which the inventor claims to have solved the problem of flying. Count Zeppelin is an enthusiast, and has spent £10,000 in building a "dock" for his ship near the Bodensee, in Upper Austria, while the ship itself has cost him a further sum of £40,000. The description of the vessel is suggestive of Jules Verne. It is long, thin and cylindrical in shape, and is sharply pointed at one end. It is similar in form to a lead pencil with a very sharp point. It will be driven by two sets of screws, vertical and horizontal, and the motive power will be electricity. Count Zeppelin declares that the new airship will be able to travel at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour. He anticipates its adoption for purposes of both war and commerce throughout the civilized world.

Bridge.

London society during the last season took up a new game, which is called bridge. It has certainly been a great rage, and was a source of amusement to a great many during the long winter evenings, between 5 and 7. It is a species of whist, and is played by four people, but one hand is laid on the table for every one to see, so it can quite easily be played by three, and it is pronounced better than dummy whist. The game is called bridge because, owing to certain rules and complications which occur in the game, it is possible to "bridge" or pass over when it is one's turn to play. It is a great gambling game, and a great deal may be won or lost in one night, as the bets can be doubled at will, and the points are generally high.

What Ruined Him.

Lady—"You say you were ruined by marrying a wealthy woman?" Tramp—"Yes'm; de time and effort I wasted trying to get her money would have made me a wealthy and influential citizen, mum."—Judge.

If the menses are very painful, or too frequent and excessive, get the right advice at once and stop taking chances. It will cost you nothing for advice if you write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for it, and if you let the trouble run along it will surely cost you a great deal of pain and may mean an operation.

WOMEN AVOID OPERATIONS

MISS SARAH J. GRAHAM, Sheridanville, Pa., writes: "DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I had suffered for several years with female troubles and doctored until I was discouraged. I felt wretched and tired of living. I had disease of kidneys, bladder trouble, dropsy and bloating, had womb trouble and a large tumor had formed; in fact all my organs were out of fix.

"Seeing a woman's letter praising your remedies, I wrote to her and she begged of me to try it, telling me all that it had done for her. I bought six bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and now cannot express my gratitude to you. The tumor began to come away in pieces and I got better all the time. I believe now that I am entirely cured.

"My doctors could not believe it at first, as they all had told me that my case was a hopeless one, and no human power could do me any good. They were astounded. If I can say anything that can help other women, I shall be glad to."

It is not safe to wait until the last moment. Head off trouble by prompt attention to it. Don't be satisfied without Mrs Pinkham's advice.

KRUGER HOLDS BACK

WILL RESTRAIN ANY FORWARD MOVEMENT BY BOERS.

Unless Fired Upon or War Is Actually Declared—Parliament Will Meet Oct. 17 — Reserves Will Be Ordered Out to Bring Regiments Up to War Strength—Report That the Free State Has Confiscated 800 Tons of Coal Belonging to the Cape Government Which Was Traversing the Free State.

London, Oct. 8.—There was almost a complete dearth of news from South Africa yesterday. The few dispatches received, recording military movements at various points, all tend to confirm the belief that President Kruger will restrain any forward movement by the Boers unless they are fired upon or war is actually declared.

It is now practically declared that parliament will meet Oct. 17. Reserves will be ordered out to bring up to war strength the regiments that are to hold themselves in readiness for services in South Africa, or about one-sixth of the reserves. The Daily News asserts that a new army corps will be mobilized to-day. A dispatch from Mafeking announces that Commandant Cronje, of the Boer forces, has been promoted to the rank of commander and is massing 2,000 Boers near Ramthalaba, north of Mafeking.

Henry Escombe, formerly premier of Natal, is going to Pretoria in the interests of peace.

H. M. S. Philomel suddenly left Durban yesterday for Delagoa bay.

The Daily Chronicle's Rome correspondent says that the British government has applied to Signor Marconi with a view of employing his system of wireless telegraphy in the Transvaal campaign.

-o-

London, Oct. 8.—The Cape Town correspondent of the Daily Mail says: "A sensation has been caused here by the report that the Free State government has confiscated 800 tons of coal belonging to the Cape government which was traversing the Free State. Such a seizure would naturally be regarded as an act of war. J. W. Sauer, the commissioner of public works, when questioned in the assembly regarding the matter, professed ignorance, but I learn the report was telegraphed to the Cape ministry early in the day. I learn that the Transvaal's threat to put British subjects over the border would necessitate the withdrawal of Conyngham Green. Some excitement is occasioned by the report that a large number of British troops are to be landed here instead of Durban. This is taken to signify that the Transvaal will be invaded from the west and not from Natal."

Natives in a Panic.

Johannesburg, Oct. 8.—Thousands of natives have invaded the town and the authorities have decided to march them under escort out of the country. Last night two natives entered a clothing store kept by a Jew and stabbed the proprietor in the neck, severing his windpipe. Two Jewish storekeepers in the East rand have been murdered by natives and the kaffirs are raiding all the places where they think liquor is stored. The war commission, acting under the government's instructions, will issue advice to storekeepers to remove the barricades they have erected on the ground that the government's guarantee of protection ought to be sufficient.

DEWEY GREETED BY VETERANS

The Admiral Visits the United States Soldiers' Home.

Washington, Oct. 8.—Admiral Dewey received an ovation yesterday at the United States soldiers' home about twenty miles beyond the city limits. He drove out there during the afternoon and Gen. Ruggles, the governor of the home, introduced him to the veterans. The admiral told the veterans in a brief speech that he had never learned to appreciate the true valor and the noble qualities of the American soldiers until he had seen them fight in the Philippines. He had nothing but the highest esteem, he said, for the American soldiers, and would always treasure their friendship. A delegation of citizens from Atlanta, Ga., arrived here and will formally invite Admiral Dewey and Lieut. Brumby to a reception which the city seeks to give them at any date the two men will name.

The party is headed by the mayor, J. G. Woodward. Lieut. Brumby was born within a few miles of Atlanta and lived in the Georgian capital many years. A handsome sword will be presented by the Georgians to the flag lieutenant and they are anxious that the admiral shall come with him. While the date is left to meet the convenience of the two, it is likely to be some time this month. Admiral Dewey will not leave Washington until Monday, as originally planned. Before his departure he will return to Mrs. McLean the possession of his residence, which he has been occupying by her courtesy. He had engaged a suite of rooms in an apartment house where he formerly resided. It is a few blocks beyond the Metropolitan club, and he will go there on his return from New England in about ten days.

Kansas City, Oct. 8.—The oil house, tanning room and one beef cooler at the Schwartzschild & Sulzberger packing plant at Armourdale, Kan., were destroyed by fire which started in the oil house. The loss is estimated at $100,000; fully insured. The main buildings were not damaged and the plant has not stopped work.

Express Train Wrecked.

Terre Haute, Ind., Oct. 8.—The St. Louis express, the fast Pennsylvania train between New York and St. Louis was wrecked just west of this city. There was no one injured but all were badly shaken up.

Murder and Suicide.

Atchison, Kan., Oct. 8.—Mrs. Fanny Canter was shot and killed by William Selnk, a tailor, who then shot himself. Mrs. Canter's refusal to marry him is supposed to have prompted Selnk to commit the crime.

ENGLAND IS READY.

Officials as Busy as Though Actual Hostilities Had Begun.

London, Oct. 10.—Whatever may be the result of Great Britain's controversy with the South African republic, every department of the government is as busy as though actual hostilities had begun. The electric flash that announced the mobilization of the army reserves and the summoning of parliament set every wheel of the government machinery in motion. An hour after the Gazette appeared executive orders were being dispatched from the war office to every section of the kingdom and the 10,000 bulletins which appeared posted throughout the country are said to have been identical with the proclamation prepared for use when the Fashoda incident required such a step.

At the same time Lord Salisbury and Mr. Balfour were issuing the necessary orders for the reassembling of parliament and the admiralty was concentrating its transports, twenty-four of which are now secured at Liverpool alone. So complete were the preparations that 25,000 reserves have already individually received coupon tickets which contain instructions where each man shall report for railway transportation to the place designated and a money order for 3 shillings for provisions en route.

At Woolwich it was asserted that 17 per cent of the reserves could be fully equipped within six days. In the meantime the members of the two houses of parliament are arranging to return to London. A force of men is busily engaged in completing the improvements at Westminster.

The most important news from South Africa comes from Mafeking, where twice on Saturday the British camp was aroused, the men stood to their arms, guns were limbered and patrols were dispatched in the direction of the border. No hostilities have occurred as yet, but the enemy has moved practically from the border, eight miles from Mafeking, in force, estimated at least at 6,000, comprising five commands. The garrisoning and fortifying of the town are practically completed. The streets are barricaded and a perfect system of mines has been laid.

-o-

London, Oct. 10. — The Cape Town correspondent of the Daily Mail declares that the story that a Boer ultimatum demanding the withdrawal of the British troops from the frontiers had been presented is without foundation, but he says the republics have within the past week demanded a declaration of the British intentions in threatening terms. Hostilities in the outlaying districts, the correspondent says, are expected this week. Mr. Hofmeyr, the Afrikander leader in Cape Colony said on Friday, according to the correspondent of the Daily Mail, that but for him the Boers would have begun fighting long ago.

Immense Corn Crop.

Chicago, Oct. 10—"This year's corn crop will be one of the largest in our history," said Secretary of Agriculture James Wilson, who is in Chicago with the presidential party. "The total yield it is estimated will be between 2,300,000,000 and 2,500,000,000 of bushels. There will be plenty for manufacturing and feeding, and we will have all the corn to sell that anybody wants to buy. The what extent the crop will be shipped abroad will depend largely upon the price it will bring. The high prices offered for ments will incline the farmers to use their crop for feeding purposes."

Damaged by the Sea.

Highland Light, Mass., Oct. 10.—The dredge Empire State, which went ashore at Wellfleet in the storm on Friday night, after she had broken away from the tug Hallenbeck, off the cape, was badly damaged by the rough sea, and last night all but one of the five scows with her were destroyed. An easterly storm is approaching, and the weather conditions are such that it seems doubtful whether the dredge and one scow can be saved. Dredge and scows were valued at $50,000.

CHASED BY GRANT

INSURGENTS DRIVEN FROM WEST BANK OF THE IMUS.

Three Americans Were Wounded in the Engagement and It Is Estimated That Ten Filipinos Were Killed—Entire West Bank of the Imus River Now Held by the Americans—Rileys Battery Does Effective Work—Over Three Hundred Mules Were Killed on the Siam During a Typhoon.

Manila, Oct. 8. — Gen. Fred Grant, with three companies of the Fourth infantry, two companies of the Fourteenth infantry and a band of scouts attached to the former regiment, advanced from Imus yesterday morning, driving the insurgents from the entire west bank of the Imus river. Three Americans were wounded. It is estimated that ten of the Filipinos were killed.

Companies C and H, with scouts, crossed the river at Big Bend and advanced westward in the direction of the Pincayan road, the insurgents firing volleys, but retreating. Twenty Filipinos were discovered intrenched at the Pincayan church, midway between Bacoor and Cavite Viejo. These were routed, six being killed. Riley's battery of the Fifth artillery made an effective corlier about a mile south of Bacoor, and swept the west bank of the river at close range. That bank is now held by the Americans.

300 MULES ARE KILLED.

Frightful Slaughter of Animals on the Siam.

Manila, Oct. 8.—The Siam, which left Honolulu thirty-one days ago, encountered two typhoons early this week. One lasted forty hours. Most of the forage, which was on deck, was swept overboard, all the boats were smashed and the steamer rolled tremendously in the trough of the sea, although the officers made every effort to bring her about. The mules were hurled from side to side and frightfully mangled and disemboweled. Their legs and necks were broken, and the wretched animals fell in such a confused mass that the attendants were unable to relieve them. In the meantime the deck load was washed off, the ship lightened and the rolling increased. When the storm abated the injured animals were killed and their carcasses thrown overboard. When the Siam arrived here her propeller was high out of water and the wrecks of her boats were hanging from the davits.

Otis' Confirmation.

Washington, Oct. 8. — A cable message from Gen. Otis to the war department brings word of the loss of several hundred mules on the transport Siam. He says:

"Steamer Siam, which left San Francisco Aug. 19 with forty-five horses, 328 mules, encountered typhoon 1st inst., near northern Luzon, in which all but sixteen mules were lost. The animals were killed by the pitching of the vessel and lack of air from the necessary closing of the hatches. No casualties among the passengers."

It is stated at the quartermaster's department that the mules which were lost on the Siam were trained pack mules, which were considered the most valuable sent to the Philippines.

GOOD NEWS FOR WATSON.

Officially Informed of the Coming Reinforcements.

Washington, Oct. 8—Notification was sent by cable yesterday to both Gen. Otis and Admiral Watson at Manila of the intention of the navy department to reinforce the navy department in the Philippines to a considerable extent, and stating that the Brooklyn and several other vessels would be dispatched at the earliest possible moment to the islands. So far the only orders issued are to the Brooklyn, the Nashville, the New Orleans and the Badger, but in the course of a few weeks others will be added to the list in the shape of some of the smaller gunboats. The navy department is not yet aware of the use to which Admiral Watson and Gen. Otis will put this force, but undoubtedly it is the intention to make a supreme effort to crush the insurrection at an early day. Admiral Dewey regarded it as essential that the insurgents should be cut off from the bountiful supplies they have been receiving through the ports which have not yet been closed, and he expressed the greatest satisfaction at the information contained in the latest Manila advices to the effect that the insurgents were in straits to procure food, pointing out that this presaged an early collapse of their resistance if the avenues were kept closed against further supplies.

STRIKE PRACTICALLY SETTLED.

Work at the West Superior Docks Has Been Resumed.

West Superior, Wis., Oct. 8. — Sixty new men are at work here at the docks of the Eastern Minnesota and the strike against the Northern Steamship company is practically settled. The men arrived yesterday from Minneapolis. They are paid 25 cents an hour. No attempt was made to interfere with them. The steamer Northern Light was unloaded and the steamer North Star discharged a cargo of packet freight and discharged a cargo of grain without delay. It is understood that the strike resulted from an understanding between the men and Contractor John Promberger. It is claimed sufficient money has been retained from his contracts to meet all time checks outstanding.

KINDNESS UNSTINTED.

Portland's Welcome to the Thirteenth Regiment Most Hospitable in Character.

Portland, Or., Oct. 10—Too much can not be said about the people of Portland for the way in which they have entertained the Minnesota regiment. It was a wonderful demonstration of hospitality and the soldiers are simply overcome by the attentions shown them. As soon as the outskirts of the city were reached the whistles were heard shrieking, bells ringing and men, women and children were seen waving bands, flags and handkerchiefs. Business was suspended in the mills, engineers stopped their locomotives and tooted, the Minnesota band played and the soldiers cheered. As the train pulled across the bridge the steamboats added to the general din, the dispatch boat McCullough fired the national salute and the soldiers became so excited they could hardly wait for the trains to pull into the station. There was a tremendous crowd awaiting the soldiers there, but there were so many bands playing and whistles blowing that one could not hear the shouts of welcome. The Oregon regiment was lined up alongside the track and shook their hats in the air as they saw the familiar faces of their old comrades. A parade was formed and the regiment was escorted to the armory where a banquet was served.

The streets of Portland were filled with people and business was practically suspended for the day. The buildings were decorated with flags and Minnesota banners. The soldiers were handed flowers and fruit, the women went among them to see if anything special was needed. The comment along the line of march was very favorable. The people cheered, remarked on the size of the Minnesota men, their style of marching.

Oshkosh, Wis., Oct. 10.—A passenger train from the Ashland division of the Northwestern at Apple Junction ran into the rear end of a freight train at Snell's, ten miles north of here, causing a bad wreck. The caboose and a freight car were demolished and the passenger engine and smoker were ditched. George Viehe, passenger fireman, had his collarbone broken, and H. L. Yankton, S. D., Oct. 10—Charles P. Hirsch and F. H. Hirsch, hardware and farm implement dealers of Tripp, S. D., were before United States Commissioner White, charged with violating the revenue laws in failing to affix stamps to negotiable notes. It was the result of erroneous construction of the law, and not an effort to escape paying the war revenue tax. They were fined $50 and costs.

THE CUP IN DANGER

SHAMROCK GIVES THE AMERICAN YACHTSMEN A SURPRISE.

The More Saturday's Performance Is Considered and Discussed the Less Hopeful the Situation Appears to Americans—There Is No Lack of Confidence in the Columbia, However—After Thursday the Yachts Will Sail Every Day Until the Contest Is Decided—Owing to Lack of Wind Saturday's Race Ends in a Fluke.

New York, Oct. 10.—Shamrock stock has taken another rise. There is a feeling about town that the historic cup is in greater danger than ever before. The more Saturday's performance is considered and discussed the less hopeful the situation looks to the American yachtsmen. The Shamrock is a wonder in light weather. That is settled beyond a doubt by the three days of drifting. She has surprised her own people and has given the other people a great shock. She handles splendidly and has men on board who know how to do the handling.

The feeling of the American yachtsmen that the challenger was entering the races unprepared and untried has disappeared. They have seen her fit for the struggle and they know that she is ready to do her best.

By a mutual agreement between the representatives of the New York Yacht club and the Royal Ulster Yacht club the Columbia and Shamrock will sail every day after next Thursday until the question of international yachting supremacy is established. The request for such an arrangement came from Sir Thomas Lipton, owner of the challenger. There was no friction in reaching the agreement as to the change in dates. Sir Thomas Lipton at first asked that the race be started daily after Tuesday. The club decided that this would hardly be prudent. In the first place it would be entirely unfair to the public. Thousands of persons have made arrangements to attend the races on a certain day. Hundreds of excursions have been arranged for, and to make a change in the racing dates on so short a notice would not be right to the public. The club is deeply grateful for the manner in which the public has behaved at the races. There is no interference with the boats whatever. The club is grateful to the public for this and it would not be right to make such a sudden change in racing dates.

OLD BOREAS' TREACHERY.

For the Third Time the Columbia-Shamrock Race Turns Out a "Fluke."

New York, Oct. 10. — Old Boreas again played battledore and shuttlecock with the great single stickers, and the third attempt to sail the first race of the Columbia-Shamrock series for the international trophy ended in failure. The race was declared off fifteen minutes before the time limit expired, with the yachts still five miles from the finish. But the vast throngs who went down to the sea to witness the battle royal were in a measure compensated by seeing a magnificent light weather duel. In the end the disappointment to the patriots was sharpened, perhaps, by the fact that when the race was abandoned the Columbia was in the lead and improving her position, and had the race been finished the American champion might have had one race to her credit.

After three trials the experts are about as much mystified as they were at the beginning concerning the merits of the two boats. Nothing but a spanking wholesale breeze will furnish a true test. Saturday, as on the two previous occasions, the course was laid fifteen miles dead before the wind and return. So evenly matched were the beautiful clean-limbed racers that they rounded the outer mark like thoroughbreds, almost neck and neck, and finished with the Columbia's white shark-like nose half a length in front and in the weather position, but so close was her green rival that the black shadow of the shamrock's looming sails was silhouetted against the Yankee's snowy canvas.

As a result of yesterday's struggle and those of Tuesday and Thursday, the talent are a good deal confounded. Some of them differ as to the merits of the two boats, but they seem unanimous upon two things—that the Shamrock is the ablest boat that ever crossed the Western ocean to lift the mug, and what is still more important, that she is more ably handled than the defender. The superior seamanship of Capt. Hogarth and his crew was demonstrated at several critical points in the race.

WALTER WELLMAN RETURNS.

Arctic Explorer Has Given Up Hopes of Hearing of Andree Again.

New York, Oct. 10—Walter Wellman, the Arctic explorer, who recently returned from a journey of exploration on the Franz-Josef Land, arrived in this city yesterday on the steamship Umbria. He was accompanied froom England by his wife. Yesterday afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Wellman took a train for their home in Washington.

The severe injuries the explorer received from a fall in an ice crevasse still kept him on crutches and he had to be assisted from the ship by his wife and a friend.

Mr. Wellman has hopes that his injury will not be permanent.

Speaking of the Andree expedition, Mr. Wellman says that he has given up all hopes of ever hearing of the explorer again.

Naptha Launch Explodes.

Jacksonville, Fla., Oct. 10. — The naptha launch Idlewild, belonging to Alexander Uedemann and his brothers, exploded near the mouth of the St. John river, and, catching fire, was totally destroyed. Alexander Uedmann is missing and is supposed to have been drowned. Will White, who was on board, is badly burned about the face and head. Ed Uedmann is also burned, but not seriously. The survivors were brought to the city by the tug Three Friends.

FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

SOME GOOD STORIES FOR OUR JUNIOR READERS.

Mr. Green's Garden—A Lazy Man's Load, Willie Will Carry a Smart Man's Load Hereafter—Queer Turtle Fishing—The Princes of Edenbay.

The Princes of Edenbay.

There were two little princes of Edenbay—
Princes I Can't and I Can;
And to school they went on the very first day
That the very first school began.

And the Prince I Can't took a poor little whim
Into his royal head;
And whenever a task was given to him,
"I can't! I can't!" he said.

Now he was a prince who had his way,
And a poor little way 'twas, too!
For he nothing did from day to day
Save just what he wanted to do.

But his brother I Can, a younger lad,
Was made on a different plan,
For to every single lesson he had
He would say, "I can! I can!"

So wise and great grew the Prince I Can,
By doing as he was bid;
But the other became an ignorant man,
And naught that was good he did.

These princes' descendants you'll find today
Wherever is civilized man;
The "I Can't" folks who have had their way,
And the people who say "I can!"

Mr. Green's Garden.

Next to the small red cottage where Archie and Nellie King lived there was a large vacant lot with a high fence around it. The only yard the Kings had was a narrow strip back of the house, and as they had once lived in the country, this seemed very small to the children, and they used to peep through the cracks in the fence and wish they could get over there among the weeds to play. Archie was nine years old, but a hurt received when he was a baby had made him lame, and Nellie, who was two years younger, was almost as tall. Their father was dead, and Archie was very anxious to help his mother, who had to work hard to support them; but there did not seem to be anything for such a little boy to do except to be useful at home, and he tried to be that. On the other side of the vacant lot there was a shop that had been unoccupied for a long time. One morning, when the children passed on their way to school, the door was wide open, and a tall, rosy-faced man stood there superintending the carrying in of a quantity of lumber. He nodded pleasantly to them in a way that said quite plainly, "I like little people. I was young once myself." It was not long before they found out that his name was Green, and that he had rented the shop for some sort of carpentering work. One day, when they were at play in the back yard, the children discovered some men cutting down weeds in the vacant lot. "What do you suppose they are going to do?" asked Nellie. "Build a house, I guess," said Archie. The prospect of this was exciting, and with the aid of some barrels and boxes they contrived to get up high enough to see over the fence. And there was Mr. Green busily directing the men! He saw them and waved his hand. "I am going to have a garden in a short time," he said. This made Archie think of the garden they used to have in the country, where cabbages and potatoes and all kinds of vegetables grew. He had helped his father take care of it, and he wondered if Mr. Green would not want a boy to weed his. He spoke to Nellie about it, but she was sure it would be a flower garden, for people didn't have vegetable gardens in town. This might be. Mr. Green had not said what he expected to raise; but then, flowers would have to be weeded and watered. So without saying anything to anyone Archie slipped over to the shop next day. When he was fairly inside the door his heart almost failed him, and when Mr. Green looked up from his desk, where he was writing, and exclaimed, "Hello! Where did you come from?" he was so startled he came near running away. He didn't, however, but went bravely up to the desk. "I have come to see if you don't want a boy to weed your garden, sir. I know how, and could do it, and I am anxious to find a place, because there is no one else to help mother. Nellie would help, too, and we'd be very careful." Mr. Green looked down at him with an odd expression in his eyes, and said: "So you want to weed my garden, do you? Well, I may need a boy, by and by, when my crop begins to grow." The children went away for several weeks, and came home late one evening. Early next day they ran out to see how Mr. Green's garden was coming on, and behold! instead of potatoes and cabbages, or even flowers, there were rows of gaily painted swings. There were single swings, and double swings, and swings to hold four persons, and some had awnings over them to keep off the sun. The ground was covered with tanbark except around the edge, where there was a border of grass, and the board fence on the street had been replaced by an iron one with a gate, above which was this sign: "Automatic Swing Co." While the children were gazing at this surprising sight, Mr. Green came walking down between the rows of swings and asked them how they liked his garden. They liked it very much, indeed, but Archie couldn't help feeling disappointed until Mr. Green said: "I have to be in the shop most of the time, and I want some one to stay around here and let me know when customers come in. Do you think you and Nellie could do this? Of course I'd expect you to swing a good deal, for that will help to advertise." So it happened that all through the summer in pleasant weather passers-by saw two blue-eyed children in a swing near the gate, and if any one entered he was met by Archie with, "Do you want to look at swings? We have some very nice ones. I'll call Mr. Green." The Automatic Swing Co. did a good business that season, and every Saturday the children dropped a silver quarter into their bank, and even Archie came to the conclusion that for a town a swing garden was better than a vegetable garden.

MARY F. LEONARD.

A Lazy Man's Load.

Thump, thump, thud! How many times it had occurred in the last few minutes—that noise! Willie didn't cry, for hadn't grandma called him, only that morning, "My little man," and who ever heard of a man crying because he had let fall an armful of wood? Nevertheless, he did look so woe-begone and humpty-dumpty-like, sitting on the lowest stair in grandpa's well filled woodshed, with his late armful of wood scattered about him like a "spill" of gigantic jackstraws! Slowly he picked himself up, and carefully gathered the straggling sticks, making "'most a cord," it seemed to Willie. One, two, three stairs had been mounted, when again—thump, thump, thud! went his wood, flying in more directions than before. "Well, well, well!" 'Twas grandpa's jolly voice as he looked down from the floor above. "O, grandpa! I've had just the awfulest time! The wood won't stay where I put it!" and Willie's sober, upturned face was met by grandpa's smiling countenance coming down the stairs. "I'm afraid my Willie-boy has been taking 'a lazy man's load,' hey?" said grandpa, as he surveyed the crisscross sticks on the floor. "Why, grandpa, I'm not lazy, am I?" asked Willie, quickly. "I tried and tried to carry as much as you could—I did, really and truly!" "Ah, there's where you made your mistake, my boy. Couldn't you have gone a number of times easily with a smaller load, while you were tugging away with so much?" "Y-e-s!" answered Willie, thoughtfully. "Trying to carry too much of anything," said grandpa, slowly, as he sat down on the sawhorse, "is what I call 'a lazy man's load;' for a lazy man always tries to carry everything at once, for fear he may take a few useless steps, and by so doing causes himself double work, besides unnecessary worry and trouble. Had you taken a smaller load, you would have had no trouble in carrying it, and by this time your wood box would have been full!" "Grandpa," and Willie put his sturdy little arms resolutely about his grandfather's neck, "I'm tired carrying a lazy man's load, and shall always carry a smart man's load hereafter." Then as he ran away whistling with what wood he could comfortably carry, grandpa nodded, "And he'll remember it, too!"

ADELBERT F. CALDWELL.

Smile on Me.

A sweet story is told by Miss Anna Gordon of a little three-year-old girl, the pet of the household, who came down a few minutes late to breakfast. She had one foot on the round of her chair, but was not allowed to climb up until her papa had asked the blessing. Then, as she looked all around her and saw every face grave and serious, she thought the family were offended, and her child's heart was broken. "Oh, mamma!" she cried, with quivering lips, "smile on me." The child's impulse was natural. A smile means cheer, love, sunshine, and the cry of the human heart always is, "Smile on me!" A young girl on her way to school met a poor old man on the street corner with flowers to sell. "I had no pennies to buy flowers with," the girl said simply, "but I gave him a smile." The smile warmed the old man's heart for the next hour and softened his hard life with a glint of happiness. It is a pity that any one in the whole world should go hungry for a smile when a smile costs nothing. With each one of us, we know how loneliness and heartache may be eased and how the aspect of a whole day may be changed by a kindly glance, a friendly look. Let us see to it that we do not withhold this comfort from one another. In heaven God shall wipe away tears from all eyes. Let us anticipate heaven, and make earth as much like it as possible by remembering the little child's cry, "Smile on me."—Frances Bennett Callaway.

Queer Turtle Fishing.

A curious mode of catching turtles is practiced in the West Indies. It consists in attaching a ring and a line to the tail of a species of sucker fish, which is then thrown overboard, and immediately makes for the first turtle he can spy, to which he attaches himself very firmly by means of a sucking apparatus arranged on the top of his head. The fisherman then hauls both turtle and sucking fish in.

Savage Crabs.

The most savage specimen of the crab species is found in Japan, seeming to dream of nothing but fighting, to delight in nothing half so much. The minute he spies another of his kind he scrapes his claws together in rage, challenging him to the combat. Not a moment is wasted in preliminaries, but at it they go, hammer and tongs. It sounds like two rocks grinding against one another as their claws rattle against the hard shells. The sand flies as the warriors push each other hither and thither until at last one of them stretches himself out in the sun, tired to death. But he does not beg for mercy or attempt to run away, only feebly rubbing his claws together in defiance of the foe. That foe comes closer and, with his claws trembling with joy at his victory, the conqueror catches hold of one claw of the vanquished crab, twists it until it comes off and bears away the palpitating limb as a trophy of his prowess. Such is a battle between warrior crabs.

Modern Manna.

In Arabia the Arabs sometimes find in the sandy deserts a kind of fungus which apparently resembles the manna of the Bible, and which serves as food for both men and camels when no better is to be had. It appears upon the sand after every rain, sometimes in little heaps. It is of a grayish color, and the separate masses are about as big as peas. It has a sweetish taste, and is nutritious.

Do not anticipate trouble or worry about what may never happen. Keep in the sunlight.—Franklin.

TRUTH ABOUT PATAGONIA.

Professor Hatcher, Looking for Fossils, Finds Lots of Other Things.

Prof. Hatcher, who has been hunting fossils down at the earth's tip end, is back again in his home in Princeton, N. J., much pleased with the results of this, his third expedition to Patagonia. He has dug out seven tons of the bones of animals, birds and fishes that frisked about on land, in the air or in the sea, and ate each other eagerly 6,000,000 years before God made Eve out of Adam's rib.

Living, as they did, before the time of Adam, these birds and beasts and fishes were nameless. Nameless, but blameless, for it is not the fault of these ancient creatures that they knew not the first man; it is their misfortune. The scientist has tried to make up for what Adam did not do, but he has not done well. Adam would have done better by them than has the man of lore, who invariably labeled them with longest Greek and Latin names it is possible to induce a printer to set up in type. They were born too soon, and that is the whole story—millions of years too soon. One hardly realizes how overearly they appeared on earth because a million years conveys an indefinite idea to the mind. It is too far beyond any possible personal experience. Mark off a mile on a straight road and then at one end of this mile mark off five-eighths of an inch—that will represent one year.

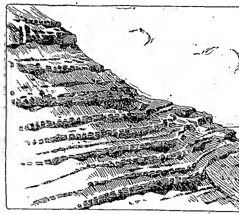
Prof. Hatcher says that the Patagonian rock formations show an antiquity he hardly dares to estimate. The lowest stratum he dug out fossils from extends far out beneath the sea. He worked on it at low tide, and the highest is some 6,000 feet above sea level. Washings from the Cordilleras, the southern end of the Andes, formed these rocks. In all strata they are of the same substance—the stuff the glaciers, rains and rivers brought down to the sea. This deposit from the mountains began in the early days when all there was of Patagonia was a string of mountains sticking up their heads above the water and extending far toward the south pole, and it has continued ever since, as the land has risen and sunk, the successive ages making enormous steppes. Three of these steppes are above water now and show distinctly in sections in the canyons the rivers have cut down through them.

The fourth steppe was a plain reaching as far as the Falklands, which were a part of the mainland once. Now this plain has sagged until at one point it is 160 fathoms below the ocean's surface. Some three miles of it are accessible, however, at low tide along the border beneath the cliff that forms the greater part of the Atlantic coast of Patagonia.

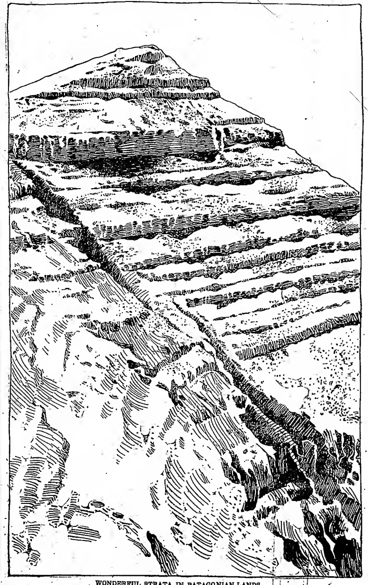
The tide runs out far and comes in fast, piling breaker upon breaker with terrific violence. Prof. Hatcher had to run for it often, and had several escapes that a man with any nerves at all would have called thrilling. In the first place the bottom that the tide leaves bare is well nigh covered with broken fragments from the cliff above. These are of all sizes, from a few pounds to several tons in weight, but, heavy as they are, the incoming tide rolls them over in its tumultuous advance. The strongest boat would go to pieces there in a few minutes. On such a bottom travel is difficult, and one must have a good start to get to the cliff ahead of the tide. As there are two high tides a day there is not much time to work between them, especially if one goes out near the low water limit, as Prof. Hatcher did. The professor says that sprinting over a couple of miles of bowlders with a fifty foot wall of boiling surf behind one is fully as exhilarating as hurdle racing. Once when he had climbed to a place of safety he looked down at the place where he had been working a few moments before and saw the waters frolicking with a whale. They threw him up as vigorously as one of his ancestors might have Jonah. When the tide receded the professor went down and paced off the cetaceous mammal, which was over thirty feet long.

On shore Prof. Hatcher had a comparatively easy time. On a former journey he had been in bed with inflammatory rheumatism for fifty-seven days, flat on his back, helpless, and miles from anywhere. He recovered, thanks to his constitution and the care of a young companion, but he sleeps off the ground now when prospecting and is more careful about exposing himself.

"I am extremely well pleased with our good fortune," he said, at his Princeton home the other day. "We got complete series of some kinds of animals showing the processes and steps of their development in past ages up to this time; we discovered new lakes, rivers, canyons and mountains, and settled that some lakes have outlets flowing into the Pacific instead of into the Atlantic, as all the maps of Patagonia indicate today. Although we did not settle all the disputed points we had in mind when we set out we return with as good a sum total of information as we could hope for. We have tons of specimens and hundreds of photographs. The photographs I shall have ready for exhibition soon, but the fossils must wait. We have not yet dug out of their matrices all the specimens of our former expeditions. Dr. Scott is busy with them now. We shall have all we can do without chisels and catalogues for the next three years.



ANOTHER STRATA FORMATION.



WONDERFUL STRATA IN PATAGONIAN LANDS.

What Others Thought.

Lewis Carroll, author of "Alice in Wonderland," told with keen relish of a rebuff given him by a little girl who knew him only as a learned mathematician.

"Have you ever read 'Through a Looking-Glass?'" he asked her, expecting an outburst of delight. "Oh, dear, yes!" she replied. "It is even more stupid than 'Alice in Wonderland!' Don't you think so?" Wordsworth could not conceal his chagrin when he heard that his neighbors, the farmers, described him as "a daft, idle body, who went moaning about the hills and had not wit enough to raise a field of oats." The following anecdote of Henry Clay was told by one of his personal friends: While making the journey to Washington on the National road, just after his nomination as candidate for the presidency, he was traveling one stormy night, wrapped up in a huge cloak, on the back seat of the stage coach, when two passengers entered. They were Kentuckians, like himself. He fell asleep, and when he awoke found them discussing his chances in the coming campaign. "What did Harry Clay go into politics for?" said one. "He had a good bit of land; he had a keen eye for stock. If he had stuck to stock-raising he'd have been worth his fifty thousand. But now he doesn't own a dollar."

"And," the great Kentuckian used to add, "the worst of it was, every word of it was true!"

It was characteristic of the man that at the next stopping-place he hurried away and took another coach, lest his critics should recognize him and be mortified at their unintentional rudeness.

Irish Agricultural Affairs.

The blue book on Irish agricultural affairs, just issued, tells a depressing story. The population touches the lowest figure yet officially recorded, 4,530,000, or nearly half that at which it stood just before the great famine. The area actually under crop in 1898, including meadow and clover, was 40,146 acres less than in 1897. Grass and pasture showed an increase of about 8,000 acres, and 36,253 acres had returned to bog, waste and water. In some parts of the country wild birds that had been driven away by cultivation and drainage have again made their appearance. The decrease of land under tillage was 38,474 acres. Most notable is the decline in the cultivation of flax, which was 24.3 per cent under that in 1897. In 1889 the area under this crop was 113,652 acres; in 1897 it had fallen to 45,537 acres, and last year to 34,469. These figures indicate the approaching disappearance of the native sources of the supply of raw material for one of Ireland's most important industries. Cereals and green crops also show a shrinkage, while the extent of land in use for stock feeding and wild pasture is greater than it was ten years ago. Agricultural wages are very low, and vary from 50 cents a day without food for men, and 36 cents for women and boys in summer, to 36 cents and less for men and 25 cents and less for women and boys in winter.

New Rule in Dancing.

New York World: Any fond youth who cherishes ideas of pressing the lily hand of his sweetheart in the mazes of the dance during the coming winter may at once relinquish that ambition. It is hopelessly out of date. Henceforth he will waltz and "two-step" with his left arm pinned to his side, while the fair one employs her right hand to hold up the train of her gown. The train is de rigueur—no mere affection of a train, but a sweeping flow of silk or satin, and surreptitious squeezes under its sheltering folds are strictly forbidden. This was the edict of the American Society of Professors of Dancing recently in convention assembled in Lyric hall. The suggestion that this arrangement would encumber the dances with all the disabilities of a rudderless ship was powerless to revoke it. Truly the new gown will entail a train of woes.

"Talked Down To."

To one who wishes to help the unfortunate, a knowledge of human nature is as necessary as the good will. Well meaning but tactless persons often underrate the intelligence of those whom they seek to help, and allow their intercourse to be marred by an atmosphere of patronage and condescension. An inmate of a New York tenement house recently said to a woman whose life has been devoted to good deeds: "I never had a chance to learn much, but I don't like to be treated as if I hadn't any understanding. I know good language from poor, and I'd rather hear words that sound educated, even if I don't exactly know what they mean, than to be talked down to as if I were a baby."

A Million Dollars for Two Islands.

An American syndicate is reported to have recently paid a million dollars for two small islands, La Cruza and La Ramon, off the shores of Cuba. They are said to be rich in iron, and—here comes in the syndicate's special rainbow—they are declared to be historically and unquestionably the islands to which the buccaneers who sacked Panama carried the captive women and all the treasures looted from that rich town. The syndicate finds basis for the hope that this pirate hoard may still remain, and may be discovered.

An Offer to Mr. Balfour.

Fate.

"O, George!" wailed the maiden, as she met him in the darkened hallway, "we can't be married to-morrow! It will have to be postponed!"

"What is the matter, darling?" said George, his knees trembling under him. "Is any relative dead? Has your Uncle Hiram failed in business?"

"W-worse than that!" she sobbed. "There's a b-b-boil coming on the end of my nose!"

Pleaded Poverty.

Philadelphia Bulletin: "Mr. Tight would not give anything toward paying the church debt. He said he couldn't afford it."

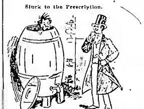
"Oh, well, I suppose a poor excuse is better than none."

Retort Courteous.

From the Chicago News: "Why don't you keep your hogs out of my corn?" asked Farmer Harix angrily.

"Why don't you keep your corn out of my hogs?" queried Farmer Oathead calmly.

Stuck to the Prescription.



Doctor—Good gracious, man, what are you doing in that water butt? Are you trying to kill yourself?

Artist Forgot That.

"This is a snap shot of an express train going at the rate of sixty-five miles an hour."

"It's remarkably lifelike. But why does the smoke rise straight up from the engine, instead of extending back over the train in a long line?"

"Well—er—the picture was taken so quick it hadn't time to do that, you know."

A Hero.

From the Indianapolis Journal: "Wasn't it brave of Chollie to rescue that child from drowning in the creek?"

"Brave? The water wasn't more than four feet deep anywhere, and Chollie knew it."

"Yes, but that was deep enough to utterly ruin the crease in his trousers."

A Thoughtful Husband.

"You asked me to bring you some pin money this morning," said the young husband.

"Yes," she replied, with an air of expectancy.

"Well," said he, "I thought I might as well save you a trip downtown, so I brought you a paper of pins instead."

Her Little Joke.

Chicago News: "Your father's cane," groaned the lover, "came down on me with such rapidity that I thought a cyclone had struck me."

"Well, it was a hurry-cane," ventured the sweet girl.

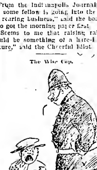
And yet they say girls have no sense of humor.

The Cheerful Idiot.

From the Indianapolis Journal: "I see some fellow is going into the rabbit rearing business," said the boarder who got the morning paper first.

"Seems to me that raising rabbits would be something of a hare-lifting nature," said the Cheerful Idiot.

The Wise Cop.



"Now, young feller, w'y will you cry? Do try to remember your name. It can't be so long ago since you woz christened."—From Scraps.

In-Grown Appreciation.

"Miss Jimp must have a lot of self-esteem."

"Why?"

"She dresses so carefully, and yet she says she doesn't value the admiration of others."

Choice Between Evils.

"Why did you let Smith talk to you all the way downtown about his baby?"

"I was afraid that if I changed the subject he would get started on baseball."

All Over!

From Town Topics: "Will you show us no quarter, sir?" pleaded the captain of the captured merchantman.

"Sorry," replied Capt. Kidd, "but our quartermaster is on his vacation at present."

I.
I see her again as she was that night,
When I thought her pure as the driven snow;
Her arms and her neck were lily white,
In her hair a single jacqueminot.

II.
If I were a woman I might cry,
But I am a man and must remain dumb.
If I were a coward I might die,
And who in the world would care a crumb?

III.
Red rose petals, crimson hued, color of love—
Love—the name I know not any more.
Pity me, help me, thou God above,
A helpless soul is at thy door.

IV.
Roses! I hate the name they bear,
Love! Love played me false and she
Bid me forget. God! she was fair.
Can I forget! Where can I flee?

V.
O, the cold look, the laughter false,
The blood-red rose, the mignonette,
The rhythm of music, the madcap waltz,
Can I forget! God! Can I forget!

The Matrimonial Cross.

Woman often makes her own matrimonial cross. And note how cheerfully she goes about it. She cannot drive the nails fast enough some times. The vast sea of incompatibility that so often surrounds the state matrimonial, a sea fed by woman's futile and willing tears, would come to gradually melt away and disappear if women would dry their eyes and look squarely in the face the reason of her weeping. An effort spent to cultivate the gentle art of being agreeable as against time wasted in disagreeing is one way to clear sundry matrimonial skies of many domestic clouds. This hint to the men as well—it is not a bad habit to contract, this habit of first being agreeable in your family. The habit once formed is found to be the best promoter of smooth matrimonial running known. And now why does the woman who has a nervous and irritable spouse take time to cultivate a manner and way of speaking that she is clever enough in the first years of marriage to discover disconcerts him and fans the flame of his irritation? Thus giving up willfully a happiness she craves. Or why does the woman with a selfish husband cater to that selfishness, until she finds herself entirely out of the scheme of such a husband's life and her happiness as ashes in her mouth? Why does the woman whose husband is easy-going and thoughtless of her wishes get into a state of constant faultfinding, approving of nothing that he does, becoming an irritant to his existence, until she drives him—and her happiness in consequence—from her? Again, why does the woman with a jealous husband—that affront to womanhood—in untold cases seem heedless of his shortcomings or put up with the misery that is the outcome of his suspicious nature? A thorough understanding between such a husband and his wife cannot come too soon, says a writer in the Detroit Free Press. And why does the wife who has a shiftless and lazy husband, in nine cases out of ten, put a willing shoulder to the wage-earning wheel and hope in this way to hold together the foundations of her home? To find that she has the rather wrecked it by taking upon herself the wrong part of the domestic partnership. Need I cite more? Let us look over the field and pick our way intelligently among the many stumbling blocks which have the appearance of sound timber; spend less time squabbling around for nails, give up cross building. Love is all too vital a matter to be trifled with, and time is all too short to be wasted in such employment.

How to Remove a Tight Ring.

Most girls who have had baby rings have had trouble in removing them from their fingers.

"There is really no necessity for all this ado about removing a tight ring," said a downtown jeweler. "In that as in everything else, the secret of success lies in knowing how to do it. Here is a recipe that I have found unfailing for removing a tight ring, and there is no painful surgical operation involved, either. Thread a needle flat in the eye, using thread that is strong but not too coarse. Then pass the head of the needle under the ring. Care, of course, must be used in this, and it would be best to soap the needle before beginning. The needle having been passed through, pull the thread through a few inches toward the hand —so." By this time the jeweler had passed the needle and thread under the ring on his own finger, and was prepared to illustrate the little lecture. "Wrap the long end of the thread tightly and regularly around the finger toward the nail in this manner. Then take hold of the short end and unwind it—so. The thread, thus pressing against the ring, will gradually remove it, however tight or swollen the finger."

Going to Bed Hungry.

It is a mistake to suppose that it is never good to eat before sleeping. Many an hour of sleeplessness may be avoided by nibbling a biscuit at bedtime. All animals, except man, eat before sleeping, and there is no reason why man should form an exception to the rule. Fasting between the long interval between supper and breakfast, and especially complete emptiness of the stomach during sleep, add greatly to the amount of emaciation, sleeplessness and general weakness so often met with. It is well known that in the body there is a perpetual disintegration of tissue—sleeping or waking. It is, therefore, natural to believe that the supply of nourishment should be somewhat continuous, especially in those in whom the vitality is lowered.

As bodily exercise is suspended during sleep, with wear and tear correspondingly diminished, while digestion, assimilation and nutritive activity continue as usual, the food furnished during this period adds more than is destroyed, and increased weight and improved general vigor is the result, says Woman's Life. If the weakly, the emaciated and the sleepless were to take nightly a light meal of simple, nutritious food before going to bed for a prolonged period, they would be raised to a better standard of health.

It has been our experience that, after digesting a bowl of bread and milk or a saucer of oatmeal before going to bed, for a few months, a surprising increase in weight, strength and general tone has resulted.

For Health and Beauty.

Sir Thomas Sawyer, an English lecturer and writer, gives the following rules for long life: 1. Sleep eight hours in each twenty-four. 2. Sleep on your right side, with the window open. 3. Place the bed away from the wall. 4. Take a bath the temperature of the body daily. 5. Take exercise before breakfast. 6. Eat but little meat, well cooked. 7. Do not drink milk (for adults). 8. Eat much grain food. 9. Avoid intoxicants. 10. Live as much as possible in the country. 11. Vary your occupations. 12. Limit your ambitions. No rules can be given that will apply to every one. Experience and knowledge of one's self must be the guide in applying these rules.

Concerning Headaches.

To attempt to banish all variations of headache by a single "cure" shows a childlike faith in medicine, but very little common sense. The first step toward curing a headache is to find out which kind of a one it is, and to devote one's energies to drive it away. The headache which results from indigestion is of frequent occurrence, and it implies overeating or unwise eating, and that when a woman finds herself afflicted with such a headache she should proceed to cure it by fasting and a mild cathartic and sitting with her feet in hot water before going to bed.

The nervous headache is the kind to which women are the most subjected, says Woman's Life, as it results from the effort to make the nerves do more than they ought to do. The first step in treating this headache is to drop work and worry, if possible, and draw blood from the head by soaking the feet in hot water and putting cold applications to the forehead and the back of the neck. A great many mysterious headaches have their origin in overstrained eyes. This kind is cured only by giving the eyes a vacation or by an oculist. Of course, care in the use of the eyes is also a help. Reading, writing or sewing in a dim or flickering light must be given up. The common practice of trying to read in jolting trains must also be discarded. The eyes must never be used too long at a time, and when there is much eye work to be done, brief rests and bathings in hot water will ward off the dreaded headache. The headache which is the result of exposure to colds or draughts or sudden changes is best treated by hot applications, hot water bags and gentle friction of the place of pain. If this does not banish the headache in a day, then a deeper illness is indicated. The best way to treat headaches is to avoid them—to refuse to overtax the eyes, the nerves or the stomach, and to give attention to exercise and bathing.

OUR COOKING SCHOOL.

Canning Fruit.

To can peaches first select nice, ripe fruit, but not that which has become soft. Wash them in a pan of cold water, then lay a soft cloth in the bottom of another pan to lay the peaches on to drain after washing. Peel them with a reasonably sharp knife, so as not to bruise them. Cut in halves and remove the pit. Place the fruit in the cans with the open side down and put in as many as you can without mashing the fruit. Now make a syrup of one-half cupful of sugar to each quart of fruit and pour over the fruit while it is warm, and fill the cans full. Put some pieces of thin boards or lath in the bottom of a wash boiler and set the cans upon them; then put warm water enough in the boiler to come up a couple of inches on the cans, put the covers loosely on the cans and cover the boiler tight and boil one hour, then remove the cans from the boiler, put on the rubber and screw the top on tightly. Tip the can down on the side and turn it around, to be sure that it is perfectly tight. If the least bit of syrup oozes from beneath the cover it is not tight enough. If you cannot turn the cover any tighter take some hard substance, such as a knife handle, and press the edge of the cover down firmly onto the rubber and try it again and again until not one drop of syrup runs out. If the work is done thoroughly on the start you will not have the least trouble to keep fruit any length of time until it is wanted for use. Set the fruit away in a box or cupboard in a reasonably cool place.

To Can Grapes.

Take good fresh grapes, pick them from the stems, being careful not to break the skin, and fill your cans full and shake them down and add more if there is room without mashing. Make a syrup the same as for the peaches, and be sure you fill the cans full of syrup, then proceed the same as with the peaches. Grapes canned in this way keep their shape perfectly and are luscious for the table. The juice from this fruit when the cans are opened is the most perfect sweet wine that can be found for invalids or convalescents, or as a most delicious summer drink when water and ice are added.

Mangoes.

Take small muskmelons and cut an oval piece out of one side; take out the seeds with teaspoon, and fill this space with stuffing of chopped onion, scraped horseradish, mustard seed, cloves and whole pepper; sew in the piece. Put in jar, pour boiling vinegar, with little salt in it, over them. Do this three times; then put in fresh vinegar; cover close.

Canned Peas.

Open can peas one hour before cooking them and turn into a bowl. When ready for them put on in a farina kettle—or one saucepan within another—of hot water. If dry add cold water to cover them, and stew about 25 minutes. Drain; stir in a generous lump of butter, pepper and salt.

An Even Exchange.

"Will you love me when I'm old?" she asked.

"Certainly," he replied promptly, "if you will love me when I am bald."

HIS BEST DEFENSE.

The accommodation train from Stowell was filled to overflowing when a young man burst out of a group on the platform at the handsome little station (the bell had rung twice), waved a hand to a young gentleman standing at a little distance with a young lady, and saying, "Back on the ten-twenty, Parker," leaped on the platform of the last car and disappeared in the car.

"Is he always so impulsive?" The gentleman addressed as Parker smiled. "Indeed, I have not had time to form an opinion." His companion lifted her eyebrows, then bethought herself in time.

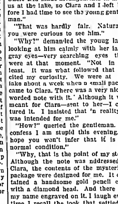
"At least he makes himself very agreeable. And I have no patience with disagreeable people. We met him last summer at Mount Nebo. Clara—you know she is a model of propriety. Dear Clara—I am too severe on her. But, then, it is such a relief to get away from the tiresome, stupid forms that remind me of my grand-aunt's way of making patterns for her quilts and patches. The patches were all alike, but she clipped every one separate. She almost dropped when I said: 'Aunt, why don't you fold your cloth six or eight times? You could cut that many at once and they would be exactly alike.' Our conventions remind me of a quilt; they make a very good covering—but I like the pattern varied, don't you?"

The gentleman smiled again at this audacious speech, but whether it was the independence expressed or the archness of the attitude and glances of the speaker that amused him most it is doubtful if he could have told at that moment. As they strolled away from the station he reminded her of a remark she made when the coming of the train interrupted her.

"Oh, yes. I was just coming to the droll part. You see, Clara is so painfully correct. And when the lady's son came to Rose Center——"

"Pardon me. I haven't got the connection clear," said the gentleman.

"Haven't you?" Her deep-gray eyes grew round with wonder. "I thought I told you that his mother was seized suddenly with an unaccountable illness. It alarmed them all. The only doctor about had gone away. Clara behaved just like a major-general, I told her—at least she called one of the servants to help her place the lady in bed. Then, as there was no doctor nearer than nine miles, she sent me to bed about 11 and remained with the strange lady all night. She was with her until the doctor managed to secure a nurse that evening. And the next morning her son, who was out west somewhere, came home and hurried out to Rose Center. I never met him. Uncle had made arrangements to meet us at the lake, so Clara and I left before I had time to see the young gentleman."



SUCCEEDS IN SURPRISING HER.

"That was hardly fair. Naturally you were curious to see him."

"Why?" demanded the young lady, looking at him calmly with her large gray eyes—very searching eyes they were at that moment. "Not in the least. It was what followed that excited my curiosity. We were at the lake about a week when a small packet came to Clara. There was a very nicely worded note with it. Although it was meant for Clara—sent to her—I captured it. I insisted that in reality it was intended for me."

"How?" queried the gentleman. "I confess I am stupid this evening. I hope you won't infer that it is my normal condition."

"Why, that is the point of my story. Although the note was addressed to Clara, the contents of the mysterious package were designed for me. It contained a handsome gold pencil case, with a diamond head. And there was my name engraved on it. I laugh every time I recall the look that settled on Clara's face as she held it in her hand. She looked just too stupid for anything—and she prides herself on her quickness. 'Why, Hester,' she said at last, after re-reading the note with exasperating calmness—that's Clara's way. I'd had it committed to memory by that time. 'Why, Hester, Mr. Courtney has made such a queer mistake. He has had your name engraved on it.' Well, when I saw my name, it was so whimsical—and Clara looked so stupid that I laughed until I had to sit down. Clara laughed with me. We sat there laughing like two fools. You know how people will laugh over a trifle."

The gentleman made a grimace at one point; he remembered himself in time, however. Now he was able to express an intimate knowledge of the trifles that provoked merriment.

"Then I insisted that Clara, as usual, was ruling me with a high hand. Plainly, I argued, the young gentleman was enthralled by my surpassing beauty. He was doubtless advised of the means she employed to keep me in duress, so adopted the only means within his reach to convey the present to the proper person."

"If you had lived in feudal times you would have absorbed an entire kingdom. Certainly you had some reason on your side."

"Thank you. Anyhow, I accomplished as much as the old-time lords—I refused to give up the note. I keep it to this day, although now and then Clara threatens to destroy it."

"Of course she retains the present."

The gray eyes flashed almost an angry look at him.

"Clara! Much you know about Clara. Why, she wouldn't keep the finest diamond in the world in her room if it had a setting with another person's initials in it—and there was my full name: 'Hester M. Morford.'"

"Pardon; you said it was addressed to your sister. How did it happen that your name was engraved upon a present addressed to your sister?"

"Oh, dear! Don't you see? It was addressed to 'Miss Morford.'"

"Why, what on earth could the man have been thinking of?" said the gentleman as he gazed steadfastly in his companion's face.

"That was what Clara said—once only. She never referred to him again in that tone. I fancy my bantering was at the bottom of her silence. Anyhow, I have only to remind her that all her care does not suffice to keep me in the shade to make her affectionate. She reminds me at least once a month that if I am ever unhappy she will never forgive herself. But, I declare, we are almost at the hotel. And there is Clara now, standing beside that large woman with the lovely white hair."

But the gentleman saw only a young lady with a face that reminded him of an old-time portrait. There was an air of repose, a beauty of expression surpassing any mere outline, a gentleness that appealed to the most chivalrous instincts.

Hester was on the point of introducing her companion of the day when something in Mrs. Hammersly's manner apprised her that she knew him. That lady with her regal air advanced with outspread hand as she said in her distinct tones:

"This is a very unexpected pleasure, Mr. Courtney."

"Courtney?"

Hester felt the blood surge to her temples, but she controlled her voice admirably as she said something about the heat and withdrew, leaving Mr. Courtney with her sister and Mrs. Hammersly.

Two days elapsed before Mr. Courtney succeeded in surprising her alone.

"Why have you avoided me so persistently?" he said, as he turned and walked with her.

"Although I do not admit your right to question my actions, do you not think they are based on a sense of propriety?"

"I will admit anything if you will only allow me ten minutes—well, then, five—only five minutes' talk, Miss Morford."

"To what purpose? My error was less than yours. You could have set me right. You did not. You did not. How was I to know that your name was Courtney, with people addressing you by your baptismal name? You should have set me right."

"If you will only give me two minutes, then."

"No!" She was passing on, when Courtney reached out a hand.

"The greatest criminal is not denied the privilege of a defense. I knew you had no idea who I was when Stark and his sister introduced me in that unconventional way. It was Jack Stark's blunder. And I was very anxious to see you. The circumstances were altogether rare—exceptional."

"Very," said Hester dryly, as she gazed at the hotel, looming up in the distance.

"I was wrong. I ought to have corrected Stark at the time; but think of the temptation."

"This is again very vague, Mr. Courtney, but it is also becoming a trifle too whimsical."

The look that accompanied this was absolutely freezing. But from time immemorial ardent wooers have refused to be frozen by looks.

"When you know the truth you will not say it is whimsical. You may call me a fool."

"Say, rather, that I will not permit you to play upon my credulity. You saw my sister; you sent her a present as an evidence of your appreciation of her kindness to your mother. That was permissible. My sister certainly displayed a degree of interest unusual in your mother. But why you assume a right to address me as you have done I leave you to explain to yourself. It is a matter that does not interest me in the least now."

"Now I claim the right to vindicate myself." He spoke firmly. "I never saw Miss Morford until I came here. When I inquired for Miss Morford at Rose Center a servant pointed you out to me."

"!?" She stared at him, then suddenly cast her eyes down.

"Yes. I repeat, you were pointed out. You were standing on the south porch. I saw you as plainly as I see you now. The moment I saw you I——"

"Please permit me to go in."

It was said in a very low tone. He stood aside on the instant.

A week later she wore another ring. It was from her accepted lover, Albert Parker Courtney. And Clara Morford jestingly warned him now that he had found the right person to be careful when he gave the jeweler instructions concerning the monogram for the plate.

Little Syrians Baptized.

In a rough, unpainted house at Appleton, Wis., recently crosses and candlesticks of solid gold were set up and two little Syrian children were baptized into the Greek Catholic church. The ceremony was performed by the archimandrate of the Greek church in America, who came from New York for the purpose. It consisted of the celebration of high mass in the morning and the baptismal service in the evening. The officiating priest was once a teacher of Nicholas II, the czar of all the Russias. He wore a four-inch gold cross studded with diamonds, which was given him by the czar in recognition of his services as a teacher of languages. Relatives of the families interested from as far as Boston were present to attend the baptismal service.

A Remedy for Bad Language.

From the London Tit-Bits: An ocean-going captain was so much given to using bad language that his first mate made a bet with him that he could not do without swearing for a week. It went on all right for the first two or three days until a bit of a squall came on, and the sailors were up aloft doing their different duties. But their captain was displeased with their work. He stood it as long as he could and then he threw his cap on the deck in a towering rage, jumped on it, and shaking his fist up at the men with an angry scowl, he hissed: "Bless you, my dears; you know what I mean."

WOMEN IN BABYLON.

Rights in Business and Property Matters Were Upheld.

Babylonian maidens held property in their own right and there were definite marriage stipulations relating to dowry, incidentally indicating the dependence of the son on his father's wishes in the choice of a wife, says the Boston Transcript. The dowry contracts were definite, stating the amount and nature of the property to be given, providing for payment by a brother in case of the father's decease, the dowry being regarded as a legally collectible debt, payable in kind if money were lacking. The legal recipient of the dowry was the son-in-law, yet the daughter (wife) retained such proprietary interest therein that if invested in realty by the husband it was in his wife's name. Married women were competent to conduct transactions relating to money, to realty and to slaves, their contracts being sometimes witnessed by the husband; while various business transactions were performed in common by husband and wife, the former being alone responsible as guarantor, the mere presence of the wife giving legality to the husband's transactions, at least in certain cases. There are indications that husband and wife enjoyed approximately equal rights with respect to property, the control of children, etc.; there is little reference to the husband's duty to support the wife, though it appears that in case of divorce the husband paid alimony according to his means. Frequent reference to slaves appears in the contracts, but the author postpones discussion of the subjects of slavery and of the condition of female slaves. The information brought to light through the study of these ancient contracts bears on the development of institutions. Apparently the regulations governing the contracts studied pertained chiefly to urban life; certainly the regulations seem hardly in accord with the customs prevailing among contemporary nomadic tribes and still maintained among their descendants of similar habit.

WHAT A LOAF OF BREAD COSTS

Result of a Series of Investigations by Professor Snyder.

An interesting contribution to a series of publications being issued by the department of agriculture embracing investigations into the food and nutrition of man, has been made by Prof. Harry Snyder of the Minnesota Agricultural college. The paper contributed by Prof. Snyder relates the experiments made at the Minnesota university in bread making. The average "pound loaf" of fresh bread as sold by bakers, says the professor, weighed on an average about one pound one ounce. A pound loaf of bread can be made from about three-quarters of a pound of flour, about 25 per cent of water being added to the flour during the process of bread making. With some flour 5 to 10 per cent more water can be absorbed, making a greater weight of bread from a given weight of flour. This additional weight is water and not nutrients. At 2 cents a pound for flour, it is estimated by Prof. Snyder that a pound loaf can be made, not counting fuel and labor, for about 2 cents, one-half cent being allowed for shortening and yeast. The loss of dry matter in bread making is usually considered as amounting to about 2 per cent of the flour used. In exceptional cases, as in prolonged fermentation, under favorable conditions the loss may amount to 8 per cent or more.

Elephant Not a Thief.

A Paris correspondent writes that an elephant in the Jardin des Plantes has recently been the subject of numerous defamatory accusations. The animal was accused of being a professional thief, says the Boston Transcript. The story went that several visitors to the Jardin des Plantes, who stopped to view the elephant, had been relieved of their purses, and on each occasion boys who were present affirmed that they had seen the animal seize the purse with its trunk and carry it to his mouth. At last a provincial stopped in front of the elephant and lost his purse. He made a complaint and some boys—the same boys, by the way—accused the elephant of having taken it. But the animal's keeper, recognizing the boys, became suspicious and had them searched, with the result that the missing purse was found. The correspondent's imagination also influences him to say that as soon as the purse was discovered the elephant showed his great joy by a vigorous waving of his trunk.

Historic Land Sold.

New York correspondent Pittsburg Dispatch: A tract of twenty-three acres of historic land in Brooklyn borough was transferred by sale recently. It was part of an original grant from King George III. to Peter De Bevoise, who was a close friend of Peter Stuyvesant, the sturdy governor of New York a century and a half ago. It has been in the De Bevois family ever since. But now comes the demand for Brooklyn cottages, and away goes the property into the hands of a speculative builder, a Mr. Donnellon, for a consideration of $98,000. The value of the holding can be estimated from the fact that Mr. Donnellon was offered $115,000 for his purchase as soon as he had completed it, and he declined. When old King George gave it to the original De Bevois you could probably have bought the whole property for $500.

And Then It Would Be Useless.

Teacher—"You should always be frank, and not try to hide any fault you may have committed. He wouldn't give me time to say anything until his arm got tired."—Stray Stories.

THE ARAB HORSE.

He Has Few Needs and Great Endurance and Spirits.

An Arab can not dispense with food altogether, like the legendary camel of travelers' tales, but his needs are few, and he will maintain his health and spirits under conditions which other horses would never be able to endure. Indeed, not only can he put up with hardships at a pinch, but he actually deteriorates under the generous regimen which is considered necessary for other horses. This has been proved over and over again by purchasers who have refused to believe the usual three feeds of corn to be supererogatory and the morning hour of walking exercise insufficient. There is probably no being so obstinately conservative as an English coachman, and, even when he finds an Arab grow utterly unmanageable, he is not to be convinced that the simple cause is lack of exercise and exuberance of feeding. The fact is, an Arab is naturally so high-spirited and so difficult to tire that even a single feed of corn is excessive unless he is being subjected to exceptionally hard work. He will answer every requirement as a hunter if his diet be restricted to hay or even to grass, and in the summer time he is most satisfactory if he has the run of the paddock, where he can chose his own food and exercise. So far, the quality of the normal Arab in everyday life. What a picked horse can do when put upon his mettle almost baffles belief. An officer, recently returned from the Soudan, relates that after a ride of 800 miles his horse showed no signs of work, though he had cast all his shoes before accomplishing a quarter of the journey, though many of the camels had died and the others had suffered severely. Again, it was an Arab of 14.2¼, which carried ten stone six pounds and won a ten-mile race at Ferozepore in 25 minutes, a feat of endurance probably unequaled in equine annals. And Lord Roberts can bear testimony to the powers of the Arab which carried him through all his campaigns during 25 years, and, alone among the horses of history, received official authority to wear the Afghan medal with four clasps. Such qualities are worth insisting upon at the war office as a short cut to the solution of many problems of economy and dispatch in the transport service. —Saturday Review.

LIKE TOBACCO.

Old Trainer Claims That Animals Take To It Kindly.

"I have been an inveterate user of tobacco in some form for the past forty years, and during that time have had much to do with all sorts of wild beasts, which I have found are nearly all more or less partial to the smell or taste of the weed," observed an old and experienced animal trainer. "For instance, the common brown bear is so fond of the fumes of tobacco that if you blow smoke through the bars of his cage it will, with evident delight, push forward and rub its back and head against the iron bars. Not long ago I blew through a hollow stick a pinch of snuff into the nose of a sleeping lion. The brute shortly after awoke, sat up straight, sneezed violently, and then lay down to sleep very contentedly again. All goats, deer, llamas and so on will chew and eat tobacco and snuff with great eagerness. Monkeys and big baboons also breathe with great satisfaction the smoke from cigars."

How to Stop Worrying.

"The usual way people set about stopping worry is a wrong one," writes Mary Boardman Page in the Ladies' Home Journal. "That is why it is so unsuccessful. If the doctor tells a patient he must stop worrying, the patient is likely to say, impatiently: 'Oh, doctor, don't I wish that I could. But I can't. If I could have stopped worrying a year ago I wouldn't be ill now'—all of which is probably perfectly true. And the doctor does not always know how to help him, because both doctor and patient have an idea that it is impossible to suppress worry through an effort of the will. This is a mistake. It is not possible to repress worry. You have got to replace it with something else. Let me illustrate this by figure. Suppose you were to go into a completely dark room, wishing it to be light. How would you set about the work? Would you try to scoop the darkness up in buckets and carry it out at the door? Not at all. You would just open the windows and shutters and let in the blessed sunlight. You would replace the darkness with light. So it is with worry. The only possible way to get rid of it is to replace the worry attitude of the mind with the non-worry attitude. And this can always be done when the person is sincere and patient in his desire to bring it about. All he has to do is to be passive and let nature have her own perfect way with him."

A Pretty Reply.

Mrs. Sallie Marshall Hardy, who is a descendant of Chief Justice Marshall, visited the Supreme court chambers in Washington recently and was introduced to Justice Harlan by a functionary of the court. She was then seated under the bust of her distinguished ancester, and Justice Harlan whispered to Chief Justice Fuller: "That little woman there under Marshall's bust is his great-granddaughter." The chief justice looked toward the little woman and then said, "Tell her I am afraid the bust may fall on her." "I'm not afraid," returned Mrs. Hardy; "nothing on earth could please me so much as to have my great-grandfather's head fall on my shoulders."—The Argonaut.

Inharmonious.

"No, we couldn't agree," sighed the man. "I said I wasn't worthy of her and she said I was. For the sake of harmony I yielded my opinion and said I was worthy of her, and she, not to be outdone in her generosity, I suppose, yielded her opinion and said I wasn't." —Detroit Journal.

An Expensive Lesson.

"My wife has a way of jogging my memory that I am hardly in sympathy with," said Smith, with a sorry smile, as he filed away his last month's gas bill.

"About a month ago, as I was preparing to come down town, she handed me a letter with the injunction to be sure and mail it at the first mail box that I came to. I promised and put the letter away in my pocket.

"'Now, don't forget,' she called after me, 'as the letter is very important.'

"'I won't,' I answered and straightway proceeded to forget all about it.

"The other day I chanced to be going through my pockets when I was surprised by coming across the letter that my wife had given me to mail four weeks before. Remembering that she had said it was very important, I glanced at it to see to whom it was addressed.

"I was thunderstruck to find that it was addressed to me. Thinking that my wife must have taken leave of her senses, I tore it open and found a note that read thus:

"'The gas is leaking in the basement. Please send a man up to fix it.'

"I don't remember what I said when I charged home and found that the gas was still leaking, but all the satisfaction I got out of my wife was that she thought I would remember to post the next letter she gave me, and I believe I will."—Detroit Free Press.

Monkey Vengeance.

Gibraltar is noted for the monkeys which live there. Visitors watch for them by the hour, and they may not appear, yet occasionally in full daylight they will cross the walls and roof surrounding the old cemetery from the Alameda gardens, where they go to drink at the fountain.

A subaltern tells an amusing story concerning this colony of animals. About two years ago some officers managed to detach a small monkey from its fellows at the drinking trough and kept it for a fortnight in captivity. Then, for reasons of their own, they thought well to restore it. So they took the little beast back to the drinking trough early one morning before the others had arrived and watched it in ambush.

Presently the monkey colony came, reconnoitered and, observing the truant—as they evidently considered him—held a consultation. After much chattering two of the largest apes approached the returned wanderer, who appeared petrified with fear, seized him by his arms and, after apparently strangling him, threw him over the precipice beneath the signal station, evidently in revenge as a deserter.

It Was In His Head.

Balzac once promised Lirieux, the manager of the Odeon theater in Paris, a five act drama, "The Springs of Quinola." He was so busy with other work, however, that not till he had been long and urgently importuned did he promise to read his piece to the company the next week. The company gathered about him on the day appointed, and he read his five act play fluently through to the end. Lirieux was enthusiastic, ran up to shake hands with the great writer and turned over the pages of the manuscript whose contents had pleased him mightily.

But what was this? There were only four acts. The last pages of the manuscript were blank. In surprise the manager asked what it all meant.

Balzac smiled and admitted that he had not yet written out the fifth act, but declared that he had it as clearly in his head as if it already stood on paper. "And," continued the poet merrily, "I have in the same head two more outcomes of the plot in case the one I just read don't please you."—San Francisco Argonaut.

Not So Very Old After All.

In a little village churchyard at Bickenhill, in Warwickshire, is a tombstone upon which is inscribed the age of a dear old maiden lady who departed this life in the year 1701. Her age, as testified by the engraver's art, was 708. Born before the Conquest and dying under Queen Anne. Again at Chave Priory, Worcestershire, the age of a "rude forefather" is similarly inscribed as 309. Not to harrow the reader, we may say that these portentous figures are strictly the product of the engraver's art. The monumental mason of those days was nothing if not ignorant, and his idea of writing 78 or 39 was to write 70 or 30 first and 8 or 9 afterward, meaning 70 plus 8 or 30 plus 9, etc., as the case might be.

Quaint Dr. Colles.

Dr. Colles, an eminent surgeon of Dublin, who died in 1843, was remarkable for his plain dealing with himself. In his fee book he had many such candid entries as the following:

"For giving ineffectual advice for deafness, 1 guinea."

"For telling him that he was no more ill than I was, 1 guinea."

"For nothing that I know of, except that he probably thought he did not pay me enough last time, 1 guinea."

Japanese Dentists.

The Japanese dentists perform all their operations in tooth drawing with the thumb and the forefinger of one hand. The skill necessary to do this is acquired only after long practice, but when once it is obtained the operator is able to extract half a dozen teeth in about 30 seconds without once removing his fingers from the patient's mouth.

KILLED BY A BEAK BLOW.

The Loon Is a Dangerous Bird With Which to Battle.

The loon, or great northern diver, is a powerful bird. The following instance of one of them conquering a man happened a few years ago:

One day the youth, who was an adept at imitating the peculiar sobbing cry of the loon, succeeded in calling a bird within shooting distance. His shot, however, failed to kill outright, and the bird, although so severely wounded that it could neither swim nor dive, yet retained sufficient life and strength to remain upright in the water.

The boy, thinking that his game did not need another shot, swam out to retrieve it, but when he approached near enough to seize the bird it suddenly made a dash at him, sending its head and neck out with a spring like an arrow from a bow. It was only by a quick duck of his head that the Indian succeeded in evading the blow. He swam about the loon several times, attempting to dash in and seize him by the neck, but the wary bird succeeded in foiling each effort by continually facing him and lunging out with his powerful neck.

The Indian then swam up to within a few feet of the bird and, diving under him with considerable skill, caught him by the legs. He carried him under, and, although the bird struggled fiercely, managed to retain his hold. But when they both rose to the surface again a battle royal began, the Indian seeking to carry his prize ashore and the bird attempting to regain his freedom. The bird, however, was too much for his foe and before the Indian had covered a yard on his shore bound course disabled him with a vicious blow from his beak full on the naked chest.

The effect of the blow was almost instantaneously fatal, for the beak penetrated close to the Indian's heart.—Youth's Companion.

STORY OF NOSES.

Why Renowned Generals Had a Nasal Organ of Roman Type.

The features are developed by the mind. A child that is reared amid pleasant surroundings and whose mind is filled with pleasant thoughts, will have a pleasing face. The shape of the nose and chin will depend entirely upon the strength and character of the mental faculties.

At 10 a boy's nose may be small and turned up at the end, at 15 it may have grown larger and be straight and at 25 it may be pronounced Roman. It all depends upon his mind.

The Romans had big noses with high bridges because they were a steady and determined race of people. Sturdiness and determination will give a man a Roman nose, no matter how little or how snubby his proboscis may have been when he was born. The Greeks had straight, delicate, finely chiseled noses because their tastes are artistic and poetic. You never saw a poet or an artist with a Roman or snub nose, did you?

On the other hand, it would be hard to find a great general who had not a Roman nose. Get pictures of Alexander the Great, Napoleon, Wellington, Washington or Grant and see if they have not all got big, strong noses of the Romanesque type. Yet it is quite safe to say that if we could have portraits of all these personages, taken in infancy, we would find their olfactory organs little pudgy affairs, like those of the common run of babies. These men were not great generals because they had Roman noses; they had Roman noses because they were great generals.—San Francisco Bulletin.

A Reliable Cowcatcher.

By this whimsical incident the Chicago News reminds us that in real life as well as in the dictionary words have more than one meaning:

"Pardon me," said the tourist as he gazed at the country's first locomotive, "but why is that lasso hanging under the smokestack?"

"That," responded Amber Pete, acting engineer, "is the cowcatcher. Thar was an iron concern that came with the engine, but the boys didn't exactly understand how it could catch a cow, so they unscrewed it and put on one that they knew something about. It's the best cowcatcher this side of Denver too."

His Present Fad.

"You don't seem to be buying many rare books nowadays," said Perkins to Jimpsonberry. "Got tired of collecting?"

"No," replied Jimpsonberry. "Changed my hobby, that's all. My boys have grown some in the past seven or eight years, and I've taken up the fad of collecting derby hats and trousers and shoes and other things of that kind. I have a splendid collection of school bills, too, I'd like to show you."—Harper's Bazar.

A Man of Means.

"Mamma," said little Ethel, "papa must be just awfully rich."

"Why do you think that, my child?"

"I heard him tell grandma that he was going to buy Boston and Albany today."—Brooklyn Life.

SECRET OF BRIGHT COLORS.

An Englishman Pays Dearly For a Sunshine Trick.

In speaking to the writer about the favorable influence that fine weather has upon the production of bright and delicately shaded dyes and colors, a famous English manufacturer of carmine recently said:

"Some years ago I was aware of the superiority of the French carmine, and, being anxious to improve upon my own process, I went to Lyons and bargained with the most celebrated manufacturer in that city for the acquisition of his secret, for which I was to pay $5,000.

"Well, I was shown all the process and saw a most beautiful color produced, but I noticed that there was not the least difference in the French mode of fabrication and that which I constantly adopted myself. I thereupon appealed to my instructor and insisted that he must have kept some secret concealed. The man assured me he had not and asked me to inspect the process a second time. I accepted the invitation, and after I had minutely examined the water and the materials, which were in every respect similar to my own, I still felt so much in the dark that I said, 'I have lost both my labor and money, for the air of England does not admit us to make good carmine.'

"'Stay!' said the Frenchman. 'Don't deceive yourself. What kind of weather is it now?'

"'A bright and sunny day,' I replied.

"'And such are the days,' said the Frenchman, 'on which I make my color. Were I to attempt to manufacture it on a dark and cloudy day my results would be the same as yours. Let me advise you, my friend, only to make your carmine on bright, sunny days.'

"The moral of this," continued the Englishman, "will apply quite as well to the making of many other colors used in manufactures, and also in the fine arts, for it illustrates in a practical way the chemical influence of light upon certain coloring compounds or mixtures."—Washington Star.

A PECULIAR SPIDER.

He Catches Birds as Big as Larks In His Mammoth Web.

Far up in the mountains of Ceylon there is a spider that spins a web like bright yellowish silk, the central net of which is five feet in diameter, while the supporting lines, or guys, as they are called, measure sometimes 10 or 12 feet, and, riding quickly in the early morning, you may dash right into it, the stout threads twining round your face like a lace veil, while, as the creature who has woven it takes up his position in the middle, he generally catches you right in the nose, and, though he seldom bites or stings, the contact of his large body and long legs is anything but pleasant. If you forget yourself and try to catch him, bite he will, and, though not venomous, his jaws are as powerful as a bird's beak, and you are not likely to forget the encounter.

The bodies of these spiders are very handsomely decorated, being bright gold or scarlet underneath, while the upper part is covered with the most delicate slate colored fur. So strong are the webs that birds the size of larks are frequently caught therein, and even the small but powerful scaly lizard falls a victim. A writer says that he has often sat and watched the yellow monster—measuring, when waiting for his prey, with his legs stretched out, fully six inches—striding across the middle of the net and noted the rapid manner in which he winds his stout threads round the unfortunate captive.

He usually throws the coils about the head until the wretched victim is first blinded and then choked. In many unfrequented dark nooks of the jungle you come across most perfect skeletons of small birds caught in these terrible snares.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Slightly Absentminded.

"Does your husband ever help you about taking care of the baby?" was asked the wife of a young professor in a neighboring city.

"Not often, though sometimes he does. Last evening he said he'd take Willie for an airing as he was going to walk down to the postoffice. Half an hour later I saw my husband sitting in the parlor reading a scientific magazine, but I could see nothing of the baby.

"'Where's Willie? What have you done with him?' I asked.

"'Why,' said the professor, 'I forgot all about him. I think he is sitting in the postoffice.'"—Detroit Free Press.

Lots of These Socialists.

"No, my child, you cannot marry Ravenswood Plunks."

"But, papa, what is your objection to Ravie?"

"My child, he is one of the most objectionable socialists I ever met."

"A socialist, papa? Surely you are mistaken!"

"No, I'm not. He actually demanded to share my wealth with me!"

"Ravie did that? Why, papa, what did he say?"

"He said he wanted to be my son-in-law."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Gentle Reproof.

"Why is it that you people have so many revolutions?"

"My friend," replied the South American, "you forget that each country must have amusements suited to its temperament. You also overlook the airy facility which practice gives. Hence your misuse of language. Those are not revolutions. They are merely somersaults."—Washington Star.

It is estimated that from one barrel of flour 260 loaves of bread are made on the average, so that Chicago bakers use up, for bread alone, 1,924 barrels of flour every day in the year. It takes five bushels of wheat to make each barrel of flour, or, in all, nearly 10,000 bushels of wheat a day. Each day Chicago eats up in bread the wheat on a farm of nearly 400 acres, estimating the yield at twenty-five bushels to the acre.

Prosperity.

"Men wanted!" "Men wanted!" everywhere
Since McKinley took the chair;
And, as this blazoned sign goes by,
Have you ever asked yourself the why
Men are wanted?

Why this call—this brisk demand—
From end to end of our broad land?
Why, Uncle Sam is shooting niggers
And needs more men to pull the triggers.
That's why men are wanted!

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Regular Correspondent

Admiral Dewey is a diplomat as well as a fighting man. He determined as soon as he heard about it that he would not join Mr. McKinley's political show in its flying trip to the west, and when they began hinting rather strongly to him that Mr. McKinley would like to have him do so, he quickly put a stop to it by accepting the invitation of the governor of Massachusetts to go to Boston on the 12th inst. It was a shrewd play on Dewey's part, as it gives the administration a strong hint that he doesn't intend to allow himself to be used as a vote getter.

When Boss Hanna was in Washington this week everybody noticed that a change had come over him. He no longer talked of the election in Ohio as a walkover for the republicans, but admitted that they had the hardest kind of a fight on their hands, and that McLean was a hard man to beat. His talk convinced those who heard him that the reports of his fight which have been coming from Ohio ever since he got back from Europe were not exaggerated in the slightest degree. He says he always fights best when scared. If that is true, he is now in the condition to put up the fight of his life.

Dewey's politics are some what in doubt. It is said he is a Democrat, but this has not been clearly established. It is certain that his Americanism is unquestioned, and among other interesting gossip it is hinted that he may be the candidate of a third party, and put forth on an "American platform." Dewy's identification with either party has not been so strong as to insure him enemies in the other, and those who have seen the marvelous popular enthusiasm for the man will appreciate the importance he would be as a factor in the next campaign, should he consent to be a candidate for the Presidency on any platform.

Robt. Kittleson, captain of the steamer Viking, plying the river between Thief River Falls and the Agency, accidently shot himself last Friday. Capt. Kittleson had been shooting at ducks, and while placing the gun between some barrels of freight, the hammer being still raised, it was discharged, the contents hitting him above the right ear making an ugly wound, the hole being as large as a silver dollar. He was taken to Crookston and is being cared for. It is believed the wound will not prove fatal.

The true economy on the farm is that which causes every foot of ground to produce all that it is capable of producing, and to see that not one grain of feed is wasted. Farm machinery and implements should be carefully housed. There should be a place for everything and everything in its place. It is not necessarily he who works hardest that makes most. It is, instead, he who takes the world easier and puts everything to the best possible use. It is the attention to things that makes profits, and it is the neglect to attend to them that makes failures. How often does it happen that litter after litter of pigs is lost because there is not a good place to keep them when they come. The same is true of young calves and poultry. There is lots of room for improvements along these lines; It is a pleasure to go over the farm where everything is neat and in its place. Such a farm will yield a profit, no matter what prices may be, while that which has machinery scattered all over it and waste going on in every department cannot but prove a failure.—Fertile Journal.

"What's in a Name?"

Everything, when you come to medicines. A sarsaparilla by any other name can never equal Hood's, because of the peculiar combination, proportion and process by which Hood's possesses merit peculiar to itself, and by which it cures when all other medicines fail. Slept During Kaiser's Sermon.

In a recent story about the kaiser, William is made to size up his own ability as a preacher. It is well known that the kaiser, on his annual trip on the Hohenzollern to the Norwegian fiords, is in the habit of conducting divine service every Sunday morning. He usually reads a short liturgy and follows the prayers with a sermon. In his recent trip, the officers of the Hohenzollern noticed that a sailor during divine service had fallen fast asleep. After the service the captain called the sailor before him, and gave him a sound rating and sentenced him to two days' arrest. The captain afterwards reported! the incident of the sleeping sailor and the punishment inflicted upon him.

"Was he on the watch the night before?" asked the kaiser.

"He was, your majesty."

"Then let the poor devil off. Besides, it wasn't much of a sermon, anyhow."—New York Press.

An Aboriginal Difficulty.

"There was a time," remarked the affable pedant, "when people used nothing but simple pictures when they undertook to make a record of anything."

"It must have been hard," said the lawyer, thoughtfully. "Half the time you wouldn't know whether to summon a witness as a handwriting expert or an art critic."—Washington Star.

Optimistic Thought.

"Is that all you can advance on a fine gold watch like this?" asked the man, who was negotiating a loan.

"That is all, my friend," replied the pawnbroker, "but you must remember the less I lend you the less you will have to pay back, and the interest will be smaller."—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

Iron Made Red-Hot in Water.

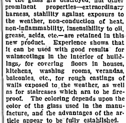
One of the astonishing things developed through the introduction of electricity into every-day affairs is a forge made for bench use for the heating of soldering irons or light pieces of metal for working on the anvil, where the heating is accomplished by plunging the article to be heated into a tray of water. Nothing could be imagined more contradictory of one's preconceived ideas than this procedure, and yet to the electrician it is perfectly simple. He makes the proper connections, plunges his iron into the water, and pretty soon the iron will begin to glow under water, and then to turn red or white hot, just as he desires it for working. When he gets through working the iron he may plunge it into the water again, and cool it with a "siss" as expeditiously as he could in any other tank of water. The curious forge is made as follows: The tank is of wood, or any other substance which will hold water, and not form an electrical conductor. One wire of the electric circuit passes to the bottom of the tank, where it is connected to a plate of metal which lies there. Over this plate water, preferably saturated with salt, fills the tank nearly to the top, and serves to conduct the current to whatever object is to be heated. Nothing could be better for this purpose, for the water naturally closes all about the object and fits it on every side. The other end of the current-conducting wire is fastened to the tongs or led to a metal framework at the edge of the tank, on which the tongs or the shank of a soldering iron lie when it is to be heated. The moment the object to be heated is plunged into the water a current passes from the water through the object, and at the same moment some of the water is decomposed by electrolytic action. The nitrogen of the water becomes electrified, and adheres to the object to be heated, and forms a film of gas, which separates the object completely from the water, while at the same time this gas forms such an obstruction to the passage of the electric current that the energy of the current is turned into heat. Electric forges of various designs are coming into use in place of fires for many of the blacksmith's operations.

New Building Material.

Under the name of "keramo"—according to Consul Warner, writing from Leipzig—a building material, composed principally of glass and manufactured at Penzig, Silesia, has lately been introduced in that region. As far as appears, this material is made from powdered glass waste, which is hardened by a special devitrifying process and combined by means of strong pressure; in this manner the transparency, brittleness and fragility of the glass are destroyed, but other prominent properties—extraordinary harness, stability against exposure to the weather, non-conduction of heat, non-inflammability, insensibility to oil, grease, acids, etc.—are retained in this new product. Experience shows that it can be used with good results for wainscotings in the interior of buildings, for covering floors in houses, kitchens, washing rooms, verandas, balconies, etc., for rough castings of walls exposed to the weather, as well as for staircases which are to be fireproof. The coloring depends upon the color of the glass used in the manufacture, and the advantages of the article appear to be fully established.

Freight Truck and Scales.

A truck by which a piece of baggage or freight can be weighed as it is moved has been designed by a Colorado inventor, who has been granted a patent on the same. The weighing device is fitted between the shafts of the truck, while the registering dial is located between the handles. A long arm points to the exact weight of any package which may be resting on the truck.



Discovery of Acetylene Gas.

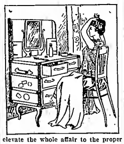
The facts relating to the discovery of acetylene gas, which are vouched for, are both novel and interesting. It appears, according to the Canadian Manufacturer, that, some years ago, Thomas L. Wilson, of St. Catharines, Ont., was smelting for metallurgical purposes. From time to time he used a good deal of rock salt in his furnace stock, and also limestone as a flux. Whenever these two materials were fused together, the slag produced by the intense electrical heat included a dirty grayish substance, wholly unlike anything else he had ever seen. For weeks he noticed this substance without giving more than passing attention to it, dumping it into the stream upon the bank of which he had built his furnace. One day a curious thing occurred and at a time when the pile of slag had become so large that its top rose above the surface of the water. A minute or two after dumping the slag as usual into the stream, some of it remaining above the water in a red hot state, the sizzling and steaming was followed by a bright burst of flame. The next time Mr. Wilson used rock salt and limestone the blaze again appeared over the slag, after it had been cast into the river, and, it being at night, he was much struck by the brilliant white light produced. The next time he had a batch of the queer grayish residue to dispose of he did not waste it, but saved it and poured over it some water for experiment. To his surprise there was no flame, but after puzzling a while over this feature, he held a lighted match over the pile, when instantly there was a white, glowing flame, and Wilson knew he had found something worth while. His discovery was acetylene gas.

A Railroad Up Mont Blanc.

The success of the mountain railways in the Alps has encouraged French engineers to plan a road from Chamonix to the top of Mont Blanc. For more than three miles the upper part of the road is to run through a gallery in the rock. The entire length is to be six and a quarter miles.

Trunk and Bureau.

A device which will save a great deal of time for the person compelled to travel is the bureau and dresser trunk, for which a patent has just been granted to an inventor of San Francisco. The interior consists of a series of drawers, revealed by dropping the front, which slides into an opening at the bottom. When the top is raised it is held in an upright position by a jointed hinge and a mirror presents itself. Two metal legs are supplied to elevate the whole affair to the proper height. Time is saved by the use of this, as there is no packing. When one wants to move the thing it is simply locked up and is ready for transportation.



Pile-Driving.

The power of water under pressure has often been applied to pile driving, but a simple application of the principle as described in the instructions to technical works for the Russian engineer corps is of interest. The pile to be driven is furnished on two opposite sides with longitudinal grooves of sufficient capacity to receive iron gas pipes, which may be of one and a half inch diameter, but contracted at the lower end like a hose pipe, and turned toward the iron-shod point of the pile. The upper ends of these pipes are connected by rubber tubing with a force pump, so that water under pressure, about seventy pounds to the square inch, can be projected into the soil at the base of the pile. It is said that under this treatment a pile will sink into the earth far more quickly than if driven in by the ordinary method. The pipes can be removed so as to do duty again and again as soon as the pile has sunk to the required depth.

A Ship's Rudder Recorder.

At a time when collisions and other accidents to ships are far more numerous than they should be, the invention of Mr. J. E. Liardet of a helm-recorder—which, actuated by the rudder, gives a history of the course steered and various deviations from that course—will meet with the attention which it deserves. The record is made by a pencil on a paper band which moves on a drum actuated by clockwork, and it will not only be useful in clearing up disputed points in case of collision, but it will also afford evidence of the competency of the man at the wheel. Some steersmen will keep a straight course far better than others, and this means a saving of time and—in the case of a steamship—of fuel. The new apparatus will enable a captain to pick out the best men for work at the wheel.

Recent Inventions.

Train orders can be delivered to the engineer while the train is under high speed by the use of a new order-holding device, which has a wire loop with a clamp on one side to grip the message, a socket being provided to hold the loop in position to be easily detached by the engineer.

A Canadian has patented a bulletin board which does away with the necessity for pasting the dispatches, the surfaces of the board being covered with a series of wires fitted on a frame at the sides, the dispatch being held on the board by drawing the frame back to stretch the wires in place.

A pocket cuspidor has been patented by a New Hampshire man, comprising a receptacle to fit in the pocket, with a telescoping tube fitting in the neck of the receptacle, a cap fitting tightly over the end of the tube, with a spring and cord arrangement to open the cap when the tube is drawn out.

Rubber hand stamps are made to print their letters more evenly by the use of a newly designed base, the connection between the handle and the typeholder being formed of a series of flexible rubber rings, which adjust themselves to equalize the pressure on the opposite end of the stamp.

A new method of mounting photographic prints has been patented by a Pennsylvanian, consisting of a mat having an opening of the desired size in the center, with a flap attached to the back of the mat, an adhesive border being formed around the flap to engage the print and hold it against the mat.

Watches are secured held on the handle bar of a bicycle by a new clamp which is formed of a split tube to engage the vertical portion of the bar, with a pair of fingers extending from the tube, between which the case rests, with a slotted finger for the stem, which is fitted with a lock to clamp the watch tightly.

Enjoying the Interval.

"Do you suppose your father will consent to our engagement, Clarissa?"

"I don't think he will; but we can enjoy courting while he is making up his mind."

SAVING INEBRIATES.

Any man who realizes that he is a victim of the drink habit or disease, who considers that it is not well for him to drink more, who desires to stop drinking but cannot do so, is the kind of a man who can be cured at the Minneapolis Keeley Institute.

He can be completely cured in four weeks, and every vestige of the craving will have been removed. Many men spend four weeks or more in a debauch or in recovering from one. No man ever leaves the Institute doubtful of his cure. A realizing sense of restoration comes to the most skeptical before the treatment is completed. He finds the craving gone, and that he is a man, in quickened thought, higher aspiration, re-establishment of will power and the general upbuilding of the entire physical man. Faith is unnecessary. The remedy does its work effectually and the man is cured. He has no more desire for whisky than he has for carbolic acid.

Men have gone to the Minneapolis Keeley Institute utterly skeptical, and because of their many failures to be cured by other means they doubted everything. But they had an earnest and an honest desire to be cured, and they were restored completely and permanently. The Keeley Cure is not a faith cure, but a scientific treatment, and hence faith is not an essential.

There is no sickness or unpleasantness about the Keeley Cure. The medicines act directly on the system and the patient begins to feel an improvement after the first administration of the remedy. His improvement is healthy and natural, until he feels that his youth has been given back to him. The four weeks is pleasantly passed in healthful enjoyment, and he returns home a cured man.

No other cure for inebriety has been discovered except the Keeley Cure. There are many shrewd impostors who will promise a cure, and who will sober a man up, only to have him return to his former habits again in a very short time. Such frauds should be severely punished.

Free literature, in a plain envelope, will be sent if inquirers will address the Keeley Institute, corner Tenth street south and Park avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

"It's rather strange," remarked the boarder, who was reading about Hanna and Croker abroad, "that our biggest politicians should leave the United States, even for a short time."

Don't Worry the Composer.

A musical organization, intending to give a performance of an oratorio, began to be alarmed about the probable cost of the production.

Accordingly, the director of the chorus said to the leader of the orchestra, who was a professional musician:

"We've got to keep down our expenses, and I thought I might get you to leave out the trombones. You know, they have only four measures in the entire oratorio, and if we leave them out we can save at least $15, and no one will be any the wiser."

The leader of the orchestra was extremely shocked. Assuming a tragic attitude, he said:

"That would be an insult to the composer!"

The chorus director reflected a moment, and then said, cheerfully:

"Oh, never mind him; he's dead!"—Collier's Weekly.

A Russian Woman Editor.

An accomplished young Russian, Anna Evremoff, is now in this country. She was at first an editor in her own country, but, committing the fatal mistake of having original opinions, her paper was suppressed, and she betook herself to the University of Heidelberg, and was the first woman ever granted a diploma in law at Leipsic. The story of her degree is that she was refused for the sufficient reason that she was a woman. One day the king of Saxony visited the university, and, noticing this one woman among the many men, accosted her, and, finding that she was a Russian, asked her if she was happy in his country, on which she told her story, with the effect that the king ordered that she immediately have her examination; and she was able to prove her right to a diploma, and received it.—The Argonaut.

No More "Round-the-world" Letters.

Though not so numerous as formerly, "round-the-world" letters continue to crop up at intervals. They always have a request to return to the writer, after they have made a tour of the world, a list of the principal cities through which they are desired to pass being also given, coupled with a modest request to each postmaster to stamp carefully the date of arrival at his office. Many years ago letters of this sort did make the circuit, and curious looking specimens they were, indeed, but postmasters in the United States are now prohibited from forwarding such matter.—Ladies' Home Journal.

EVERY woman suffering from any female trouble can be helped by Mrs. Pinkham. This statement is based on sound reasoning and an unrivalled record. Multitudes of America's women to-day bless Mrs. Pinkham for competent and common-sense advice. Write to her if you are ill. Her address is Lynn, Mass. Absolutely no charge is made for advice.

SAFE COUNSEL FOR SICK WOMEN

"I suffered seven years and would surely have died but for your help," writes MRS. GEO. BAINBRIDGE, Morea, Pa., to Mrs. Pinkham. "It is with pleasure I now write to inform you that I am now a healthy woman, thanks to your kind advice and wonderful medicine. I can never praise it enough. I was a constant sufferer from womb trouble, and leucorrhœa, had a continual pain in abdomen. Sometimes I could not walk across the floor for three or four weeks at a time. Since using your medicine, I now have no more bearing-down pains, or tired feelings, and am well and hearty. I shall recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to all my suffering friends as the greatest remedy for all female weakness."

MRS. SUSIE J. WEAVER, 1821 Callowhill St., Philadelphia, Pa., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—I had inflammation of the womb and painful menstruation, and by your advice I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Have taken four bottles and used one package of Sanative Wash and feel like a new woman. I thank you so much for what your medicine has done for me."

MRS. M. BAUMANN, 771 W. 21st St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "After two months' trial of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I can not say enough in praise for it. I was a very sick woman with womb trouble when I began its use, but now I am well."

Desperate Case.

"May I offer you a tract?"

The speaker was a mild, benevolent-looking man, considerably past middle age.

"I suppose you may," replied the elderly citizen whom he had addressed, "but I don't believe I can use it in my business."

"I can think of no occupation, my friend, that would be beyond the reach of those influences that tend to lead men to a better life. If you are following an unrighteous calling there is all the more need of such influences. May I ask what your business is?"

"My business, sir, is as respectable as yours. I am a musical instructor. In my time, sir," responded the other, with evident pride, "I have taught eighty-three mandolin orchestras."

"And you boast of it!" exclaimed the man with the tracts, passing his hand tremblingly across his forehead. "My friend, I—I have nothing in my valise, I fear, that can reach you!"

And he walked away, dazed—Chicago Tribune.

The Inquisitive Youngster.

The old man was reading the paper on the front steps and little Reggie was playing around.

"Pa," said little Reggie, "did you learn to pull wool when you were a little boy?"

"Um—what's that?—uh—huh—lemme read."

"And, say, pa, is mamma's hair wool?" went on Reggie.

"Uh—huh—run on and play now, kid, and lemme read this paper."

"But, pa, when you pull it, do you mix it?" persisted the innocent little love of a boy, with a crafty, far-away twinkle in his off eye.

"Hey? What's that? What the dickens did you say?" inquired the old man, sharply dropping his paper.

"Oh, nothin'," said little Reggie. "Only I heard ma tellin' sis, a while ago, that if you think you're pullin' the wool over her eyes, you're mixed, that's all, and—"—Washington Post.

Danger in Color.

The number of soldiers slain in battle depends a great deal upon the color of their uniform. The more flashy and conspicuous the helmet and jacket the better the target, and, consequently, the greater the mortality. Red attracts the eye most readily, and twelve men wearing that color are killed to seven in rifle green, or six in blue, or five in either brown, blue-gray or gray.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS FREE.

One of the Grandest Offers Ever Made.

The first five persons procuring the Endless Chain Starch Book from their grocer will each obtain one large 10c package of "Red Cross" starch, one large 10c package of "Hubinger's Best" starch, two Shakespeare pictures printed in twelve beautiful colors, as natural as life, or one Twentieth Century Girl calendar, the finest of its kind ever printed, all absolutely free. All others procuring the Endless Chain Starch Book will obtain from their grocer two large 10c packages of starch for 5c, and the beautiful premiums which are being given away. This offer is only made for a short time to further introduce the famous "Red Cross" starch and the celebrated "Hubinger's Best" cold water starch. "Red Cross" laundry starch is something entirely new, and is without doubt the greatest invention of the twentieth century. It has no equal, and surpasses all others. It has won for itself praise from all parts of the United States. It has superseded everything heretofore used, or known to science in the laundry art. It is made from wheat, rice and corn, and is chemically prepared upon scientific principles by Mr. J. C. Hubinger, an expert in the laundry profession, who has had twenty-five years' practical experience in fancy laundering, and who is the first successful and original inventor of all fine grades of starch in the United States. If you would have the best, ask for "Red Cross" and "Hubinger's Best," which are the finest starches on the market today.

The jobbing houses all handle it, the retail grocer has it on his shelves, you find it in all the homes, while the careful housewife has adorned the walls of the home with the beautiful Shakespeare pictures which are being given away in introducing "Red Cross" and "Hubinger's Best" starch.

The Interruptions Ceased.

A clergyman who had been greatly annoyed by the continued interruption to which he had been subjected during the delivery of his sermon, stopped abruptly, and, looking round at the congregation, spoke as follows:

"Some time ago, while delivering a sermon, I was frequently interrupted by a gentleman sitting in front of me who gesticulated, moved about and whispered to his neighbors, and at last I addressed to him a sharp reprimand for his unseemly conduct. When the service was over, my clerk in the vestry, mentioned the matter to me, and asked if I was ignorant of the fact that the person addressed was an idiot. I have, since then, always hesitated to reprimand any of my own congregation for interrupting me, in fear that I may be addressing an idiot, who is not responsible for his actions."

Good Sponges.

Although the difference between a good and a bad sponge is very marked, but few people seem able to appreciate it. The first requisite of a good sponge is that it should be dark in color. The beautiful yellow sponges commonly seen in druggists' windows are a delusion and a snare. The natural color is light to medium brown, and the yellow sponges have been bleached by a vitriol bath, which destroys their elasticity and makes them wear out much sooner.

Only One Explanation.

"What are you hunting for, Horace? You act as if you expected to find an item in your paper that isn't there."

"Well, you've guessed it, Josephine. He must have been taking a day off."—Chicago Times-Herald.

An After-Battle Orator.

"There is no denying that my recent speech has made a very favorable impression," remarked the German emperor.

"Very true," answered the statesman. "I don't wonder that your majesty seems slightly anxious for a small war now and then, considering the chance it might afford you for doing full justice to your powers as an after-battle orator."—Washington Star.

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Smut of Corn.

To the Farmers' Review: What farmer does not know corn-smut, that cankerous growth that appears in his cornfields every summer? But what farmer calculates the damage this disease does? The disease is not confined to the ears alone, but lessens the yield of the whole plant thus affected. This fungus does not gain access to the plant in the same manner as oat smut enters oats. The spores of corn-smut germinate in the dew upon the plants and finds entrance to the tissues of the part in a very short time. Once within, they grow with great rapidity and often produce the smut boils in three weeks from the time they first enter. A few days after these boils are produced they break and give their seed-bodies or spores to the wind, which carries them to new plants.

The most economical method of fighting this disease is, to cut off and burn all these smut masses before the grey wall has broken. If taken at this time the chance of spreading the spores is prevented. The operation may be done in the early part of the season when the corn is being cultivated, a box or basket being carried upon the cultivator to hold the growths removed. After the crop is laid by a boy by visiting the field once a week or ten days may easily keep the disease in hand. When eaten, the vitality of the seed-bodies is not destroyed. It will therefore be well to have as little smut in the fodder as possible. And this remark applies to stover and ensilage. The manure in which the spores fall seems to assist in their germination and to carry infection to the field. For this reason, also, have as little go to the stalls and feeding pens as possible. Common opinion says that corn-smut produces abortion in cows. Such, however, is not the case, as has been proved by experiment with a number of pregnant and milking cows fed excessive doses of the growths. The general health and the milk yield were constant and regular throughout the test. And if animals could stand these excessive doses it is hardly likely that the quantities obtained by cows in ordinary cases could be harmful. The smut contains no ergotine nor other poisonous alkaloid, but resembles coarse fodders in composition. The cattle treated ate it readily and in preference to grain. It seems safe, therefore, to conclude that cattle under ordinary conditions will not suffer from eating this material.

American Meat in Scotland.

The public health act of 1897 applicable to Scotland contains provisions in regard to meat inspection which are more severe than the provisions of the public health act of 1875 applicable to England. The Scottish law not only gives the local sanitary officer full control over slaughterhouses, but also empowers inspectors to enter premises within the district of the local authority at any time, search any cart or vehicle or any barrow, basket, bag, or parcel, and examine any animal, alive or dead, or article intended for human food. If it appears to him to be unfit for human food, he may take it away to have it dealt with by a justice. The justice may condemn it and order it to be destroyed, and impose a penalty on the person to whom the condemned article belonged or in whose possession or on whose premises it was found. The department of sanitary and market inspection in Edinburgh was constituted on its present basis, under the public health act of 1897, in May, 1898. During the past year, not only have the slaughterhouses been under careful supervision, but inspectors have paid more than 6,000 visits to the butchers' and other shops. The quantity of meat seized or given up as unfit for human food was 149,163 pounds. One Canadian carcass was seized. Not a pound of American meat was condemned. Inasmuch as the butchers of Edinburgh handle a large amount of American chilled meat—the quantity of American chilled beef alone consumed in Edinburgh (not including Leith) averages 31,500 pounds per week—this evidence of its wholesomeness is noteworthy.

RUFUS FLEMING.

Varieties of Wheat.

The comparison of new and standard varieties of wheat by the Pennsylvania State College Agricultural Experiment Station has been continued through the present season. The six varieties giving the highest yield were.

	Bu.
Royal Red Clawson	26.87
Forty-Fold or Gold Corn	26.80
Dawson's Golden Chaff	26.43
Century	25.71
Rochester Red	25.40
Reliable	25.14

Twenty-two varieties were tested, the average yield being 22.02 bushels. There was an average difference of 3.02 bushels between the smooth and bearded varieties in favor of the smooth. About one-fourth of the grain was winter killed, which accounts for the small average yield, it being only about two-thirds of our usual crop. The average yield of straw was 2,450 pounds and the average weight per bushel 62.04 pounds. Turkish Red was the poorest variety, yielding 15.37 bushels of grain and 1,590 pounds of straw. The yield of ten varieties that have been tested for nine and ten years show no tendency to run out except a slight decrease in the yield of straw.

Sawdust Bedding.

Scarcity of straw has for a year or so forced me to use saw shavings to the animals, says a writer in Farm and Fireside. I confess that for a long time I have been prejudiced against sawdust and shaving manure. At present I am very glad that I had to make the trial, for I can say that I am taking more comfort in the stables than when I used nothing but straw. Horses and cattle, and hogs, too, while bedded on shavings are always clean in the morning, and that is more than I could say of them when they were bedded on straw. In short, I have learned to like this material for the purpose, and shall continue to use the shavings as long as I can have them at a reasonable price. In the winter I can get them loose most of the time for the hauling. Now I am paying 15 cents a bale for them. Shavings are clean and tend to cleanliness. That much is settled in my mind for good. It means a good deal, too, so far as the cows and milk and butter are concerned. We want these things as clean as we possibly can. The only question about which there could be a possible dispute is whether sawdust or shaving manure is as good for the land as manure from animals bedded with straw.

Dairy Products of the Pacific Coast.

The great increase in the quality of butter and cheese in the Pacific Northwest has attracted a good deal of attention of late and has been much discussed by the newspapers, says the Oregon Agriculturist. It is believed by some of the papers that we are not producing as large an amount of dairy products now as two or three years ago. This is an error. The value of the output of dairy products in Oregon, Washington and Idaho, for 1898, will be much greater than ever before. The increase in the consumption of dairy products in the Pacific Northwest in the past two years has been immense. Alaska and the Klondike call for a large amount of butter. The growth of commerce has increased the quantity required to supply steamships and sailing vessels. The greatest increase in consumption, however, has been in the principal cities of the Northwest. These have all been increasing in population and at the same time increasing the quantity of dairy products used per person.

The Locust Saw-Fly.

In this column we illustrate a locust saw-fly. A report of the United States entomological commission says: Eating the leaves of the black locust is found a small, soft, green worm, two-fifths of an inch long, with twenty legs and a brownish head. It appears in Washington, D. C., late in August and remains until October. It transforms into a dark-brown oval cocoon, and two or three weeks later issues as a saw-fly nearly one-quarter of an inch long, of a dirty-yellow color, with a squarish black patch on the top of the head. The sides and front of the thorax are black, and there is a transverse band on top of each abdominal segment.

This saw-fly inserts its irregularly semi-ellipsoid eggs in a crescent-shaped cut made in the under surface of the leaf by the saw. In a few days the larva hatches. Professor Comstock thinks there are two and possibly three broods in a season, and that the insect may hibernate both in the adult and pupa stages. The head of the worm is amber-colored rather than brownish. The scientific name of this fly is Nematus similaris.

Dip the Sheep.

There is but one effectual cure for sheep scab and that is the use of an efficient dip, says an exchange. If the farmer will not go to the trouble of dipping his sheep twice at an interval of from six to twelve days and put them on clean grounds where scabby sheep have never been in the interval and after the second dipping that man had better sell his sheep and quit the business. The scab can be thoroughly cured in two weeks' time if the owner will implicitly follow directions. It cannot be cured in a year or any other length of time if he will not do it. Therefore, it is simply a question with a man who has scabby sheep to dip or not. The man who keeps scabby sheep willfully and after shearing time should be regarded as a menace to good farming in his neighborhood, and the public sentiment should compel him either to dip or ship his flock to the slaughter and quit business. There are some diseases for which no cure can be suggested.

Animal Excreta.—The excreta, solid and liquid, of a horse in a year, averages 20,000 pounds of an ox, 36,000 pounds; of a cow, 30,000 pounds; of a full grown hog, 6,000 pounds; of a sheep, 1,200 pounds. A moderate value of these manures is $3 per thousand pounds for the horse, $1.25 for the ox or cow, $2.25 for the hog, if grain fed, and $3 for the sheep. Total annual value: Horse, $40; ox, $45; cow, $37.50; hog, $13.50; sheep, $3.60. Of course, all these estimates are subject to variations, owing to different conditions, such as food, size of animals, etc.

The Worden Grape.—The Worden to my mind is the best grape for home use. It is an enlarged Concord, which it closely resembles. More juicy and with less pulp. It ripens a few days before the Concord and is better flavored. It is not so vigorous in its growth as the Concord, but bears quite young, and if properly trimmed the bunches are quite large. The skin is not so thick as the Concord, and consequently not a good shipper. Concord is so well known that it needs no introduction, being indispensable.—Major Holsinger.

MAKING A FAILURE.

RULES FOR PEOPLE WHO SEEM TO BE BENT THEREON.

Women Especially Addressed—Directions for Spoiling One's Domestic, Social and Business Life—No Consideration for Others a Strong Factor.

It is the fashion just now to instruct others in every matter, however simple. Here are a few hints on the art of failure. We often hear people say that it is easy to fail; but it is not easy to do so completely and artistically. Let us, then, for a few moments study how to fail in the different roles of life, says the Philadelphia Times. As an individual: Want everything that other people have, and persuade yourself that you care for nothing that is yours. Never want the same thing for two days together; a change of grievance is beneficial.

As a wife: Keep a sharp eye on Jack's faults; never allow him to hint that you have any. Always tell him of every vexation or ailment that has teased you during the day, and, if possible, begin the recital as soon as he gets inside the door; it will distract his mind from business worries and prevent him from selfishly bothering you with any of them. Remind him now and then that you made a great sacrifice when you married him. Impress upon him that it is ignoble to be attached to creature comforts. Taboo smoking, male friends and clubs. If he does not agree at once with any opinion or desire of yours, mention it again and again—and yet again. The male mind is obtuse. Should he appear to object to the repetition, declare (with sobs) that he hates to hear you speak and that his conduct proves incontrovertibly that he wishes you dead. Above all, shun logic. A logical person never yet made a respectable failure.

As a mother: Teach the boys and girls that home is the only possible place in the world; that is to say, never let them have any pleasure derived from outside. Discourage the visits of their friends and prevent them from visiting anywhere. Tell them frequently that young people should not look for pleasures other than those induced by attendance on their relations. Suppress, with a firm hand, all noise. Explain that games and music make you nervous, that fancy work is frivolous, that smoking is a deadly sin and that the reading of all books not specially selected by you is undesirable. Never sympathize with young people's fads and fancies or encourage day-dreams, but question them minutely about all their concerns and doings, especially about any matters upon which they seem unwilling to talk—secretiveness is so bad for the young. When they do well take it as a matter of course, but never neglect to point out a piece of forgetfulness or a mistake. And reproach them frequently for not loving you as much as they should; that sort of thing stimulates affection.

As a marriageable maiden: Let the men see that you are very anxious for a proposal. Smile at them widely, but snap at their sisters and fawn when their mothers call without them. Talk noisily, especially when your partner is a quiet sort of man. Pick the other girls to pieces. Giggle when you are not chattering. Neglect no opportunity of getting yourself talked about. Above all, don't be natural, but aim constantly at effect. If you have a small foot, stick it out incessantly for people to fall over; that will attract attention to it.

As a social factor: Gush at big people. As soon as you have "got to know" Mrs. B., drop Mrs. A., who was your last season's catch. Accept all the invitations you can get, and pay them off with a big crush reception once a year. Always take an extra girl to people's dances. Cultivate a restless, anxious manner and a hungry eye. Snap up small attentions with the avidity of a sparrow picking up crumbs. Talk your scandal and make a point of telling people your social grievances. Ask questions of all kinds and always repeat what you hear. Borrow people's maids and menus and copy their gowns.

As a journalist: Always know better than your editor. Should he disagree with you, argue every point with him. Write about what interests you; never mind the fads of the public of the moment. Never cram into one sentence an idea that could be expressed in six; let the world know that your vocabulary is large. Work when you are in the humor; at other times keep the office waiting; that will teach it to value you. Fill up spare moments by writing long letters to the editor.

Remedy for Lynching.

"Don't lynch the negroes—it is wrong and lawless," exclaimed Senator Tillman, "but hang the Tolberts!" Tillman's point of view resembles that of the Kentuckian who explained to an Englishman that all southerners do not approve of lynch law, but on the contrary, many are opposed to it. "In my country," said the Kentuckian, "a number of our best people got together and decided that the lynching business had to stop, and, you may be sure, sir, it did stop!" "How did you do it?" asked the Englishman. "Why, sir," replied the colonel, "the next time they lynched a nigger, sir, our prominent citizens went forth, sir, and caught the ringleaders, sir, and strung them up."—Kansas City Star.

Select the Best.

Some Australian birds lay their eggs in black sand, as if aware of its superior power of absorbing heat; others select the neighborhood of hot volcanic springs, whose warmth plays an important part in the hatching. The mound builders collect heaps of earth and leaves as much as eighteen feet high and thirty feet in diameter, and in this hotbed their eggs are hatched.

Does Your Baking Powder Contain Alum?

Prof. Geo. F. Barker, M. D., University of Penn.: "All the constituents of alum remain (from alum baking powders) in the bread, and the alum itself is reproduced to all intents and purposes when the bread is dissolved by the gastric juice in the process of digestion. I regard the use of alum as highly injurious."

Dr. Alonzo Clark: "A substance (alum) which can derange the stomach should not be tolerated in baking powder."

Prof. W. G. Tucker, New York State Chemist: "I believe it (alum) to be decidedly injurious when used as a constituent of food articles."

Prof. S. W. Johnson, Yale College: "I regard their (alum and soluble alumina salts) introduction into baking powders as most dangerous to health."

In view of such testimony as this, every care must be exercised by the housewife to exclude the over and over condemned cheap, alum baking powders from the food.

Baking powders made from cream of tartar, which is highly refined grape acid, are promotive of health, and more efficient. No other kind should be used in leavening food. Royal Baking Powder is the highest example of a pure cream of tartar powder.

Facts About Fans.

The use of the fan originated in China, and sprang from the following incident: A royal princess, very beautiful, was assisting at the feast of lanterns, her face covered with a mask, as usual. The excessive heat compelled her to remove it, and in order to guard her features from the common gaze, she moved it quickly to and fro in front of her face, thus simultaneously hiding her charms and cooling her brow. The idea was at once adopted throughout the kingdom.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. THE PEOPLE THEMSELVES

WILL FURNISH THE SINEWS OF WAR FOR THE FIGHT OF 1900.

Innovation in Political Campaigning. Corporate Wealth to Be Ignored, and the Dollars of the People Will Make Next Year's Campaign—The National Democratic Committee Takes Up the Work in Minnesota—Let Every Man Pledge His Mite—Other National Political Points—State Political Affairs. Complete Roster of Those Executing the Game and Fish Laws—Twin City and State Capital Points and Gossip.

Reform Press Bureau.
ST. PAUL, Oct. 9, 1899.

The presence in Minnesota of Hon. A. W. Thomas, Chicago, accredited representative of the ways and means of the Democratic National Committee, is a matter of the utmost importance to the reform cause. It is the first move in Minnesota for the battle of 1900.

Mr. Thomas has covered large sections of the Northwest and the Pacific coast, has met with cordial interest everywhere. There is no time nor space here to say more than that he is ably carrying out the National Committee's plan originally known as the Harvey plan, for raising campaign money among the people themselves. It is the dollar a month subscription plan, which has thus far proven a success.

In this work there is the same cooperation of all the allied forces which fought together in '96, and which won the fight in Minnesota last year, as there is every reason to expect there will be in the great battle next year. All the possible resources that the people can command will be needed, as the trusts and the combines will pour out their millions against the peoples' cause at the command of Hanna, as they did in 1896.

During the present week Mr. Thomas is prosecuting the work in the Twin Cities, after which he will visit the chief cities of the state. No words can too strongly commend his work to the people. We bespeak for Mr. Thomas a cordial reception by all friends of the cause.

The head of this work, as at present organized, is Hon. S. B. Cook of Missouri, who is in charge of the ways and means work, with office at 1014 Unity Building, Chicago. He succeeded Mr. Harvey, who is out in the field, still in the work, his enemies to the contrary notwithstanding.

In organizing the Minnesota work Mr. Thomas would emphasize the fact that co-operation with all the reform forces is earnestly aimed at. The national committee and its sub-committees would act with the state comittees, and these in turn with their local or other co-operating forces. In this way only, dropping all partisan distinction, but relying on the earnest support of the people themselves, can we hope to succeed in the work or to win.

"Sharp Eye on Gold," is a Twin City headline of a gold paper. Yes, sharp eye on the Wall street panic, where, under the gold standard cornerings of the money market, money has been as high as FORTY PER CENT during the past week. Who is there who does not know that with free coinage a corner in money would be impossible?

"Stand and and deliver" is the trust demand on almost every solitary business in the land, in some one or more lines. The American Anti-Trust league recently had representatives go through New York manufacturers, as to the effect of trusts on the commodities, with the result that of 500 house visited, not one was found WHERE ANY COMMODITY CONTROLLED BY TRUSTS HAD BEEN REDUCED IN PRICE, but each and every other had been increased all the way FROM FIVE TO ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY PER CENT. The list, given alphabetically, included brooms, envelopes, enameled ware, builders' hardware, iron beds, copper wire, chairs, furniture, flour, glass and glassware, iron products of all kinds, iron wire, especially barb wire, nails, steel goods, knit goods, photo paper, plumbers supplies, rubber goods, ranges, shoes, spools cotton, salt, stoves, tinware, wall paper, etc., through a great list.

Oh, yes; trusts reduce prices, in a horn. Reduce them when necessary to kill some concern that holds out of the combine, but as soon as the competitor is strangled up go the prices and out go the men and salesmen that can be dispensed with, out into the cold, cold world. Down with the trusts.

Say. The Thirteenth's home.

Let this be perfectly understood. If President McKinley discovers the lack of enthusiasm running through the people, while in the Northwest, he must not charge it to lack of respect for the high office he holds, but should know that it is divided between disgust at the pin headed managers of the affair who could not refrain from showing partisanship in its management, and belief that McKinley is dead wrong in his Philippine policy.

And make no mistake. It is the reception to the Thirteenth that is the feature of the occasion, and not the presence of Mr. McKinley.

"McLean will be the next governor of Ohio," writes a well posted Ohioan on the Buckeye situation. United labor seems entirely on our side, owing, as the same authority states, to Republican and Democratic attitude in the great Hocking Valley strike. McKinley, as governor, sent carloads of soldiers to break down the union, while John R. McLean sent carloads of flour and groceries to relieve the destitute.

Hon. William Banquet Baldwin, Minneapolis, has his plans for the Bryan banquet next winter already under way. It is proposed to gather all the leading Democrats of the whole Northwest at the biggest banquet affair ever produced in the United States. And Mr. Sanquet Baldwin is the man to do it.

It seems, from an unreported incident of the Chicago trust convention, that J. C. Hanley, of Ours, brought down the house in the course of his speech. He said that he had had a two hours talk with McKinley about trusts, and Mc told him that the trusts should be under control, and then said that if the people would only have confidence enough to return him to power, "he would father the necessary laws."

Roars of incredulous laughter greeted this statement, and a voice called out to Mr. Hanley, "Why doesn't he do it now?" And then they all laughed some more. In fact the people nearly all know when to laugh. McKinley and the Republican party controlling the trusts? 'Twould make almost any animal giggle.

Appeal to Reason: "There is one thing only to do. The public (government) must erect competing plants and employ the people and sell the goods to the people at cost. Against such stores and factories the trusts will be helpless."

Our friends should not be misled as to results of taxation reform in the corporation franchise tax got through the board of equalization by Governor Lind. The situation was that, since the decision opening the way was only made in April, there could be no application of the principle until it had been before the state board. The only case to which the application could be made, as a test one, was the Lowry street railway properties, concerning the just taxation of which the friends of taxation reform had made so long and so consistent a struggle in Ramsey county. All that could be done by the governor and the board was to apply the principle in the selected case. This having been done it will be the duty of the county assessors next year, under instructions of the state auditor, to list each and every corporation in the state applying the franchise tax principle.

It will go without saying that if this be faithfully done the result will be that millions on millions of corporation capital will be brought to their just burdens, that have hitherto entirely escaped taxation.

That will be a reform record worth going before the people on in 1900 in this state, should there have been nothing else.

The record that is being rounded up by the new game and fish department, at the head of which is Hon. John Beutner, executive agent, makes of interest the list of those officials associated with Mr. Beutner in such successful discharge of duty. It is the universal testimony of those in best position to judge, that the state's fish and game department was never before so efficiently conducted. There may be less of daily comment or "puffs" of the office, but out in the field where the work is being done, it is managed most efficiently, as shown in daily official and other reports.

Fish and Game Commission:

A. T. Williams, president, Minneapolis.

Jacob Banz, second vice president, St. Paul.

W. W. Ward, secretary, Fairmont.

A. L. Cramb, treasurer, St. Cloud.

MONEY FOR THE WAR

PROVISIONAL EXPENDITURE OF A LARGE SUM SANCTIONED.

Chancellor of the Exchequer Says £3,000,000 May Be Used—Government Will Not Exceed This Without Authority From Parliament, Which Will Be Asked for £8,000,000—Preparations for the Dispatch of Troops Steadily and Satisfactorily Proceeding—Report That Kruger Demanded Withdrawal of Troops From Frontier Lacks Confirmation.

London, Oct. 6.—The most interesting announcement in connection with the Transvaal crisis yesterday was that the chancellor of the exchequer, Rt. Hon. Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, has already sanctioned the provisional expenditure of £3,000,000, and that the government will not exceed that limit without authority from parliament, which will be asked to vote a sum not exceeding £8,000,000. A member of the war board yesterday said arrangements were complete to insure the safety of the route from Durban to Laing's Nek, so that large bodies of troops may, on disembarkation, be rapidly forwarded up the country to the frontier without confusion or crowding at the base. It is stated that the war office has decided that the army corps for service in South Africa shall be much larger than originally estimated and that it now consists of over 40,000 men. The preparations for the dispatch of this force, including the chartering of the big ocean liners, is steadily and satisfactorily proceeding. The press association learns that the dispatch drawn up by the cabinet on Friday was still unsent up to last evening. On the other hand, a telegram from Brussels gives from a "well informed source" the news that Dr. Leyds, the representative in Europe of the South African republic, has received confirmation of the report that President Kruger has to Great Britain demanding the withdrawal of the British forces from the frontier within forty-eight hours, and that it was delivered on Monday. This report, however, still lacks confirmation. The confidence of the military authorities at the Cape is shown by a dispatch received from Cape Town which states that at a conference between the military authorities there and Gen. Sir George Stewart White, who will command the British forces in Natal, and Gen. Sir Frederick Walker, held to consider the situation, Gen. White expressed himself as confident that the British would be able to present a force sufficient to repel any attack. Gen. White, who intended to go to Durban on board a warship, has now, in order to save time, abandoned the idea, and will go by train. A line steamer left Lourenzo Marquez, Delagoa bay, yesterday with 1,200 rond refugees. Large numbers were left behind, and all trains are crowded with those taking part in the exodus from the transvaal. A dispatch from Volksrust says the Boer camp on the Natal border now comprises 8,000 men and is growing daily. The camp breathes a religious fervor. The commissariat arrangements, the dispatch says, are defective. One of the largest corps lay in the veldt without shelter during a heavy thunder storm. Commandant Gen. Joubert is momentarily expected to assume command of the Boer forces.

Hopes for Peace.

London, Oct. 6.—A telegram from Johannesburg says that State Secretary Feltz of the Transvaal informed a correspondent of the Standard and Diggers' News that the proclamation of martial law is being delayed. In Cape Town the opinion prevails that the delay of the Boers in assuming the offensive points to a willingness on the part of the Transvaal government to allow political counsel to override military ardor, and there is therefore still hope that the Afrikanders' efforts for peace will prevail. Lord James O. Hereford, writing to a correspondent, expresses the fear that the maintenance of peace is now impossible.

Fighting Has Commenced.

Bloemfontein, Oct. 6. — The government publishes a telegram from Boshof stating that the British forces crossed the border and fighting has commenced. Another telegram says that troops have crossed the border, but that no fighting has occurred. The government discredits the report.

May Try to Fix It Up.

London, Oct. 6.—The Daily Chronicle's correspondent at Cape Town, telegraphing under date of Tuesday, says: "For the first time in several months J. H. Hofmeir, the Afrikander leader in Cape Colony, and Sir Alfred Milnor, British high commissioner for South Africa and governor of Cape Colony, met yesterday in conference. An unconfirmed report is in circulation that Mr. Hofmeir has been intrusted with an official mission to Pretoria."

Transvaal Grabs Gold.

London, Oct. 6.—A special dispatch from Pretoria says the Transvaal government has seized gold to the value of £300,000, which is now lodged in the state mint. The government, the dispatch adds, will indemnify the banks to which the gold is consigned.

Urge American Mediation.

New York, Oct. 6.—Many signatures were added yesterday to the petition which was sent on Tuesday by the World to President McKinley asking him to offer the friendly services of the United States in mediation between Great Britain and the Transvaal and the Orange Free State.

Will Break Up the Revolution.

Lima, Peru, Oct. 6. — It is reported that Gen. Careeres will publish a manifesto announcing his retirement from participation in the revolution now in progress. This step, it is asserted, will mean the complete collapse of the insurgent movement.

Gov. Scofield Not a Candidate.

N. P. CAR BURNED.

A Serious Loss to the Land and Immigration Department.

Neillsville, Wis., Special.—The advertising car of the Northern Pacific railway, containing specimen of mineral, cereal and fruit products of the West, was consumed by fire here. It contained also many rare specimens of animals, which it will be impossible to replace. The loss is supposed to be in the neighborhood of $75,000, and is insured. The porter barely escaped from the burning car and lost all his personal effects.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

Minnesota Soldier Boys in a Collision.

Medford, Ore., Oct. 8—The presence of mind of the engineer saved the second section of the special Minnesota train, carrying the St. Paul battalion of the Thirteenth Minnesota, from getting into a ditch a mile and a half south of Medford at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The escape was so narrow that had the engine gone three feet further before stopping the train would have been wrecked. The train left Ashland, Ore., behind schedule time, having stopping orders at that station for dinner at 3 o'clock. The engineer was running to make up time and had reached a speed of forty miles an hour when, on rounding a curve, he saw a handcar loaded with sand. It was impossible to stop the train before striking the car. At once the engineer whistled wildly for the men in charge of the car to tip it off the track, but the men lost their wits, and then the engineer put on air and tried to reversel the engine, but without avail, for the locomotive struck the car and smashed it into bits. The pilot wheels and head drivers went off the track and bumped along the ties for 150 feet, and when the train finally stopped the engine was on a trestle over the dry bed of a creek with the pilot wheels hanging over the ends of the ties. Another three feet and the engine would have into the ditch fifty feet below and would have dragged half the train with it. The fireman jumped from the engine when he saw a collision was inevitable, but the engineer stuck to his post.

Two men from Company C—Frank J. Kelty and Walter S. Elvidge—were riding on the cowcatcher of the engine. When they discovered that a collision was coming Elvidge jumped and Kelly climbed on the steam box in an effort to climb into the cab of the engine, but when the car was struck sand was thrown against him and he was knocked into the ditch. Kelly was picked up near where the engine stopped. He had a slight cut on the forehead which Dr. Ritchie fixed with a strip of court plaster, but he was otherwise uninjured. When a party started back to find Elvidge he was running to catch up. He was not even scratched.

The accident caused much excitement on the train and the men crowded off. When they reached the engine they decided that the reason for the escape was that the number of the engine—1360—was the regiment's lucky number. It was the only incident of the trip and served to break the monotony. The accident will not delay the arrival of the regiment home, for the time lost will be deducted from the time which is to be spent in Portland.

DROVE REBELS OUT

GEN SCHWAN'S COLUMN DOES SOME GOOD WORK.

Cavite Viejo and Novelta Occupied by American Troops After Two Sharp Fights—Americans Sustain Considerable Loss in One of the Fights—Marines and Naval Forces Co-operate With the Troops—Scouts Sweep the Swamps and Thickets, Driving the Insurgents Before Them.

Novelta, Island of Luzon, Oct. 10. — Gen. Schwan's column, consisting of the Thirteenth infantry, a battalion of the Fourteenth, two troops of cavalry, Cap. Reilly's battery of the Fifth artillery and Lowe's scouts, advanced from Bacoor yesterday morning and occupied Cavite Viejo and Novelta. The American loss was three officers and nine privates wounded, one of the officers being mortally hurt. The loss of the enemy is unknown, but the bodies of three Filipinos were seen. There were two sharp fights near Novelta. Lowe's scouts first encountered the enemy near Cavite Viejo and soon put them to flight, continuing their advance. Capt. Saffold's battalion of the Thirteenth regiment, with the two companies of the Fourteenth and a number of Tagalo scouts, Capt. McGrath, commanding the troops from the Fourth cavalry, and Capt. Reilly and his battery, came upon the enemy in a strongly intrenched position on the road between Cavite Viejo and Novelta. A fight lasting half an hour followed, resulting in the enemy being driven back. The American forces sustained considerable loss in this engagement, the men being shot from trenches and shacks along the road. The column then passed on to Novelta, which they found deserted. The marines and naval forces co-operated with the troops. The gunboats Wheeling, Petrel and Callao lay off the shore near Novelta and threw shells into that town and Santa Cruz for an hour, preparing the way for the marines to land. Two battalions, consisting of 450 marines, under Col. Elliott, advanced along the peninsula from Cavite to Novelta. The only way was by a narrow road through swamps. A mile beyond the marines' outpost the column was suddenly received with across the road. A flank movement was executed and the insurgents were driven from the trenches, the marines wading through rice fields in turning the flank of the enemy, who retreated to the strong sand forts across the creek, dividing the peninsula, destroying the bridge across the stream. The marines waded through more rice fields, forded the river in water to their shoulders and carried the forts, meeting with feeble resistance, the first encounter having disheartened the enemy. Squads were sent to Novelta and burned the town and the huts along the road from which the enemy commenced the firing. There a junction was formed with the scouts who had been sweeping the swamps and thickets. Thence the marines returned to Cavite thoroughly exhausted. Lieut. Wynne, with a three pounder, did good execution during the advance. Gen. Lawton was not in personal command of the movement. Capt. Cowles' battalion of the Fourth Infantry, while reconnoitering, found a body of several hundred insurgents near San Nicolas. After a brisk fight lasting three-quarters of an hour, the enemy was driven off. In this engagement the American casualties were four men slightly wounded. Six of the enemy were killed, but the number of wounded is not known. The bad condition of the roads made the progress of the artillery slow.

TEN LIVES ARE LOST

THEY MEET DEATH ON A BURNING STEAMER.

Steamer Nutmeg State Catches Fire in Long Island Sound and Ten Persons Are Either Burned to Death or Drowned—Flames Spread Rapidly and Envelop the Steamer Before the Passengers Could Be Rescued—Steamer Is Beached and Burns to the Water's Edge—Several People Injured.

New York, Oct. 16.—The Bridgeport line steamer Nutmeg State was burned in Long Island sound, off Sands Point, L. I., at sunrise Saturday morning and ten persons were burned to death or drowned. Most of the passengers who escaped suffered nothing more than shock from immersion in the chilly water, and only four persons were sent to the hospital. The steamer was run to the beach at the outbreak of the flames and burned to the water's edge.

The Nutmeg State, with over a hundred persons on board, bound for Connecticut towns, was discovered on fire about 5:30 o'clock, when she was within a few miles of Sands Point, L. I. The flames were in the bow between the forward cabin and the donkey engine room. The fire was on the main deck, and it seemed to be a small fire, so Capt. Brooks, not wishing to needlessly alarm the passengers, ordered the crew to work as quickly and as quietly as possible with buckets and hose. For about twenty minutes the flames did not seem to be dangerous, and the men appeared to have them under control. Suddenly they burst into a furious blaze amidships. Baggagemaster Samuel Jaynes was detached from the fire fighters and sent to alarm the passengers and all the members of the crew who were in the forward part of the boat. He ran through the passage ways on several decks, shouting to the passengers and the sleeping crew. He remained amidships, crying out warnings until he was forced by the flames and stifling smoke to jump overboard. The passengers in various stages of frenzy rushed from the state rooms to the upper deck. Life preservers were given them and many of the men assisted in putting them on the women and children. By this time a considerable section of the boat was burning fiercely and the people forward were completely cut off from communication with those on the after part of the boat. This left the people on the rear portion in a perilous position as the life boats in the amidship section were surrounded by flames, and there were few people to give aid. As the flames continued to spread both forward and aft the pilot headed the steamer at full speed for the beach at Sands Point. The drafts swept the fire toward the rear end of the boat. The passengers in that portion of the boat went as far back on the deck as possible, but were enveloped in black smoke and the flames were leaping toward them, threatening in a few moments to roast them alive. They huddled close to the rear rail in fear, waiting for the steamer to strike the beach. With a shock the Nutmeg State struck the rocky bottom and people seemed to shoot from all parts of her. They jumped into the water and tried to reach the lifeboats which had been launched from the forward part of the vessel. All the passengers were in the water for a few minutes, but many of the members of the crew had become imprisoned in the forward part of the ship, below decks by the flames.

He remained in his apartments during the afternoon with his son. The admiral left the hotel in a closed carriage for the railway station under escort of about twenty mounted police officers. The crowd which followed was a large one and a greater one was at the station. The party at once went on board the express, which immediately started, the enthusiastic people running down the track after it.

BRYAN IN GOOD HEALTH.

He Starts on His Kentucky Campaigning Tour.

Chicago, Oct. 16.—William J. Bryan, accompanied by Mrs. Bryan and John F. Vreel, of the Kentucky state Democratic committee, left here yesterday for his speechmaking campaign in Kentucky and Ohio. At Cairo, Ill., he was taken aboard a special car which had been provided for his trip. Mr. Bryan declared that his health was good and that he expected to stand the strain of making eighteen speeches in the Blue Grass State and sixteen in Ohio without endangering his health. Mr. Bryan's train was late and as a result he was compelled to forego his contemplated trip to attend the meeting of party leaders in St. Louis.

MUSICIAN'S MISHAP.

Theodore Thomas Narrowly Escapes Fatal Injury.

Chicago, Oct. 16.—Theodore Thomas, conductor of the Chicago orchestra, narrowly escaped fatal injury. As it was he received a wound that will confine him to his bed for several days. He conducted a private rehearsal of the orchestra at the Auditorium. A few minutes before the end of the rehearsal an iron bolt dropped from the loft above the stage. It hit the floor within a foot of Mr. Thomas, and, bounding back, struck him in the face. The bolt cut two gashes in the face, and for a time it was thought one of his eyes was badly injured.

A CRISIS IMMINENT.

People of Venezuela Have Risen Against Their President.

Caracas, Venez., Oct. 16. — Advices from Petara, ten miles from Caracas, say the people have risen against President Andrade and a crisis is imminent here. The commander of the government forces has betrayed the president and will allow the revolutionary army to march upon Caracas without a battle. President Andrade will probably be forced to retire, re-establishing his government at Maracaibo or Puerto Cabellas. Tucas has been taken by the revolutionary forces.

Mules for the British.

Bonham, Tex., Oct. 16.—Ed Stager of this city, who was one of the most extensive dealers in mules and horses during the Spanish-American war, has just filled a contract with the British government for 1,500 mules for service in South Africa in the war with the Boers. These mules have been purchased at Dent, Tex., and vicinity and shipped here. Over 1,300 head are being held at the fair grounds awaiting the arrival of inspectors and receivers. They will be shipped via New Orleans.

Guarding Their Prisoner.

Columbus, Tenn., Oct. 16. — Horace Campbell, a negro phosphate miner, is in jail here and a strong guard stands watch to prevent a lynching. Campbell and another negro resisted arrest at the Tennessee Phosphate company's mines, opening fire on the officers, James Gilmer, B. L. Ladd and W. Wilshire. Gilmer was killed and Ladd wounded twice on the thigh and the negroes fled. Later Campbell was arrested and identified.

Washington County Schools.

Cottage Grove, Minn., Oct. 16 — County Superintendent McKean, in his annual report, says the schools of this county are in a very prosperous condition and are among the best in the state. There is an increasing demand for more first-grade teachers, as the patrons of some of the schools are not satisfied with those of lower grades. Washington county is entitled to $13,336.05 from the state school apportionment.

Marchand Wanted Revenge.

Paris, Oct. 16.—Maj. Marchand, who commanded the French expedition into the Soudan, it is stated, wished to go and fight with the Boers as a revenge for being compelled to withdraw from Fashoda, but the government refused him permission to join the Boer forces.

Gravel Trains Collide.

Madella, Minn., Oct. 16. — A wreck occurred on the Watowan Valley railroad one-half mile south of here. Two gravel trains collided almost on the bridge. One engine was badly damaged, together with several cars.

Consumptives Burned Out.

Liberty, N. Y., Oct. 16.—The administration building of the Loomis Sanitarium for consumptives, near this place, was entirely destroyed by fire. Loss, $100,000. None of the hundred inmates were injured.

A STRINGENT FOOD LAW.

Prohibits the Use of Arsenic or Alum in All Articles of Diet.

The law enacted by the Missouri legislature, a copy of which was recently published in these columns, and which prohibits the manufacture or sale of any article intended for food or to be used in the preparation of food, which contains alum, arsenic, ammonia, etc., places that state in the lead in the matter of sanitary legislation.

Laws restricting the use of alum in bread have been in force in England, Germany and France for many years. In this country, in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky and several other states, direct legislation in reference to the sale of alum baking powders has also been effected. In several of these states their sale is prohibited unless they are branded to show that they contain alum, and in the District of Columbia, under the laws of Congress, the sale of bread containing alum has been made illegal.

Following are the names of some of the brands of baking powder sold in this vicinity which are shown by recent analysis to contain alum. Housekeepers and grocers should cut this list out and keep it for reference:

The housekeeper should bear in mind that alum makes a cheap baking powder. It costs but two cents a pound while cream of tartar costs thirty. The quality of the powder is therefore usually indicated by the price.

ROUTED BY SCOUTING PARTY.

Three Americans Killed in an Engagement—Filipinos Driven Out.

Manila, Oct. 15. — Maj. Cheatham, with a scouting party, while proceeding along the west shore of the lake Thursday, encountered a force of rebels strongly intrenched at Montinlupa. Maj. Cheatham reports that he drove the rebels from their position and that in the engagement three Americans were killed and two were wounded.

Rumors are in circulation in Manila that Maj. Cheatham discovered three American prisoners who had been bound, gagged and shot by the insurgents. These rumors, however, are not confirmed.

At Sandago a lieutenant of the native police has been arrested and lodged in jail, a subordinate having reported to the authorities that he was endeavoring to enlist them in a plot to turn the police against the Americans in the event of an uprising.

Reports having reached the provost marshal that arms were concealed at the headquarters of the Dominican friars, a large building adjoining the palace, a detachment of soldiers made a search of the building. They found a small stock of Mausers, revolvers and ammunition, which was confiscated despite the protests of the friars that the arms were not intended for unlawful use.

Gen. Schwan, with the infantry, has reached Bacoor. The troops are greatly exhausted, having had one of the hardest marches of the campaign. From Malabon to Perez das Marinas they marched through roadless rice fields. The fourth infantry from Imus joined Gen. Schwan at Perez das Marinas. The Filipinos had deserted the town upon learning of the approach of the Americans, leaving only the women and children behind. Two strong shocks of earthquake, lasting several seconds were felt in Manila at 10 o'clock last evening.

Fatal Lovers' Quarrel.

Fort Scott, Kan., Oct. 15. — James Bish, a popular young man of this city, yesterday shot his affiance, Miss Clara Steinbrook, and as she fell Bish sent a bullet into his own brain. Bish is dead but the young woman will recover. They had quarreled over the date of their wedding, the young woman having insisted that she could not be ready as soon as Bish demanded.

This Is Prosperity.

Des Moines, Iowa, Oct. 15. — Managers of the large mines in the Des Moines district say they want 500 miners as soon as possible and are unable to secure them. They have been compelled in most cases to discontinue shipping coal on orders of country customers because the railroad contracts are taking all they can get out.

Guilty of Manslaughter.

Detroit, Mich., Oct. 15—John Donovan Dean was found guilty of manslaughter in the recorder's court and sentenced to fifteen years' imprisonment in the state prison at Jackson. April 28 he killed his wife during a quarrel with a flatiron. The couple had not been living together for some time.

Trouble in Madrid.

Madrid, Oct. 15. — The merchants threaten to close their shops as a protest against excessive taxation. If the threat is carried out martial law will be proclaimed as serious disturbances would ensue.

IN THE SHALLOWS.

My feet are in the shallows,
Sunk soft mid yellow sands,
The beads of yellow sunshine
Drip idly from my hands.

I watch the crimson sea dulse,
The dimpling eddies fleck,
And gather shells bright tinted
To circle brow and neck.

I match white, polished pebbles,
And laugh, to catch a glance—
Laugh back from gurgling ripples,
As to their time I dance.

Afar the winds are hasting,
The billows leap and roar;
They press in mighty transport
To clasp the sunset shore!

Afar the ships are sailing
Across the trackless blue,
'Neath skies whose stars are strangers
To lands I ever knew.

O depths stirred strong in passion!
O waves that toss and shine!
My feet are in the shallows—
Would God the sea were mine!

HIS OWN PORTRAIT.

How an Artist Paints a Picture of Himself.

It has been a common practice with artists of all ages and countries to paint their own pictures, and at the Uffizi gallery in Florence can be seen a magnificent collection of portraits of the world's great painters done by themselves. It is a coveted honor to be invited to contribute one's own portrait to this collection, for one must be eminent before this compliment is paid. As may be easily understood, painting one's own portrait is a somewhat troublesome task, for the painter must do a good deal from memory, especially if he puts himself in an attitude which it is difficult to reflect in a mirror. A straightforward portrait looking out of the picture is obviously the easiest to manage, for the painter has only to place the mirror in front of him to see his model.

Triple and quadruple mirrors must be employed when the attitude is in any way removed from full face. A profile would be more difficult to see for oneself, but a three-quarter face would be no less so, as in both cases the artist would be working from a reflection of a reflection, which, to say the least of it, is a bothering condition.

The looking at oneself for a long time is one of the strange and trying conditions of painting one's own portrait, for difficulties and complexities appear to grow the more one tries to grapple with them. Like the road to the tired traveler, which seems to lengthen as he goes, so the difficulties of painting oneself appear to increase rather than diminish the more one looks at oneself.

Apart from painting one's own portrait, artists largely draw from themselves, for a man can more easily assume a particular attitude than get another person to do so. Then for details, such as a hand, arm, nose, eye, the artist and a mirror supply all that is required. Another of the many uses of a mirror is to reverse the work during its progress, as reversing a drawing will often reveal an awkwardness, want of balance or faulty drawing, which might otherwise go undetected.—Chicago News.

The Parrot Turned Brown.

Long had the wife of a poor Washington clerk been yearning for the possession of a green parrot.

At last a fine specimen was obtained for $10. It was delivered in the morning, and it came to pass that a new servant from the depths of the country opened the door to the delivery boy. Her mistress was out; there was not a soul to instruct her in the code of ethics as applied to parrots.

"Is it for the table?" she asked.

"Without doubt," was the wicked reply.

Whereupon the parrot was dispatched at once, plucked, trussed and put into the oven. He was just turning a beautiful brown when the mistress of the establishment returned, and that same evening the little servant from the country was back among the ducks and drakes of her own village green a wiser and sadder girl.—Washington Times.

The Trunk Strap.

"No good," said a baggage man, touching as he spoke a rope that was tied around a trunk standing in a railroad baggage room. It was a stout rope and securely tied so far as the knot was concerned, but it did not bind on the trunk, and it would have been difficult, if not impossible, to draw it close without some mechanical means to help. As it stood with the rope loose about it the trunk could have been easily broken by careless handling as though there had been no rope around it at all.

"A strap is the only thing," the baggage man said, "to put around a trunk."—New York Sun.

Broiling a Steak.

The broiling of steak often fills the house with smoke and the meat odor. In many cases this can be avoided by as simple an expedient as opening the dampers of the stove or range when the broiler is put on and letting the draft carry the fumes up the chimney. A great many things that are odious in housekeeping may be avoided by "knowing how."

An Unmentioned Gift.

A gift that was not included in the published list of wedding presents received by a newly married Missouri couple was a receipt for ten years' back subscription due from the groom to one of the neighboring county papers, the generous contribution of the big hearted publisher.—Kansas City Journal.

A PART OF HIS STORY

ONE CHAPTER IN THE LIFE OF A YOUNG ADVENTURER.

A Dramatic Incident In a Career Which May Have Ended Behind Prison Bars or Which May Now Be Brimful of Happiness and Hope.

"These little detached passages in other people's stories that we are continually running into by pure chance," said an old reporter off duty, "are the most fascinating and tantalizing things in life. Sometimes we get a whole chapter, sometimes we get nothing more than a scrap of dialogue, and as often as not it's only a glance of the eye or a gesture of the hand, but we realize all the same that we have accidentally intruded upon some poignant human document of which we are never to know either the beginning or the end. I have often amused myself by taking such fragmentary morsels and attempting to reconstruct around them a logical sequence of events, just as naturalists build up fossil monstrosities from small sections of their big toes, and I may add that the invariable result of my efforts has shattered my faith in comparative zoology. I am forced to believe that the naturalists are faking us. However, when"—

"Oh, well," said somebody in the office, "go ahead and tell the story and have done with it!"

"The incident I had in mind," continued the old reporter, looking somewhat injured, "was narrated to me by a gentleman of this city who is now manager of an extensive orange grove, with offices in New Orleans. Eight or nine years ago, before he assumed his present position, he had charge of a large sugar plantation up the river, and one day during the grinding season a young Englishman came to his office and applied to him for work.

"The young fellow said his name was John Mason, and his shabby clothes and a hungry look in his eye confirmed the statement that he was badly in need of a job. The manager liked his face and manners and put him at light work with a gang at the cane carriers. Mason proved a very good hand. He was steady and sober, but he attracted no special attention, had no intimates and never let drop a word about his history. At the end of the season he drew his money and went away.

"About a month later the manager received a letter from a lady in England inquiring about her son, John Mason, whom she understood was working on that plantation. The letter went on to say that he had left home believing he had killed a young woman to whom he was engaged. He had struck her with something in a fit of insane jealousy. The woman was not dead, and the trouble had been fixed up. Meanwhile the young man had come in for a legacy of £5,000, and his mother wanted him to return at once.

"The letter was evidently written by a person of culture and refinement and seemed sincere, but, having no idea of Mason's whereabouts, all the manager could do was to reply to that effect. That closed the correspondence.

"One evening next grinding season a very ragged, trampish looking man came to the office window and asked for work. Dirt, privation and a heavy beard had changed him considerably, but the manager recognized him as Mason at a glance. 'Didn't you use to work for me?' he asked. 'No,' replied the man. 'I was never south before in my life.' 'Well,' said the manager, 'I have no work for you, but you reminded me at first of a fellow I want to see, a fellow named John Mason.'

"The applicant stood for a while irresolute. 'I used to have a partner by that name,' he said finally; 'may be it was him. What was it about?'

"The manager looked him in the eye. 'I wanted to tell him that that woman was not dead,' he replied.

"Mason grabbed hold of the window sill and turned white as a sheet under his dirt. His jaw trembled for a minute, and then he began to blubber like a child. The manager came out, led him in kindly, and as soon as the Englishman saw the letter he admitted the story of his flight was true. The reaction was so great that he became half hysterical, but at last he was persuaded to go to his old quarters for the night, and the manager assured him that he would make arrangements next day for his immediate return to England."

"Well?" asked several listeners.

"That's all there is to the story," said the old reporter. "Next morning John Mason wasn't there. His bed had not been slept in; nobody had seen him; nobody has ever seen him since. Where he came from, what became of him, who he really was, nobody knows. The manager wrote to the mother and got no reply, and the question arises, Was it his mother after all? Might not the letter have been a decoy? How did the writer learn his address? Was the girl actually alive or dead? True, the manager might have settled some of these problems by further inquiries at the English end, but he is a wise man and has learned that it is not well to meddle with detached chapters. It is an excellent rule."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Cold and Chloroform.

It has been found that an apparatus for killing animals with chloroform in England would not work in India, because the high temperature prevented the concentration of the chloroform vapor. That this was the case was proved by the fact that by placing ice in the box the animals were readily killed.

The Frog and the Judge.

"I had been living alongside of Silver lake for 15 years," said the judge, "before I concluded to go fishing. I suppose I had seen five carloads of fish taken out of the lake during those years, and so I anticipated a great catch when I got around to it. One day I got out hook and line and set off in my boat. It was right after dinner, and I let the boat go drifting. The hook was baited with a frog for bass, and I distinctly remember of giving frog and hook a whirl and a cast. Then of course I waited for a bite."

"And you got one?" queried the man with the new patent reel.

"I can't say that I did," replied the judge. "No, I have never been able to satisfy myself that I did."

"But what did you do?"

"Just floated around for five hours. I think I was busy most of the time preparing a case to come off the next week, but had a bass taken hold of that frog I must have felt it."

"But didn't you pull in your line at all?"

"I don't think so. If I did, it escaped my memory. Should I have done so?"

"Why, of course."

"For what reason?"

"To see if the frog was on the hook all right."

"Oh! There was no reason then," smiled the judge. "It seems that as soon as I cast him overboard he swam back and climbed into the boat, and at the end of five hours he came hopping over to me, as if to ask if I hadn't had all the fun I wanted. I decided that I had, and I unhooked him with apologies and rowed home."—Chicago News.

Bounced the Bill of Fare.

Stories of the generosity of Judge Poland of Vermont are constantly coming to light. One of the prettiest is about an old farmer, whom the judge invited to dine with him one day at the hotel in Lyndon, Vt.

The old man's shabby garments and uncouth manners did not prevent his host from being heartily glad to see him, and he was ushered into the dining room with all the deference that could have been shown the judge's most distinguished friend.

It was the farmer's first experience of a hotel, and when the waiter laid the menu card before him he asked quickly, "What's that?"

"The bill of fare, sir," replied the waiter.

"Take it away!" said the old man, with a look of triumph on his brown face. "Judge Poland isn't the sort that invites folks and then lets 'em pay their own bills. I've known him, boy and man, young feller! Perhaps you didn't know I'm a-vis'ting Judge Poland today."

The waiter bowed with the aspect of a graven image, but the judge and his guest smiled at each other in mutual friendliness and pleasure, and then the judge proceeded to order for two.—Youth's Companion.

The Missionary's Little Joke.

A native Maori chieftain, the descendant of cannibal kings, is now completing his medical education in Chicago. Cannibalism ended in his tribe, he says, when Bishop Selwyn converted his grandfather, but he tells some stories of it which have a distinctly humorous flavor. For instance:

It is said that once a chief captured a missionary who was anything but a toothsome morsel, as he was old and thin and looked as if his flesh would be tough. The missionary warned the chief that he would not make a good dinner and, pulling up his trousers, cut a slice off the calf of his leg and offered it to the chief.

The chief tasted it, said he didn't like it and passed it to a subchief. The sub tasted it, made a wry face and passed it on. The next man who took a bite of it spat it out. The missionary was released. After he had gone it was discovered that he wore a cork leg.

The Fads of Authors.

How novelists write will always be of interest to readers. Each seems to have some favorite place for attacking the muse. Roe wrote "Near to Nature's Heart," Hay "At the Seaside" and Besant "All In a Garden Fair." Verne wrote "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," Dryden "In Sunny Lands" and Auerbach "On the Heights."

While Gibbon wrote "For Lack of Gold" and Payne "In Peril and Privation," Black wrote "In Silk Attire" and Haven "Out of Debt, Out of Danger."

Horatio Alger wrote "Slow and Sure," Williams "On and Off" and Pike "Every Day."

Most curious of all were Bellamy, who wrote "Looking Backward," and Parker, who wrote "Upside Down."—Puck.

From Hand to Mouth.

"I'll never speak to him again!" exclaimed the young woman in the pale blue jacket. "He called me his queen and asked if he might kiss my hand. I said yes, and—and after that he kissed me on the lips without asking."

"I suppose," said the young woman in the yellow buskins, "he followed along the line of least resistance."—Chicago Tribune.

ST. PAUL, MINN., March 28th, 1899.

Chapter 196 of the General Laws of the State of Minnesota for 1895 (act of April 18th) constitutes Supervisors of towns, Mayors of cities and Presidents of village councils Fire Wardens, and it is made their duty to take precautions to prevent forest and prairie fires, and if they occur, to go and extinguish or control them; and in emergencies to call upon any able-bodied male person, over eighteen years of age, to assist. Fire Wardens must promptly report such fires to the chief fire warden. The forest commissioner is required to provide and sign an abstract (as herewith) of the penalties under said law, and it is made the duty of the county commissioners of each county to cause said abstract to be published in at least three issues of the official paper in their respective counties each year between the 15th of April and 1st of November, and they are hereby instructed to publish this notice entire. Under said law,

NEW YORK WORLD.
THRICE-A-WEEK EDITION.

Practically a Daily at the Price of a Weekly.

The striking and important events of the last year have established the overwhelming value of The Thrice-a-Week World to every reader. For an almost nominal sum it has kept its subscribers informed of the progress of all our wars and, moreover, has reported them as promptly and fully as if it were a daily. With our interests still extending throughout the world, with our troops operating in the Philippines and the great Presidential campaign, too, at hand, its value is further increased.

The motto of The Thrice-a-Week World is "Improved." It strives each year to be better than it was the year before, and public confidence in it is shown by the fact that it now circulates more than twice as many papers every week as any other newspaper, not a daily, published in America.

We offer this unequalled newspaper and The St. Hilaire Spectator together one year for $1.65.

The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2.50.

Hog Cholera.

Dr. Annand, field veterinarian for the state board of health, has completed his investigation of the hog cholera that prevails in this part of the state and finds the disease scattered through the towns of Crookston, Lowell, Andover, Hammond and Gentilly in Polk county and in Louisville, Terrebonne, Red Lake Falls and Lake Pleasant in Red Lake county. It is estimated that 3000 head of swine have died during the progress of the plague. A remedy for the disease appears in another article in this issue.

Remedy for Damp Rooms.

Damp cupboards and rooms can be made dry and airy by placing a basin of fresh lime where the moisture penetrates, to the detriment of food, linen, etc. The lime quickly absorbs the unwholesome humidity, the remedy need only be repeated every now and then. In living rooms, which are not to be depended upon as being as dry as would be desirable, it is advisable to place saucers containing salt under sofas, etc. This will absorb the moisture in a wonderful manner. If thoroughly dried the salt can be used again and again for the same purpose.

They Wanted Rev. Logan.

It will be a disappointment to the people in this city to learn that Rev Henry Logan has been stationed at Ely instead of being returned to this city by the M. E. conference just held at Minneapolis. Mr. Logan was sent to this charge, St. Hilaire and this city, a year ago, living in the parsonage at St. Hilaire. At that time the church organization was in a very dilapidated condition and consequently discouraging to an ambitious preacher, but Mr. Logan started in with a determination to better matters if possible, and succeeded in so far as reviving new interest and proving to the people that he and his wife were all that they claimed to be, true christian people. The two places were to be separated and each given a minister, as should be. As it was the unanimous choice of the people that Mr. Logan be returned to this place, as well as his own willingness he had succeeded in raising a handsome subscription for a parsonage to be built here and a plan of work arranged for the coming year. Why these facts should not have been considered by Bishop Joyce and he returned is a mystery to many. We do not wish to reflect in any way against the new pastor, Rev. A. A. Myers, but it is poor policy to "swap horses in the middle of the stream."—Thief River Falls Press.

Hog Cholera Season.

This is the hog cholera season, and the man who keeps hogs should do his part toward preventing the disease from gaining a foothold in his herd.

Hog cholera frequently appears first in the herd that is most neglected in the neighborhood, and from that spread until it runs its course through all surrounding herds. It has been proven that absolute cleanliness often prevents the disease from spreading although it rages on every side.

The careful swine breeder will try every known method of prevention before he is called upon to combat the disease, and then if it breaks out he need not accuse himself of neglect.

Recently we have had proof of the value of the prescription formulated by the Agricultural Department as a preventive and cure for hog cholera, and we republish it because it is, we believe, of great value. The formula is as follows:

Sodium sulphate, black antimony, sulphur and wood charcoal, one pound each, and two pounds each of sodium hyposulphite, sodium bicarbonate and sodium chloride. Pulverize thoroughly and mix well. This dose is a heaping tablespoonful to each 200 pounds of hog weight, given once a day in a mixture of ground oats and corn moistened with hot water. The same mixture may be given as a preventive with good results, and animals under treatment should be kept dry and warm in clean pens, disinfecting the pens and yards occasionally with a five per cent solution of crude carbolic acid. The remedy is good, moderate in price, obtainable at any drug store, and easily mixed at home. It will do much toward keeping hogs well, and while not infallible, if given to ailing hogs early in the disease will generally save them. —Farmer's Voice.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Regular Correspondent

Wall street operators always know that when a republican administration is in power they can count upon assistance whenever their manipulations create a stringency in the money market. Consequently they never hesitate to create a stringency if thereby they can secure a profit. It is the old, old story and nobody was surprised at the official announcement made this week that the U. S. Treasury had once more lent its aid to the money sharpers of Wall street by deciding to anticipate the payment of the interest upon the entire public debt for the remainder of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900.

The war between Great Britain and the Transvaal Republic seems likely to result in giving the commander of the South Atlantic Squadron a prominence that was not thought of when Admiral Schley was assigned to that position. One of the ships of that squadron—the Montgomery—has already been ordered to South African waters to look out for American interests, and it is said at the Navy Department that the Chicago, which will be Admiral Schley's flagship, will follow as soon as she can be got ready to make the trip, which will be in about two weeks. When Schley starts on that trip he will carry the good wishes of thousands, who would like to see him win new honors, and who know that he will do so if the opportunity offers.

Speaking of the proposed removal of headquarters of the National Committee from Chicago to Washington, Senator Jones said it was a matter that would be left largely to the judgment of Vice Chairman Johnson, who has had charge of the committe affairs for some months. Of the general outlook Senator Jones said: Nationally the democratic party is in the best of shape. We have the best of it on all the issues. We are opposed to trusts, and we shall put ourselves on record as being against them. The anti-expansion sentiment is growing every day, and the people know that the democratic party is consistent in its opposition to imperialism. I can only reaffirm the position which was taken before I went away. I cannot see how a man can believe in the Declaration of Independence, and at the same time clamor for the subjugation of a people who are fighting for freedom. The war in the Philippines is wrong in principle and will prove costly in its prosecution. Silver will not be overshadowed by the other issues before the public. It is as vital as ever, and the arguments in its favor have lost none of their force simply because there are other questions also to be considered." Senator Jones will go to Arkansas in a few days, to remain until Congress meets.

Chas. Weagant, who has recently returned from the Phillipines arrived today and will visit with his brother A. H. and family for a time.

To Our Delinquents.

The frost will soon be on the pumpkin and fodder in the shock: as the season comes around like the hands upon a clock; the school boy will be trudging to school across the hill; and the autumn winds a sighing with that strange and sudden chill; the fair time fakir will be here to exhibit his gall; and the measely little housefly will be whitening on the wall; the golden grain will be pouring into town from off the land, the farmers will be paying off his notes of hand; the bright hued leaves will flutter down from off the forest trees and the foot ball players' lengthy locks will be waving in the breeze; the miller will be busy and the merchant on the jump, while the coal man will be ready to get a sudden hump; so get ready to rake in all the sheckels that you can, and when you blow them in don't forget the printer man.—Ex.

—For cuts and sores there is nothing better than the Imperial Carbolic salve.

"I wish to express my thanks to the manufacturers of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, for having put on the market such a wonderful medicine," says W. W. Massingill, of Beaumont, Texas. There are many thousands of mothers whose children have been saved from attacks of dysentery and cholera infantum who must also feel thankful. "Ah, yes," she sighed, "my life has been a failure."

Used His Brains.

Some time ago a brakeman on the Baltimore & Ohio Rail Road used his brains and saved a passenger train from running into two derailed cars. The Company sent him a check for $50 and posted a bulletin complimenting him for his quickness of thought.

A few days later, Engineer John Hagerty was oiling his engine at Connellsville, while waiting for the passengers to alight. He heard another train coming, and believed that it was not under proper control. He sprang into his cab, opened the throttle and started his train. The other engine struck the rear car, but it was not a hard blow and Hagerty's promptness saved ten or a dozen lives.

The Company has ordered a handsome gold watch, suitably inscribed, and a gold chain for Engineer Hagerty, as a reward for his devotion to duty and "using his brains" in time of emergency.

WILD BATTLE.

How a Zoo Keeper Was Nearly Crushed by Constrictors.

"There's a snake keeper in the Philadelphia zoo who won't do it again. He tried to separate two large pythons who were fighting for the remains of a half-devoured chicken and suffered the proverbial fate of the peacemaker. There are three pythons in one glass cage, and there is always some care required in feeding them. Each must receive his meal at the same moment as the others, or trouble follows. This particular keeper, whose name is Thompson, opened the door the other day, and the snakes knew it was dinner time. They lifted their great, scaly heads and stood ready. Thompson threw a newly killed fowl to the biggest one, and one each to the others with the greatest possible expedition. Then he stood ready for the second course. The biggest snake was through first, and promptly got the second fowl. The others, as they finished, each received a second help. Then Thompson turned to push back the curious crowd of observers, and in this brief interval the trouble began. Snake No. 1 had swallowed his second fowl, and there was no third one ready. But snake No. 3 still had some of his fowl protruding unswallowed from his jaws. Like a lightning stroke snake No. 1 struck for the chicken, and in a twinkling the two monsters were writhing in each other's terrible grip. Thompson knew what this meant. When pythons fight it is to the death, and the weaker of these two was bound to be a dead snake in a few minutes if they were not separated. The keeper did not pause. He threw open the door, jumped in, and was soon using all his strength in desperate efforts to tear them apart. The crowd surged up to the glass cage, greatly excited. After a struggle he seemed to succeed. The snakes slowly unwound, but before Thompson could get himself clear of them and escape they had twined about him. He tried to free himself, then gave up the struggle in an attempt to prevent his chest from being crushed in. The huge snakes wound their bodies around the man's limbs. Thompson stood motionless. The crowd gazed spellbound at the man, who was gradually weakening under the weight of the reptiles. Other keepers, attracted by the excitement, arrived in the snake house and pushed through the crowd to the caged man. Three of them jumped in and beat the big snakes until they freed the captive. Thompson was badly crushed, but otherwise not injured.

STRUGGLING YOUNG AUTHOR.

He Has a Dream with a Wish That Is Not Rejected.

"I dreamed the other night," said the struggling young author, "that a big fortune had been left to me, and that I had started a publication in which to print my own stuff. Just think of that, will you, a place where they never rejected anything you might write; where they took everything, and printed it all. And it was sort of gratifying at first, it was so different, but I soon tired of it. I found there was no fun in a thing that you didn't have to work for; and that though I now had the power to have anything and everything I wrote printed, yet with that power gained as it was, I was really more of an outsider than I had been when I could get nothing, or next to nothing, printed. Then I was of mankind and fighting with the rest; with the exhilaration of combat, the hope of victory, and the joy of triumph when victory was won! How dull the other, a pleasure that I could command at will, as against such delights as these! I wished that I might lose that fortune and be once more the struggling young author; and this wish, by my awakening, was fully gratified."

DIAMONDS MORE EXPENSIVE.

With the return of prosperity has come a rise in the prices of luxuries, owing to increased demand, and the first things that shot up the scale of cost have been diamonds. People do not buy jewelry unless they have plenty of money, for it is the easiest of all things to get along without. A purchaser who a short time ago would have groaned at the thought of a $200 diamond ornament now buys one for $500 without blinking.

Diamonds have increased 10 per cent in cost, emeralds are higher than ever and still going up, and pearls are following suit. Rubies are truly beyond price.

One jeweler has been showing a two-carat diamond for $900, and a blue diamond weighing nearly three carats was just sold for $2,800. A necklace of fifty pearls brings $6,500, though a few months ago it would have been at least $500 less. A single pearl weighing twenty-six grains sold for $2,600.

A pure emerald four carats in weight is worth $4,000, and as an emerald is usually set with diamonds, one can see the value of a ring in these stones. Rubies range from those of one carat, costing $450, to three and four carat stones worth $5,000.

Pearls and diamonds are a favorite combination this winter. The dog collars of pearls fastened with diamond clasps still reign.

The Persian Carpenter.

In accordance with the invariable custom of all eastern artisans, the carpenter sits upon the ground while at work, says Southern Lumberman. Instead of a bench, a strong stake is driven down before him, leaving about ten inches above the ground, and upon this he rests his feet. The facility with which the work is executed in this position has always been a matter of surprise to European workmen. In the royal arsenals English tools are used and a better system of working has been introduced under the superintendence of British officers, but in the native workshops the workmen are still to be seen squatting on the ground, and, being used to this position from infancy, and their tools being formed to work with more efficiency when used in this way, any alteration is scarcely to be expected. Their principal tools are the frame saw, adze, planes, hammers, nails and a few smaller tools.

A PLEASANT CURE.

How Patients at the Minneapolis Keeley Institute Pass Their Time.

Patients of the Minneapolis Keeley Institute describe their stay of four weeks as being the most pleasant as well as the most profitable vacation they ever took. There are always from twenty to fifty bright, intellectual men undergoing treatment at the Institute, and they pass the time away in profitable conversation, reading the books in the extensive library, playing croquet on the lawn, or, if the weather be inclement, play cards in the club room.

The club room is a large, roomy, airy place, in which is the library, a piano and several tables for card playing. On the walls are interesting pictures, photographs, etc.

The rising bell is rung at a quarter to seven o'clock, and the first dose of internal remedy is taken. At 7:30 the breakfast bell rings, and at 8 o'clock the first hypodermic treatment is given. These hypodermic treatments are given four times a day; at 8 a. m., 12 noon, 5 p. m. and at 7:30 p. m. The internal remedy is taken every two hours until 9 p. m.

Patients are not allowed to use tobacco within fifteen minutes before or after the hypodermic treatments. Cigarette smoking is not permitted under any circumstances. If the patient is addicted to cigarettes, he is given a special course at the same time, without additional expense, and is cured. If a patient desires to be cured of the tobacco addiction, smoking or chewing or both, this is done readily without any additional charge.

During the first ten days of the treatment the patient must remain on the Institute grounds, without leaving them, but after the ten days he is permitted to leave the Institute at certain periods between the hours of the hypodermic treatment; and as many possess bicycles or can borrow them of other patients, they can take advantage of the fine bicycle paths of Minneapolis. It is estimated that there are 40,000 bicycles in Minneapolis, and a goodly proportion of this number pass the Keeley Institute every day on Park avenue, which is the most popular bicycle road in the city.

Everything possible is done by the management to make the stay of the patient a pleasant one.

There are many frauds and imitators, but those who really know affirm that the Keeley Cure is the only one which really cures. It is positive in its results. Letters of inquiry are promptly answered, and literature will be sent, enclosed in a plain envelope, if name and address is sent to the Keeley Institute, corner Tenth street south and Park avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

Tissue Paper and Trunk Packing.

Until a woman has tried it she never realizes what a valuable aid to the effective packing of a trunk is the use of tissue paper. If a fold of the paper is put where a gown is turned, the danger of a crease will be lessened 50 per cent. Stuffing the sleeve and blouse fronts with tissue paper will tend in a large measure to do away with the crumpled look that a dress waist so often presents, even after a stay of but a few hours in a tightly-packed trunk. —Philadelphia Times.

Possibility of Trouble.

"You tallow-faced sioh!" snarled the bad boy of the neighborhood, "for two cents I'd break your face!"

"I shall go and consult the lexicons in reference to that word 'sioh,'" responded the other, a little boy from Boston, wrathfully but self-possessed, "and if it has any opprobious signification I will return and chastise you." —Chicago Tribune.

AN ABYSSINIAN SHRINE.

One Dedicated to the Virgin Mary in Menelek's Dominions.

Dr. Koettlitz, who accompanied Mr. Weld-Blundell and Lord Lovat in their recent expedition to Negus Menelek's country, made a journey to Zuquala, the famous sacred mountain, which, he believes, was never before visited by an Englishman. His description of the trip is reprinted from the London Times. "Mount Zuquala, the mysterious sacred mountain of Abyssinians, is forty miles from the capital. It is 10,000 feet high, and in the form of a truncated cone. At its summit and in the crater is a remarkable lake 3-4 of a mile long, which is a veritable Abyssinian Lourdes or Pool of Siloam. It is the belief of the natives that bathing in its waters will cure all diseases. Close by are some springs dedicated to the Virgin Mary. According to the popular idea, barren women need only drink of these fountains to lose their sterility. The waters are regarded with the greatest worship and must on no account be employed for cooking or any other useful purpose. I saw quite a number of diseased creatures round the lake shore crawling about or being carried on litters. The whole mountain—both sides and the crater—is densely wooded. The place is studded everywhere with hermits' huts, each of which is inhabited by holy men, who live separate lives of extreme austerity. Also, hidden away in the forests, are a large number of churches. I got into the good graces of the hermits by somewhat curious means. I was being shown over one of the churches, which are plentifully adorned with cheap colored Biblical pictures, made in Germany, when a priest with great awe drew my attention to a gaudy representation of St. George and the dragon. I endeavored to explain that St. George was the British as well as the Abyssinian patron saint, but the good men were very dubious until I hit upon the idea of producing a sovereign. This at once convinced him of the truth of my statement, and proved to their complete satisfaction that I was a Christian of a very high order. The whole mountain is curious in the extreme. I was shown one tree with three trunks, united at the base, which is regarded as an emblem of the Trinity and is hung with human hair and all sorts of trinkets. There are, too, curious crannies between the perpendicular rocks, through which it is an act of devotion to squeeze oneself. The sides of these apertures are highly polished and covered with grease by reason of the religious activity of diseased pilgrims."

GREAT PRESENCE OF MIND.

It Is "Psychologically Interesting" from Another Point of View.

Describing the accident to a party of tourists while ascending the Schneeberg in Austria when a rope-railway wagon ran off the line and fell, with its occupants, about sixty feet, Herr von Ompteda, the German novelist, who broke a rib, wrote to a friend as follows, says the London Daily News: "It is psychologically interesting that none of us screamed as we fell. I knew exactly what to do. I waited until the wagon was in the middle of its fall and then, crossing my arms over my head, jumped off sideways, for my first thought was—before all, don't get under the wagon! The violinist (who was killed) was standing near me, clinging convulsively to the wagon and I was just about to cry to him, 'Let loose!' But it was too late. Singularly, I felt sure that my wife was safe. I somehow believed she had not fallen and I wanted to stand up and give her a sign. But I could not move. All at once she bent over me, with blood running out of her mouth, and cried: 'Mon petit, es-tu mort?' I said, 'No, I can move,' but I could not move. My glorious wife thought only of me and not for a moment of herself. Her left side is frightfully torn and bruised, but she is brave and keeps up. I am obliged to lie still. So, enough." Is this not "psychologically interesting" from another point of view?

Raised His Rank.

An engaging manner is useful everywhere. This axiom is amusingly illustrated by a story which Justin McCarthy tells. "Soon after the civil war," he says, "I happened to be standing on a bridge in New York, amusing myself by studying the crowd, when a shrill, youthful voice accosted me with 'Cap'n, shine yer boots?' The chance distribution of military titles was ready and liberal at the time, when so many soldiers were returning to civilian life, and I paid no attention to the invitation. Just then a rival bootblack passed, and, imagining where the cause of my indifference lay, he advanced, and, pushing past the unsuccessful claimant, he gave me a military salute and appealed to me with the captivating words: 'Brigadier-general, shine yer boots?' I had my boots shined on the spot."—Youth's Companion.

Wild Deer Devour Crops.

Middletown (N. Y.) special New York Journal: Lew Boyd, who lives near the town of Deer Park, reported here that one day last week when he went to drive home his cows, he saw no less than seven deer feeding on his premises. Mr. Boyd says that he suffers considerable loss through the depredations of deer, which have devoured his apples and crops. He dares not shoot them, because they are protected by law until 1901. He thinks that if the state protects deer it ought also to protect him against being eaten out of his farm by them.

WOULDN'T SEE HORSE SUFFER.

Tenderloin Cabman Showed that He Had a Good Heart.

There was a little touch of nature, just one of those faint little things that crop out once in a while in even the most hardened, but it showed that "One Wing" loved the horse that had made money for him.

"One Wing's" other name is Warren, and for years he has been a Tenderloin hackman. His fellow's nicknamed him because he has but one arm.

As usual, early yesterday morning he was at his old stand at Thirtieth street and Sixth avenue. The old horse that for ten years had dragged the ancient cab, which was but recently supplanted by a smart Victoria, was crunching his oats.

Four well dressed pleasure-seekers came along and leaped into the Victoria.

"Drive us to Forty-fourth street," commanded one.

"One Wing" was at the horse's head, and in an instant the feed-bag was off, and the next second he was on the box.

"Get up, Bill!" he shouted to the horse.

The animal turned, then his frame shook, and he collapsed and fell.

A veterinary surgeon was summoned, looked at the animal and announced: "Spinal meningitis. He can't live."

Then the other side of "One Wing's" nature showed itself.

"He won't suffer long. He's been too good a friend of mine," he said, "If he's got to die, I want him to die painless."

Then he hurried to the Thirtieth street station and got a policeman, who soon ended the horse's sufferings.

Then "One Wing" went off to drown his sorrows.—New York Telegraph.

They Did Not Tarry.

Rudyard Kipling tells a good story of himself. One day, he says, I was sitting in my study in London when suddenly a gentleman appeared at the door, unannounced, followed by two schoolboys.

"Is this Rudyard Kipling?" inquired the gentleman.

"Yes," I answered.

He turned around.

"Boys, this is Rudyard Kipling."

"Yes," I replied.

"Boys, this is where he writes."

And before I had time to ask them to take a seat they were gone, boys and all. I suppose they had all literary London to do in that way.

A Hustler.

"Now, then, my friend," said the business-like young preacher, pocketing the wedding fee and turning again to the bridegroom, "let me ask if you are carrying any life insurance?"

"No, sir," replied the newly-made benedict. "Not yet."

"Well, the most sacred duty depending upon you now is to take out a liberal policy for the benefit of this young woman who is to be dependent upon you hereafter. I represent one of the strongest and best companies in this country. Here are the figures showing," etc.

And he got the young husband's application. There is nothing like finishing a job thoroughly while you are about it.—Chicago Tribune.

YANKEE GIVES MEXICANS A TIP.

Apt Illustration Which Sold Lots of American Yokes.

An American farmer near Guadalajara has convinced his Mexican neighbors that oxen can do more work under American yokes, so generally used in the republic. The American brought several modern yokes from the states and used them with success. The curiosity of his Mexican friends was excited, and they proceeded to ask questions.

"Well," said the American, "when you lasso a steer, and the lasso gets around his neck, what do you do?"

"Turn him loose," was the reply.

"Why?"

"Because he's too strong for us that way."

"That's it," answered the American, "his strength is in his neck, not in his horns."

The Mexicans saw the point, and now yokes of United States manufacture are generally used in that neighborhood.—Modern Mexico.

Millions of Birds Killed.

Little Rock, Ark., was visited, the other morning, by an electrical storm of such violence that millions of English sparrows were killed.

During the progress of the storm the sparrows sought shelter in the trees, and after the storm had subsided their bodies were piled thick upon the ground.

This is the first instance of anything of the kind ever having occurred in that district. After the rain the hot sun pouring down on the bodies, caused a stench, and men were set to work to bury them. It is estimated that 2,000,000 of the little pests perished in the storm.

Borrowing a Posture.

An old woman, whose husband was ill in bed, sent for the doctor, who came and saw the old lady.

"I will send him some medicine," he said on leaving, "which must be taken in a recumbent posture."

After he had gone the old woman sat down, greatly puzzled.

"A recumbent posture—a recumbent posture!" she kept repeating. "I have posture!" she repeated. "I haven't got one." At last she thought, "I will go and see if old Mrs. Smith has got one to lend me."

Accordingly, she went, and said to her neighbor:

"Have you a recumbent posture to lend me to put some medicine in?"

Mrs. Smith, who was equally as ignorant as her friend, replied:

"I had one, but to tell you the truth, I've lost it."—Tit-Bits.

Think wrongly, if you please, but in all cases think for yourself.—Lessing.

"I GAVE little thought to my health," writes MRS. WM. V. BELL, 230 N. Walnut St., Canton, O., to Mrs. Pinkham, "until I found myself unable to attend to my household duties.

"I had had my days of not feeling well and my monthly suffering, and a good deal of backache, but I thought all women had these things and did not complain.

THOUGHT-LESS WOMEN

"I had doctored for some time, but no medicine seemed to help me, and my physician thought it best for me to go to the hospital for local treatment. I had read and heard so much of your Vegetable Compound that I made up my mind to try it. I was troubled with falling of the womb, had sharp pains in ovaries, leucorrhœa and painful menses. I was so weak and dizzy that I would often have severe fainting spells. I took in all several bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier and used the Sanative Wash, and am now in good health. I wish others to know of the wonderful good it has done me, and have many friends taking it now. Will always give your medicine the highest praise."

MRS. A. TOLLE, 1946 Hilton St., Philadelphia, Pa., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—I was very thin and my friends thought I was in consumption. Had continual headaches, backache and falling of womb, and my eyes were affected. Every one noticed how poorly I looked and I was advised to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. One bottle relieved me, and after taking eight bottles am now a healthy woman; have gained in weight 95 pounds to 140 pounds, and everyone asks what makes me so stout."

OLD LIBERTY BELL

DID NOT RING OUT IN VAIN IN 1776.

So Declare Patriotic Men of All Parties, In Conference at Chicago—Representatives of More Than Thirty States Condemn the McKinley Policy in the Philippines, and Organize For His Defeat and For Americanism—Governor Lind's Tribute to the Volunteer Among the Key Notes—Other National Political Echoes—Mr. Bryan's Triumphal Campaign—Towne in Nebraska, Kentucky and Iowa—State and Twin City Political Points of the Week.

Reform Press Bureau.
ST. PAUL, Oct. 23, 1899.

Did our liberty bell ring in vain?
Was our Declaration a lie?
Must we turn to the old world again
With the penitent prodigal's cry?
Must we arm us and march in the van
Of Europe's barbaric parade
And loosen out a gunpowder gospel to man
To open a pathway for trade?
Shall we strut through the world and bluster and brag,
With the dollar mark stamped on the brave old flag?

Again is to be recorded, by personal knowledge, more flagrant exercise of the monopoly of news, in the censorship of political information by the Associated Press, the case of the anti-imperialist conference at Chicago, held several days during the past week. The Associated Press gave neither the facts, as to representation, nor the spirit or the plans of the conference. But for the fact that General Carl Schurz' address was sent out in advance to the Northwest, enabling the fair minded papers to print portions of the same, there has been but the merest skeleton given the people, of what was the most important, most patriotic, most far-reaching gathering, as many believe, in the present generation. There is space for but the merest condensation, but every Reform Press reader will in time have opportunity for learning the whole proceedings, as they will be published in pamphlet form.

Every state in the Union was represented by letters or personal delegates, the latter coming from 30 states. More of them were life-long Republicans than of any other political faith. Many were gold Democrats who had stumped for McKinley. An instance of change is Captain Patrick O'Farrell of Washington, who stumped five states for McKinley, and was the author of the famous Silver Catechism of which Hanna circulated 2,000,000 copies in the close districts. He declared he would now go 16 to 1, high tariff or low tariff or for "a yellow dog" in preference to McKinley. Veteran fathers of the Republican party from all parts of the country were in evidence. At the opening session over 100 conferees were present, reinforced until a larger hall (Central Music hall) was required, and it was filled to its capacity at the open sessions, in spite of the careful suppression of announcements by the administration-controlled newspapers. Extremes on other issues are sunk for the moment, as shown in the fact that Cleveland's former Secretary of agriculture, Mr. Morton, presided over one of the open meetings, and our Towne over the other. It was, in a word, a meeting of the Phillips, Garrisons and Wades of anti-slavery times, represented by the Townes, Schurzs, Atkinsons, Cockrans, Welchs, Bigelows and the rest, who are at the front to arouse the American conscience against the destruction of American liberty by American conquest.

When organization is completed the term "Americanism" or "American policy" may supplant the term "Anti-Imperialism."

Ex-Congressman Towne was able to reach the meeting from his Iowa engagements, and was at once chosen to preside over the great meeting addressed by Bourke Cockran.

Minnesota was well represented otherwise. A feature of one of the sessions was the reading of that portion of Governor Lind's address to the Thirteenth, in which he referred to the passing of the volunteer, in the passing of the country to the policy of conquest and aggression. The sentence that "for purposes of conquest, he (the Volunteer) is unfit, for he carries a conscience as well as a gun," was the subject of several addresses, and brought out from the official records, that more than 8,000 of our volunteers at Manila expressed desire to be withdrawn from shooting down the liberty-seeking Filipinos!

A complete plan was arranged, and one for organization will be completed by the authorized committee. The former is to have the whole American nation rise by petition to congress in substance as follows:

That congress direct the president to suspend hostilities, by informing the Filipinos that our purpose is to give them self-government and independence, and that meanwhile, as they go on organizing their government, we will protect them by our flag and assist the authorities established to maintain peace, and will say to the world, "Hands off," now and hereafter.

These petitions will be circulated for signers by the organization effected in the different states. The committee for Minnesota will be as follows, under the Chicago appointment:

At Large—Governor John Lind, St. Paul.

First Congressional District—Hon. Milo White, Chatfield.

Second District—Hon. F. M. Curry, Mankato.

Third District—Hon. O. M. Hall, Red Wing.

Fourth District—Hon. G. Wilrich, J. M. Pattgiaser, St. Paul.

Fifth District—Hon. S. M. Owen, Rev. S. W. Sample, Louis R Larson, Rev. H. M. Simmons, Ralph Whelan, Minneapolis.

Sixth District—Hon. Charles A. Towne, Duluth; Hon. J. H. Sheets, Long Prairie.

Seventh District—Hon. R. M. Probstfield, Moorhead; H. M. Wheelock, Fergus Falls.

The following is the substance of the declaration of principles:

Imperialism is hostile to liberty, and subjugation is "criminal aggression" and open disloyalty to American principles.

The McKinley policy would extinguish the spirit of 1776, and the slaughter of Filipinos under that policy is a needless horror, and we protest against extension of American sovereignty by the Spanish method.

The president shall promptly assemble congress for the cessation of war and announcement of our purpose to give the Filipinos independence. A self-governing state cannot accept sovereignty over an unwilling people.

The real firing line is not about Manila, but the foe is of our own household. The treason of 1861 was to divide the country, that of 1899 is to destroy its fundamental principles and its noblest ideals.

Whenever this war shall be ended the contest must still continue until the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States are rescued from the hands of their betrayers.

Issues of currency reform, tariff, even our debauched civil service, and the truth-suppressing censorship, while of great importance, must even wait while representative government and Liberty itself is imperiled.

The solemn pledge to defeat any person or party that stands for the forcible subjugation of any people, whether candidate for the White House or for congress, men who would betray American liberty for un-American ends.

"We hold," with Abraham Lincoln, "that no man is good enough to govern another man without that other's consent. When the white man governs himself that is self-government, but when he governs himself and also governs another man, that is more than self-government, that is despotism. Our reliance is in the love of liberty which God has planted in us; our defense is in the spirit which prizes liberty as the heritage of all men in all lands. Those who deny freedom to others deserve it not for themselves, and under a just God cannot retain it long."

Finally: "Co-operation is invited of all men and women of the land loyal to the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States."

McKinley's abuse of the welcome of returning soldiers, as a stumping opportunity, was deeply resented in various parts of the Northwest, notably South Dakota. In Minnesota, only respect for the presidential office saved politician McKinley from open rebuke.

It has leaked out that there was a redeeming feature at Minneapolis in lifting the veil from the hypocrisy and cant which thinly veiled the hypocritical purpose of the sacred show. It was at the Lowry dinner, where a very select few crossed legs under the mahogany, following the exposition hippodrome. The statement is from a gentleman who sat within hearing of Secretary Wilson. The banquet, as the Exposition show, was preceded by a grace by Bishop Joyce, and the reverend gentleman evidently felt that the occasion and the company especially needed the Divine Mercy, and so prolonged his devout utterances far beyond the patience of the undevout and hungry secretary, who finally gave in an undertone an expression of his impatience as follows: "Why does the ——— ——— fool keep it up so long? He is putting that ——— stuff up for the newspapers." The secretary was unduly impatient. He knew very well that the whole show, prayer and all, was put up for the newspapers, to fool the voters withal.

On the return to Chicago, Wednesday, the president was at Evanston, where is located the great Methodist institution, where he brought great cheers from the crowd by referring to himself as an alumnus of the Northwestern university. On his departure the records were searched, and it was found to be no such thing; that he had neither attended nor received any degree, so far as could be ascertained, and the officials issued statements, that the president was in error. Whisky lost Andy Johnson his head when swinging round the circle. Vain political ambition answered the same purpose in McKinley's case.

Bryan has made tremendous campaigns in Kentucky and Ohio. Towne is making the same kind of a campaign in Iowa and Nebraska. Look out for earthquakes.

And, speaking of Towne, the call is from one end of the Sixth to the other, that he make the race next year.

And Query: Who is the congressman in the Sixth, anyhow? Is it Judge Boobar or John Morris? Here's a Page worth examining. Eh, Bede?

Mark Hanna is openly defending the trusts in Ohio. Verily, "The Ox Knoweth His Owner, and the Ass His Master's Crib."

Rampant is the Dollar mark, and the injunction of the Prince of Peace reads, "Go, Shoot the Gospel Into All Living Creatures."

A Twin City paper reports one of the local churches pledged to the conversion of $2,000,000 souls.

Note that not a song or poem has been produced from McKinley's Philippine war. "False is the war that no poet sings," truly says the bard.

The trust organizers are on the spit of the industrial commission, but the people are being spitted by the trust-power and monopoly.

The Minneapolis lying about big wages in the woods, has brought out the official statement in the lumbermen's organ there, that the reports are not true. "Lumber Jacks" this winter will receive but slightly increased wages, not within a mile of the wages of the good old bimetallic times, while all that they buy costs a big per cent more.

ROUTED BY BRITISH

TRANSVAAL FORCES GIVEN AN AWFUL DRUBBING.

Strong Boer Position at Elandslaagte Captured by the British After a Brilliant Engagement—Boer Losses Were Very Considerable, British Loss Roughly Estimated at 150 Killed and Wounded—Boers Advancing Toward Orange River—Glencoe Attacked by the Boer Main Northern Column.

London, Oct. 24.—The war office has published the following dispatch to the secretary of state for war, the marquis of Lansdowne, from the general commanding in Natal, Sir George Stewart White, regarding the engagement at Elandslaagte, between Glencoe and Ladysmith, when the British, under Gen. French, routed the Transvaal forces under Gen. Jan H. M. Kock, second in command of the Transvaal army, who was wounded and captured, and has since died:

"In the action at Elandslaagte yesterday the whole force was under Gen. French, Col. Ian Hamilton commanding the infantry. Although desultory fighting took place earlier in the day, the real action did not begin until 3:30 p. m. At that hour the Boers held a position of very exceptional strength, consisting of a rock hill about a mile and a half from the Boers, whose guns at once opened fire. This fire was generally well directed, but somewhat high. Contrary to previous experiences their shells burst well. Three companies of light horse moved toward the left of the enemy's position and two squadrons of the Fifth Lancers toward the left. During the artillery duel mounted Boers pushed out from their left and engaged the imperial light horse. In a few minutes the firing and our artillery was turned on the mounted Boers who opposed the imperial light horse. The latter at once fell back. After the artillery preparations our infantry advanced to the attack, supported by our guns in the second position. The Devonshires held the enemy in front, while the Manchester regiment and the Gordon Highlanders turned his left flank. The Boer guns, although often temporarily silenced, invariably opened fire again on the slightest opportunity and were served with great courage. After severe fighting our infantry carried the position. At 6:30 p. m. this was accomplished, the enemy standing his ground to the last with courage and tenacity. The Fifth Lancers and a squadron of the Fifth Dragoon Guards charged three times through the retreating Boers in the dark, doing considerable execution. We captured the Boer camp, with tents, wagons, horses and also two guns. The Boer losses were very considerable, including a number of wounded and unwounded prisoners. Among the former are Gen. Jan Kock and Piet Joubert, nephew of Commandant Gen. Joubert. One goods train with supplies for Glencoe camp and nine English prisoners were recovered. Our losses, I regret to say, are heavy. It is roughly computed at 150 killed and wounded. The behavior of our troops and of the colonial forces was admirable.

Was a Brilliant Fight.

Cape Town, Oct. 24.—Dispatches received from the front regarding the capture of Elandslaagte show it to have been a brilliant feat of arms. The Boers were strongly intrenched and fought with their wonted bravery. They seized every opportunity of coming into action and ran to serve their guns whenever they could get a chance. The British wounded are now being taken to Ladysmith. Every care and attention are also being given to the Boer wounded, who are being dispatched down the country.

:o:

London, Oct. 24.—According to a special dispatch from Glencoe Camp, the British cavalry, while pursuing the defeated Boers, were engaged by a strong force of the enemy on the north road. Firing is now in progress.

:o:

Cape Town, Oct. 24.—A message received from Col. Baden-Powell, in command at Mafeking, dated Oct. 15, says that fifty-three Boers were killed and a large number wounded in the encounter with his force.

It is now definitely known that Glencoe was attacked Saturday by the Boer main northern column. Our forces are intrenched in a good position. The situation there is not yet fully cleared up.

Shock for the Boers.

London, Oct. 24.—There is no longer any apprehension of even the expected initial success of the Boers. The two victories already gained by the British must have completely disillusioned them of the idea they had gained through the Majuba affair, and looking to the statements already circulated that President Kruger himself was opposed to sending the ultimatum, there is speculation in some quarters that the Boers may now sue for peace. At least, it is learned that the fear of a Dutch rising in the British colonies may be set aside.

Surrendered to the Boers.

Cape Town, Oct. 24.—It is rumored here that Barkly West, northwest of Kimberley, has been surrendered to the Boers without firing a shot. Cape volunteers, it is reported, will be sent to relieve Kimberley.

Advancing on Orange River.

London, Oct. 24. — The latest dispatches received do not indicate any general incursion of Boers as yet into Bechuanaland. Along the Orange river everything seems to be quiet. From Colesburg, Cape Colony, it is reported that all the available burghers from the Orange Free State have been sent north and west. On the other hand a messenger from Aliwalnorth reports, that a large body of Boers is advancing toward the Orange river. Refugees are leaving that town in greater numbers daily. The Boers have mounted a Krupp gun on a bridge commanding the most thickly populated part. Advices from Cape Town say that a wholesome fear of a rising in Basutoland prevents the Boers invading Cape Colony, and that on the other hand there is considerable excitement at Maseru and other Basuto stations, arising from native apprehensions of Boer attacks. It appears that colonial news is in some mysterious way supplied to the Boers and that the movements depend largely on intelligence communicated through natives. Disquieting information comes from Herschel and other points in Cape Colony, where the natives are much excited.

GEN. OTIS EMPHATIC.

Has No Time to Fool With Filipino Commissioners.

Manila, Oct. 24. — An American officer was killed and two men were wounded by the Filipinos in an attack on a launch with Gen. Lawton's expedition in the Rio Chiquito, near San Isidro. The rebels fired volleys from the shore.

Gen. Otis replied to the three insurgent officers who entered Angeles last Friday with a request made through Gen. MacArthur for permission for a Filipino commission, headed by a Filipino major general, to visit Gen. Otis in order to discuss terms and to arrange for the delivery of American prisoners, that the desired interview cannot be granted because the suggested propositions of the Filipinos are vague, indefinite and unmilitary and because the Americans must continue to decline to receive any representative of the so-called Filipino government.

FUNSTON ATTACKS THE FRIARS.

He Says They Are at the Bottom of the Insurrection.

Chicago, Oct. 24. — A special from Stanford university, Cal., says: Gen. Funston of Kansas lectured to the student body here last night on the Philippines. He blames the friars as being at the bottom of the insurrection. The general unmercifully attacked the church, not, as he insisted, because it was the Catholic denomination, but for the influence it maintained on that class of people. "If congress would drive out the friars," he said, "and confiscate every inch of church property, the bottom would drop out of the insurrection within a week."

CHINAMEN LOOT CHURCHES.

American Soldiers Cleared of the Charges of Desecration.

Washington, Oct. 24.—Father W. D. McKinnon, chaplain of the First California volunteers, who was with the regiment six months in the Philippines, called at the White House and had a short talk with the president. Asked about the church desecrations attributed to American soldiers, he said: "It is true that a great many churches have been looted and stripped, but this has been the work of Chinamen in nearly every case. The looting was usually between the evacuation of a town by the rebels and the entry of the American troops."

UNBEATEN AMERICA

AGAIN TASTES THE GLORY OF VICTORY.

The Race Yesterday Closes the Series for America's Cup and Was a Magnificent Rough-Weather Duel and a Glorious Yankee Victory—After All Is Over the Rival Crews Cheer Each Other to the Echo—Toasts to the Victor and Vanquished.

New York, Oct. 21.—Through wild and heavy seas, in a breeze that approached the dignity of a gale, the gallant sloop Columbia yesterday vanquished the British challenger Shamrock by six minutes and eighteen seconds actual time and six minutes and thirty-four seconds corrected time, thus completing the series for the America's cup with a magnificent rough-weather duel and a glorious Yankee victory. For the eleventh time the attempt of a foreigner to wrest from America the yachting supremacy of the world has failed. The trophy won by the old schooner America forty-eight years ago is still ours, a monument to the superiority of American seamanship and American architecture and a standing challenge to the yachtsmen of all nations. Unbeaten America again tastes the glory of victory. The intrinsic value of the reward which hundreds of thousands of dollars were expended to secure is small, simply an antiquated piece of silverware which Queen Victoria offered to the best sailing ship in the world in the early days of her reign, but around it cluster the precious memories of unbroken American triumph and the honor of mastery in the noblest of sports. To Sir Thomas Lipton, whose name is now added to the list of defeated aspirants for the honor of carrying the cup back across the Atlantic, failure was a crushing blow. His hope had been high. But, like the true sportsman that he is, the sting of defeat has left no bitterness, and with undaunted courage he intimates that he may be back with a better boat to try again. During his stay here, Sir Thomas has made himself more popular than any previous challenger, and yachtsmen of this country will be glad to welcome him back. Except for the repeated flukes and the unfortunate accident to the challenger on Tuesday, this series of races has been unmarred by a single untoward incident. The boats have had two fair and square races, one in light air and the other in a heavy blow, and Sir Thomas is perfectly satisfied that he was beaten by the better boat.

Yesterday's race was a glorious test of the rough-weather qualities of the two yachts. There was too much frostiness in the air for comfort, and it was far too rough for landlubbers.

The Shamrock got a noiser reception than Columbia as she finished, because at the later time at which she crossed gave opportunity for some belated vessels to arrive. A grand spectacle followed. The Columbia set the Stars and Stripes at her topmast, both ends of her spreaders and at the taffrail. Soon the whole fleet blossomed in American flags. Patriotic skippers ransacked their lockers for them, and they flew everywhere. The Corsair, the flagship of the New York Yacht club, had six flags flicking in the fresh breeze as she went alongside the Columbia and gave her three shrieking blasts.

Later the Erin, which had remained behind for a few minutes with the Shamrock, steamed up to the Columbia, the Stars and Stripes fluttering from main and mizzen. The Corsair greeted her with cannon, which Sir Thomas acknowledged by dipping the Union Jack at the taffrail. Then, by Sir Thomas' orders, the crew of the Erin lined the side and gave three good Anglo-Saxon cheers. They were returned with interest by the crew of the Columbia.

The American boat was the first to reach her mooring buoy inside the Hook, and when her rival came up alongside the sailors of both craft cheered each other lustily. Later Sir Thomas went aboard the Corsair and then soon after Mr. Iselin, managing owner of the Corsair, joined him. There were toasts of victor and vanquished; to America and Great Britain; to gentlemen and ladies and all sorts of things, and with felicitations all around, the cup series for 1899 ended with the best of good feeling.

A BANK COMBINE.

New York Banks Said to Be Considering One.

New York, Oct. 21.—It is reported in Wall street that a movement is on foot to consolidate three or four national banks of this city into one national bank, the largest in the country, with Secretary of the Treasury Gage as president. Two of the banks named are the National Bank of Commerce and the National Union bank. Statements by officers of these banks that they know nothing about the matter do not put a stop to discussion of the possible consolidation.

Supposed Murder.

Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 21.—A mining man from Sonora, Mexico, reports the disappearance and supposed murder of Dr. L. Theodore Wunschow, an American, and his servant. On Aug. 16 they left the town of Barlaricea for Santa Helena. Wunschow had a large amount of gold in his possession which he was taking to Santa Helena to exchange for a draft.

HAWKEYES ARE HOME.

Fifty-first Iowa Arrives at San Francisco.

San Francisco, Oct. 24.—The Fifty-first regiment of Iowa volunteers, numbering 764 men and 46 officers, under command of Col. J. C. Loper, arrived here yesterday from Manila on the transport Senator. There was no sickness aboard. The only death reported is that of Edward Kissick, of Company F, Oskaloosa, who died at Nagasaki, of dysentery. The only incident of the voyage was an accident that happened to Edwin Statler, Company M, and Homer A. Read, Company A, three days out from Nagasaki. They were injured by the breaking of the after sail, which fell on them. Statler's leg was broken and Read sustained a fracture of the skull. Both men are doing well. The senator was caught in the tail of the typhoon encountered by the steamer Empress of Japan. She was tossed lively for several hours but suffered no severe damage. So serious did the situation seem to the officers of the steamer at one time that all the passengers were ordered below and the hatches were battened down. Adjutant General Byers of Iowa, representing Gov. Shaw, and 300 citizens of Iowa met the Senator at the Golden Gate in a number of tugs. They received a royal reception from the volunteers. The regiment will be taken off the transport to-day.

BRYAN'S ELABORATE TOUR.

Remarkable Canvass to Be Made in Nebraska.

Lincoln, Neb., Oct. 24. — Beginning Tuesday morning, W. J. Bryan will make the most elaborate county by county and town to town canvass he has ever made in Nebraska, not excepting the year he ran for president. On a special train he will travel over nearly every line of railroad in the state and will make over 100 speeches, concluding at Lincoln on Saturday before election, where he will be assisted by ex-Gov. Altgeld. The Republican committee has also secured some of the best known campaigners in the country and the canvass for the two coming weeks will be as exciting as that of a presidential year.

MYSTERIOUS DEATH.

Body of a Young Lady Found in the Des Moines River.

Des Moines, Iowa, Oct. 21.—The body of a young lady was found in the Des Moines river last evening and identified as that of Mabel Schofield of Macksburg, Iowa. She was twenty-one years old and came here a few days ago to visit at the home of J. W. Thomas. She was missed yesterday but no anxiety was felt and the first suspicion of trouble came when the body was found. The coroner and physicians on examination declare she was not drowned as there is no discoloration or swelling. There were no marks of violence, however, and no poison could be detected. The matter is a complete mystery.

MORE STRICT WITH SALOONS.

New Construction Is Given the Iowa Liquor Law.

Des Moines, Iowa, Oct. 24.—The supreme court has decided the case of John W. Clark of Appanoose county, enjoined from selling liquors. The lower court enjoined the sheriff to keep the building closed for a year against any repetition of the nuisance. The supreme court set this aside and ordered the building closed for a year against any business whatsoever unless the owner file a bond, equal to the value of the property, guaranteeing that no violation of the liquor law shall take place. This is a new construction and gives greatly added force to the law.

KILLED BY ROBBERS.

Terrible Tragedy in a Kansas Town.

Atchison, Kan., Oct. 24. — Charles Kuchs and several other men were in Kuchs' store at Doniphan, seven miles north of here when two robbers came in and pointed revolvers at them. Everybody's hands went up and one of the robbers started for the money drawer, whereupon Kuchs and John Brown, son of the postmaster, made a movement to resist. Both robbers fired. Brown was killed and Kuchs wounded in the arm. Kuchs and the other occupants of the store fled and the robbers looted the money drawer and left.

WOMAN ARRESTED.

She Is Suspected of Being Implicated in a Forgery.

San Francisco, Oct. 24.—The steamer Hongkong Maru arrived from the Orient. Among her passengers is Mrs. Margerie Benton, who was placed under arrest. Mrs. Benton is accused of being an accomplice of Albert Kent, Jr., alias Albert Mannerin, under arrest in Yokohama on a charge of forging $16,000 in paper drawn on the Union Trust Company of Jamestown, N. Y.

Muscatine, Iowa, Oct. 24.—The body of James Eade, a veterinary surgeon, aged eighty-four, was found yesterday morning in a stable with throat cut from ear to ear. Supposed to be suicide.

River Creeping Up.

Langdon, Minn., Oct. 24.—The river has risen several feet here and is still rapidly rising as a result of the recent heavy rains. This has been a season of high water here.

Hurt in a Football Game.

Des Moines, Iowa, Oct. 24.—George Ervin, student at Penn college, Oskaloosa, had his skull fractured in a football game here. His recovery is doubtful.

Gen. Lawton Will Stick.

Manila, Oct. 24.—Gen. Lawton's cavalry is establishing a base at San Isidro. Launches and canoes navigate the shallow Rio Grande with considerable difficulty, but supplies have been landed in the vicinity.

Plague on a Vessel.

Antwerp, Oct. 24. — The newspaper Ch'nlen announces that the sanitary board of Scheldt has been summoned to take steps relating to a case of plague on board a steamer just arrived at Plymouth.

THE WHOLE FAMILY

KILLED BY THE HUSBAND AND FATHER NEAR REDWOOD.

Frank E. Babcock, a Half Demented Farmer, Kills the Members of His Family and Then Takes His Own Life—Each Shot Fired at Close Range, Doing Terrible Execution—Babcock Leaves a Note Saying He Went Out to Kill a Rooster and Instead Shot Theodore.

Redwood Falls, Minn., Oct. 20.—Frank E. Babcock, a farmer residing one and a half miles west of Redwood Falls, murdered his wife and three sons and then blew out his own brains, shortly before 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

The murder was committed on the farm, and there was no one present at the time it was committed, Babcock's relatives residing in an adjoining house having all gone to Redwood Falls to do some afternoon marketing. From the traces of the horrible crime, Babcock, who has been partly demented for a long time past, took down his breech loading shotgun and a rod south of his house, where his two young sons, not over eight years old, were playing. He held the gun to the face of one at close range and then fired, blowing the little fellow's head to pieces and killing him instantly. The same crime was perpetrated on the other son, the charge of shot penetrating his head at about the same place as it did the head of his first victim. Babcock then went into the house and penned a note to his brother-in-law, who was in town, to the effect that he went out to kill a rooster, and instead shot Theodore, and that he could not face the crime. Mrs. Babcock, who had seen the murder of her two sons, had in the meantime ran to the barn, and after Babcock had completed writing his note he reloaded his shotgun and went out to the barn, where he found his wife, and fired a charge of shot through her head and otherwise abused her body. Nearly a mile south of the farm house Babcock's oldest son, apparently a lad of sixteen years, was engaged in discing some breaking. From the barn the father went out to this place, and after making the son get off the disc, shot the boy at such close range as to blow the brains and hat a distance of forty feet. Then, having finished the complete destruction of his own family, Babcock withdrew the shell which contained the charge that killed his last son, replaced it with another and cocked both barrels. He then placed the muzzle of the gun to his mouth and fired, blowing out his own brains and falling over on the gun with one breech loaded and the hammer to charge it cocked.

CAUGHT IN TYPHOON.

Fears Entertained as to the Returning Fifty-First Iowa Regiment.

Victoria, B. C., Oct. 20.—The steamer Empress of India, which has reached here from Japan, has completed the round trip of forty-three voyages. The second day out from Yokohama she encountered a typhoon, which smashed all the telegraphic communication between the engine room and bridges and destroyed some of the boats. The storm continued unabated all day and night. Fears are expressed by officers for the transport steamer Senator, carrying home the Fifty-first Iowa regiment. She left Yokohama for San Francisco eight hours before the Empress and her immense upper works would fare badly in a gale.

Des Moines, Iowa, Oct. 20.—The Associated Press dispatches indicating fears that the transport Senator, now on the Pacific with the Fifty-first Iowa regiment, may have suffered heavy weather is causing great concern. The understanding here is that the Senator was not a first-class vessel, and relatives and friends of the 1,200 Iowans on board are greatly excited over the intimations of possible disaster. Gov. Shaw to-day announced the cancellation of his speaking dates and will leave at once for San Francisco, which he had not intended to do, to meet the regiment and assure proper care for the troops in case they have suffered severely.

GOOD FEELING ON BOTH SIDES.

Chicago Great Western Strike at Oelwein Is Settled.

Oelwein, Iowa, Oct. 20.—The strike in the Chicago Great Western shops was settled yesterday and seventy-five machinists have returned to work. They struck for time and a half for overtime and after being out two days the company recognized the justice of their claims. The railroad company averted, perhaps, a serious labor trouble. The boilermakers were prepared to walk out if the machinists could not win, and a general strike would have resulted. The company was fair with its men, gave them audience and listened to the grievances, and a good feeling between workmen and the company now exists.

Smaller Crop.

Ahlen, Minn., Oct. 20.—Statistics now show that there is a decrease of one-third in the grain crop of this year from last in this part of the state, and it is plainly shown upon the markets of the different places about, as the receipts of grain so far this season are several thousand bushels less than this period last year. The grain is also of a much poorer grade than last year.

Convicted of Robbing a Postoffice.

Fargo, N. D., Oct. 20.—In the United States court the jury returned a verdict of guilty in the cases of William Dockery and Ed Brown, on trial for robbing the postoffice at Edgerley.

Church Anniversary.

Hastings, Minn., Oct. 20.—The forty-fourth anniversary of St. Luke's parish was celebrated here. Bishop M. N. Gilbert of St. Paul preached in the morning. At noon a reception was given in the parlors.

Good advice is easy to get and easy to forget.

Some stump speakers branch out altogether too much.

Too much help has started many a man on the road to ruin.

No man is a hero to his valet, and no man wants to be a valet to his hero.

The man who is satisfied with himself is usually disappointed with other people.

An axiom goes without saying. Would that all earthly bores were axioms.

A man isn't necessarily rich when he is accused of having more money than brains.

A man may forget the dollar he borrowed, but he always remembers the one he loaned.

A broken heart must be worse than a broken head, no man being compelled to carry the latter around with him.

These are the days when no man can safely go away from home without carrying a fall overcoat, a straw hat and an umbrella.

The man "who knew Lincoln intimately" will have a whole lot of new ones thought up by the time the Dewey hurrah sobers down.

A year ago the $200,000,000 cloth combine would have attracted considerable comment, but coming at this late date it finds the public too familiar with such institutions to notice it.

Krupp, the gunmaker, has completed a number of excellent paper cannon and now proposes to make armor for war vessels out of the same material. Paper armor will be the final blow to the romance of naval battle and the song of the naval poet. The poet, after a hard struggle, was able to forget the towering mast and swelling sail and to write "songs of the ships of steel," but how can he handle rhyme and rhythm to glorify the ships of paper?

Now that the European demand for American apples is heavy, it being estimated that it will be this season 1,217,767 barrels in excess of the demand last year, apple-growers in this country are looking forward to much higher prices, especially as this year's home crop is from one-half to three-quarters less than what is looked upon as a full crop. In New York state farmers are now getting from 75 cents to $1.25 a barrel for apples under the trees. The standard apple for the European market is the Baldwin. Of the 12,437 barrels of this year's crop shipped since Aug. 1 the lowest price netted to the American exporter is $3 per barrel, and the price has kept nearer $4.

"Let a man tell you his story every morning and evening," said a famous Englishman, in characterizing the newspaper, "and at the end of a twelvemonth he will have become your master." What if the man is brazen-faced, a chronic liar, one who rejoices in iniquity, and is utterly reckless in principle, who is thus welcomed daily to the home-circle? Ought not a newspaper that is indifferent to truth, is self-seeking, and has no regard for individual rights or for public morals, to be treated as you would deal with a scoundrel who seeks admission to your room and company? Let an unprincipled journal tell you its daily story, and by an inexorable moral law you will in due time have an "evil spirit" for your master.

Under the terms of his father's will, which have just been made public, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., has been cut off with the portion of a younger son as punishment for marrying Miss Grace Wilson. According to information given by a person who should know the facts, this is the ultimate division of the $100,000,000 scheduled in the vest-pocket memorandum by which the late Cornelius Vanderbilt always knew how much he owned: To Cornelius Vanderbilt, Gertrude Vanderbilt Whitney, Reginald Vanderbilt and Gladys Vanderbilt, his children, $10,000,000 each. There are large special bequests to relatives, to Yale, Columbia and Vanderbilt Universities, to the Metropolitan Museum of Art and to various charities. The remainder of the estate, subject to a life interest held by his widow, is left to Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, his second surviving son. William K. Vanderbilt and the widow of Cornelius are trustees.

Porto Rico has an unfinished railway whose securities are held chiefly by French and British citizens. A scheme is on foot to complete the line by means of American capital. Is there not sufficient patriotism left over from war times to insure the buying out of these foreign shareholders and the sole American ownership of what will ultimately prove a valuable property? Porto Rico deserves encouragement. But what of the foreign bondholders of our own railroads? All our railroad bonds are owned in England and Holland.

Aguinaldo has delivered up sundry prisoners, who report that the Filipino leader fed them well, treated them kindly, and only waited the most suitable opportunity to return them to their friends. This conduct on the part of the Tagal chieftain is highly creditable and will count strongly in his favor when the final wind-up comes.

After all, there are but two really bad things about cigarette smoking. One is the cigarette and the other is the fellow who smokes it.

A PHOTOGRAPHER IN THE ANTILLES.

At the commencement of the present year I was engaged by a publishing company to visit the West Indies for the purpose of securing photographs for a forthcoming history of our newly acquired islands. I was not long in finding out that in Cuba time is estimated at only about one-third its relative value in the United States. In other words, if I wanted anything today, I could reasonably depend upon getting it the day after the morrow. Consequently I began by reluctantly reducing my six months of actual time on hand to three score days as reckoned from a standpoint of things actually to be accomplished within that period. One of the most trying institutions with which I became involved at various intervals was the railroad. And just here I wish to counsel the traveler who desires to do Cuba within a limited period to beware of the railroads and from an all-around standpoint of economy invest in a mule. By so doing he'll save time in the long run, to say nothing of expense and mental friction.

When I left Havana my first objective point was the Isle of Pines, to the southward of Cuba. In order to reach this destination it was first necessary to cross the island to Batabano, the southern seaport. The distance was thirty miles, which, at the rate of 10 cents a mile, made the fare $3. This was bad enough, I thought, until I found that the tariff placed on my photographing outfit and trunk amounted to just twice that figure, making the thirty-mile trip to cost me exactly $9. However, it was largely inexperience with Cuban customs that led me into such extortionate pitfalls. The payment of that extra $6 on my dunnage was quite uncalled for, as, notwithstanding the rules to the contrary, passengers are allowed to carry all manner of truck in the cars with them without additional expense. One native who sat opposite me in the first-class coach had with him a dog, a goat, two poll parrots and a hundredweight or so of mixed vegetables in the section he occupied.

After leaving Havana I experienced not a little difficulty through not understanding the Spanish language. On the train there was not a soul who could speak a word of English, while my command of Spanish was limited to "Quanto vale?" or "How much?" and "Mucho gracias," or "Much obliged." Before I left Cuba, however, I had added to the foregoing vocabulary a dozen or so native ejaculations of doubtful significance but indubitable potency in various cases of emergency. At Batabano I learned that a steamer had but a few hours previously left for the Isle of Pines and that two days would elapse before the departure of another. I thereupon decided to spend the interval with the Greek sponge fishers at that point. I found a number of picturesque subjects in the community, and on the whole succeeded in employing the two days to very good advantage.

While at Batabano I picked up a mascot in the person of a small black boy about 10 years of age. He was a bright little fellow and had quite a remarkable history. During the Cuban-Spanish war he was rounded up, together with several thousand reconcentrados, and confined to the limits of the town. During the terrible suffering which followed this boy was selected by Dr. Fernandez, a native doctor, to go to Havana in quest of medicine for the dying people. The trip was a most hazardous one, but the little emissary did not for a moment hesitate to attempt it. By reason of his tender years he was allowed to play around the Spanish sentries on the outskirts of the town, and, watching for a favorable moment, he finally slipped past the line and set out on his mission. Inside of a week he was back again, having trudged every foot of the sixty miles to and from Havana, while, sewed up in various parts of his clothing, were some 500 grains of quinine and morphine furnished him by Dr. Fernandez's friends in Havana. I became very much attached to this little hero and kept him with me as long as I remained in western Cuba.

Upon the return of the boat from the Isle of Pines I at once set about arranging for my transportation. This was no easy matter, as the captain, who was likewise purser and freight clerk, in response to my inevitable query of "Quanto vale?" was unable to demonstrate either by words or signs the requisite amount of cash for my passage. Finally, in despair, I offered him my wallet, from which he proceeded to help himself, apparently according to his own ideas of traffic rates. However, he left me some small change, upon perceiving which, and not having, up to that time, made any additions to my original stock of expressions, I said, somewhat lamely, "Mucho gracias." Then, as I sauntered aboard, I caught myself wondering wherefore the skipper had smiled so broadly. Upon landing with my outfit at Nueva Gerona, Isle of Pines, a few hours later, I found myself an object of much curiosity among the natives. None of them could speak English, and many of them had never seen an American before. Evidently the whole town had turned out upon the approach of the steamer, and upon landing I determined to seize the first opportunity for photographing the community. In obedience to the inspiration, therefore, I opened my traveling chest and, unlimbering my tripod and camera, proceeded to train the latter on the crowd. The effect of this act I shall never forget. If that innocent glass-eyed box had been a battery of gatling guns, it could hardly have created more consternation among my spectators. By the time I had secured my proper focus, two-thirds of their number had dodged out of sight, while, with a few exceptions, the remainder stood eying me with undisguised suspicion.

My instructions were to make a thorough tour of the Isle of Pines, and, as there are absolutely no transportation facilities other than saddle horses, I was obliged to organize my expedition accordingly. Through the assistance of Dr. Fernando Plazaola, the alcalde of Nueva Gerona, to whom I had letters of introduction, I was enabled to secure the services of two good native attendants, together with three saddle horses and two pack animals. With this outfit I made a complete circuit of the island, the expedition occupying a space of nearly two weeks. During this time I succeeded in photographing two localities which my guides declared had never before been visited by a white man. And the wilderness character of the island's interior regions seemed to thoroughly bear out their statements. This is particularly so of the great cienaga swamp, which occupies the entire southern half of the island. This vast everglade is at once the most beautiful and most desolate region one could conceive of, and furnished many rare and interesting subjects for my camera.

One afternoon, while focusing my lens on some immense cieba trees which overhung a narrow lagoon, I was suddenly startled at the sight of a huge serpent uncoiling himself from a limb of one of the very trees I was photographing. I was so thoroughly terrified at the sight that I have since wondered that I had sufficient presence of mind to complete the exposure before catching up my camera and making for the horses some distance in the rear. Upon relating this experience to my attendants they laughed heartily and gave me to understand that the species of serpents which frequent that locality, though often measuring twenty-five feet in length, are utterly harmless. Be that as it may, I can never bring myself to believe but what that formidable snake, which my photograph showed to be of the constrictor family and fully twenty feet in length, had anything but friendly designs upon my person.

After completing my assignment on the Isle of Pines I returned to Cuba, and, proceeding to the western part of Pinar del Rio, began my long zigzag tour of the island, which occupied upward of three months' time. Though availing myself of railroad and steamboat facilities whenever practicable, by far the greater part of my journey was performed either on horseback or by volante. The latter method of traveling was much the more preferable, for the two-wheeled conveyances in question are constructed purely with an eye to solid comfort—an element which cuts a large figure in the life of the average well-to-do Cuban.

After completing my work in Cuba I sailed from Santiago de Cuba on board a Spanish steamer for Porto Rico by way of Santo Domingo. One of my fellow travelers on board this steamer was Miss Gomez, a daughter of the famous Cuban general, who was on her way from Havana to her father's home in Santo Domingo. Miss Gomez was a good English scholar, and in the course of our voyage we grew to be very good friends, which fact subsequently proved most fortunate for me. At the time we touched Santo Domingo a rebellion had just started, but, in blissful ignorance of this fact, I left the steamer, in company with a chance German acquaintance I had scraped up. Managing to elude the custom-house inspectors, the pair of us wandered up the main street with our cameras. We had taken some half dozen views when two guards touched us on the shoulders and gave us to understand that we were under arrest. In vain we protested. We were taken to a miserable little jail and locked up, and there we stayed for fully ten hours before I could secure an interpreter. Finally, however, a native was admitted to my cell who could speak a little English, and I persuaded him to convey a note to Miss Gomez, with the result that the young lady in question at once interested herself in our behalf and secured our release. It appears that we were arrested purely on suspicion, on account of the unsettled state of affairs, and but for the intercession of Miss Gomez we might have been held indefinitely pending our investigation. As it was, upon being released we were ordered to go aboard our vessel at once. We could not obey this mandate any too promptly, for our steamer's twelve hours' stop was just drawing to a close and by the time we got aboard she was ready to sail. As we were leaving the harbor I secured a picture which I prize as one of the most valuable in my collection. It is a photograph of the late President Heureaux going aboard his beautiful yacht. Space will not admit of my recounting the various adventures incidental to my six weeks' tour of Porto Rico. Suffice it to say that at its expiration I had entirely exhausted my 1,000 dry plates, out of which, thanks to the excellent weather that had favored me throughout my trip, it transpired that 964 came up to the standard of acceptance by my employers.

The trip as a whole, however, was by no means the sinecure I had at first dreamed of. It required a deal of close figuring to cover it within the specified limit, not to speak of a six months' diet the staples of which were cocoanuts and baked frijoles, or my frequent bivouacs among the haunts of a million land crabs.

WEALTH AND RANK

CONSTITUTE THE RULING POWER OF ENGLAND.

The Poor, Downtrodden Producers Look Up to the People That They Contrive to Support in Idleness—London Paper Waxes in Praise of It.

The equality of opportunity and the equality of legal rights which the London Spectator lays so much stress upon unquestionably do work for that contentment with the gradations in English social life which is so apt to amaze the American traveler who thinks the masses and the classes ought to hate a lord, says the Philadelphia Press. Instead, he finds they all dearly love a lord and as a rule refrain from shying "'arf a brick at 'im." As a result of this, as the Spectator observes, in Great Britain rank does not rankle nor wealth necessarily arouse enmity. Without accepting the rather elysian picture the Spectator paints as the absolute and final statement, it should be noted that while Ian Maclaren is deploring the part that the desire for wealth and position play in American life, the Spectator confesses that wealth and rank rule English society. Their attainment may be said to be the national ideal, possible for any one under certain conditions. That wealth attains rank and rank wealth, and that they both are held in profound respect and have an influence socially and politically that is in no way inferior to wealth and position in America, must be clear when the everyday facts of English life are studied. It may be we are more practical, more concerned for the dollar, but merely because Ian Maclaren says so does not make it so, for in certain features American life is idealism personified, English life a drive for the practicabilities. It was unquestionably Mr. Astor's recognition of the infinite possibilities of wealth and rank that led him to see Albion's shores, where, as the Spectator shows, all are agreed to give wealth and rank a chance in all frankness and freedom. This contentment, the Spectator believes, presages certain changes in social life whereby reforms and a greater increase of general comfort will be promoted without the exhibition of class hatred which is shown on the continent. It also prophesies a like movement in America, since it presupposes here the same general attitude toward wealth that obtains in England. But the analogies are not altogether exact, and wealth and rank in England have a freer hand than wealth and position in the United States. Whether this be for our weal or not is open to discussion.

THE WHIPPING POST.

Ancient Institution Growing in Favor with Advanced Humanitarians.

Delaware has received much criticism on account of the whipping-post law, which has been in force some years in that state. On Saturday nine men were publicly whipped at New Castle for the crimes of burglary and petit larceny, in the presence of about 500 people. There was no pretense about the punishment. The lash was laid on according to the manner provided by the law. It is easy to say harsh things about punishment in this form, and the so-called humanitarians and the supersensitive have not been sparing in their condemnation. There is, however, another side of the case. The fact that Delaware has tried this method of punishment, and refuses to repeal the law, is evidence that experience has shown that it is not advisable to abolish the whipping-post. There is nothing more valuable in the study of crime than experience in finding out what method of punishment is best adapted to certain cases. Delaware has concluded that applying the cat-o'-nine-tails to thieves is better than locking them in jail for six months and feeding them at the state's expense. There is a law in Baltimore that provides for the punishment of wife-beaters by flogging, but such is the feeling here that but three men have been whipped for this, one of the most brutal crimes, in over ten years. The warden of the jail a few days ago emphatically declared that the only way to stop men from beating their wives is to string them up to the whipping-post and flog them. Such punishment does not compare in brutality to that of a strong man beating a weak and defenseless woman. If some of the tender hearted could see in the police court the condition of some of the women who have been thus maltreated their views might be different. Crime cannot be studied at long range, and only through the medium of books. The opinion of wardens and other experts, who have to deal directly with criminals, is of vastly more importance than the theories of the supersensitive and the extreme humanitarian. The punishment of a wrongdoer must be made to fit the crime, if society and the state are to be protected.—Baltimore American.

The Great American Hog.

The tables of exports published by the treasury department indicate a marked increase in the exports of hog products for last month. The exports of bacon amounted to over 54,000,000 pounds, of hams to nearly 22,000,000, and of pork to over 10,000,000 pounds. The export of lard alone showed a slight decrease in comparison with the same period of last year. This exhibit is the more gratifying from the fact that the agitation of the agrarian element in Europe, particularly in France and Germany, is mainly directed against the American hog. While the partisan agitation is not in the interest either of the German or French people, as it deprives them of cheap hog products, it has had the support of the governments. That in spite of it the export tables continue to show steady growth must be put down to the credit of the invincible American hog.—Denver Post.

GENEROUS LISTENERS.

Preacher Went at Point of Gun but Was Well Paid.

Writing to the Central Christian Advocate, Rev. A. P. George gives the following account of an adventure had by himself on the plains in the wild and wooly days of western Kansas: "In the early days of Garden City district, in southwest Kansas, I was camped one night, sleeping under my buggy, in Kearny county, south of Hartland. There were five of us in the party. We were all sleeping, and our campfire had died down, when one of our number was awakened by a cowboy, who wanted to know where the big preacher was. I was pointed out, and awakened by a shake with his foot. He asked, 'Are you a preacher?' 'I am,' I replied. 'Well, hustle out, we want you to come to our camp and give us a chapter of the everlasting.' 'I will be down in the morning,' I replied. He pointed his gun at me and said: 'You will come now.' I immediately answered, 'All right.' I hurried out and followed him nearly a mile away to a camp, where I found his comrades were waiting. 'Well, boys, what do you want?' I asked. 'The best you have in the shop, and we want it short and sweet, and in old Methodist style,' answered the leader. 'Then sit down,' I said, 'and, as I cannot, you must sing.' They sang with great vigor, 'Jesus, Lover of My Soul.' When I prayed I coupled prayer with watching, believing that, under the circumstances, the two should go together. I then preached them a sermon from Revelation iii, 20, entitled, 'The ladder to glory.' I have often used an hour on this sermon, but the boys wanted it short. I gave it to them in about twelve minutes, and then bade them good-night and started for the camp. 'Hold on, come back here.' They all seemed to speak at once. 'We never let a preacher go off in that style; Pete, you take up a collection,' and Pete seemed to understand his work as steward and turned me over $11."

INTELLIGENT RATS.

Blind One Was Led to Drink by Two Others.

"One day not long ago," said a brick manufacturer, "one of my workmen saw three rats carrying a long straw across the brickyard. It seemed such an unusual sort of proceeding that he stopped his work to watch them. Two of the rats held the straw at the opposite ends, while the third supported the center. They were making straight for the river, which flowed by one side of the yard. When they arrived at the bank they laid down the straw and took a long drink, then they proceeded to take up the straw again in the same manner as before and returned by the same way they had come. This so interested the workman that he determined to watch if they would come again. And sure enough, at about the same time next day, they appeared, carrying the straw exactly as before. Having provided himself with a gun, he shot all three to see if possibly he might thereby solve the mystery. He discovered that the rat in the center was blind, and therefore concluded that this was the animals' kind method of leading their afflicted comrade to the water to drink.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Don't Lend Your Evening Clothes.

"No, I am not going out in the evenings just now to anything but strictly informal affairs," remarked a friend of the Saunterer the other day. "Why? well, because just now I am not the possessor of a dress suit, and lack the wherewithal to purchase another. It happened this way: I had a friend, a good fellow, who came to me one night and asked me if I wouldn't lend him my swallowtail. I consented, but I told him I wanted the clothes back the next week, as I had a function to attend myself. Well, to make a long story short, the week went by and not a word from my friend or not a sign of my evening duds. I had to miss my date, and was pretty mad, but I didn't say anything. Another week went by and [illegible] no word. Then I decided to go out and hunt up my friend and find out if he intended to keep my clothes forever. I called at his boarding house and rang the bell. His landlady came to the door. When I asked if my friend was in she gave a deep gasp of astonishment and exclaimed: 'Why, didn't you know he was dead and buried?' It was my turn to be knocked out. After I recovered my breath I explained that I had not heard the news, and had merely called to take back my dress suit. It would doubtless be found among my friend's effects, I explained. The landlady turned pink, white and then pink again. 'Why,' she gasped, 'that must have been the suit we buried him in. It was the only good one we found among his wardrobe.' So you see the reason why I say no to 'R. S. V. P.' notes just now."

Annual Golf Expenditure.

According to statistics, golf at the present moment means an annual expenditure of £2,000,000, says Tit-Bits. Probably this is an under-estimate. There must be somewhere about 2,000 golf clubs and club houses in the world. Each of these requires a staff of servants almost comparable to that of an average hotel. Almost every one has at least one "professional" or clubmaker, who has to attend to the actual wants of the members in such matters as clubs and balls, who has men in his employ, and who may see that the links of his club are kept in order, although a special officer or greenkeeper is often retained for this duty, and, of course, is paid a special salary. In addition, each club has, partly at least, under its control a large and often ragged regiment of "caddies," of almost all ages, who carry clubs for players at a fixed rate.

Foreigners in Japan.

Japanese statistical tables indicate that there are a little more than ten thousand foreign residents in the empire, nearly one-half of them being Chinese. There are 2,115 British, 1,076 Americans, 523 Germans, 491 French, 297 Russians, the remainder being represented by small groups of different nationalities. On the other hand, the number of Japanese living abroad is not far from sixty thousand, the largest share in Hawaii and Corea. Of Japanese students abroad, numbering about twenty-seven hundred, the United States receives 2,178.

Two Singers.

Two singers there were, and one was like
To a queen in her royal gown—
With a stately step, and pride agleam
In the deep of her eyes a brown.
And one was a face with a gentler grace,
Eyes that borrowed the schoolday tint
Of a little sunbonnet of blue

One was a singer of great renown,
Now stirring the blood with a note,
Now charming the ear with cultured tones
That came from her shapely throat;
And one was a singer of songs of love,
And she knew not the ways of art;
But she sang right on past the ear and poured
Rich melodies 'round the heart.

Two tributes of song, and one was lost
In the deafening volley of cheers:
And one throbbed on when the singer was gone,
And the answer was silence and tears.
Ah! many the day that passed since then,
And the singers who are not:
But memory holds to a little song,
And the other—forgot; forgot!

The King's Plan.

A long time ago there lived a king who took great delight in teaching his people good habits. One night he put a large stone in the middle of the road near his palace and then watched to see what the people who passed that way would do. Early in the morning a sturdy old farmer named Peter came along with his heavy ox cart loaded with corn. "Oh, these lazy people!" he cried, driving his oxen to one side of the road. "Here is this big stone right in the middle of the road, and nobody will take the trouble to move it." And he went on his way, scolding about the laziness of other people, but never thinking of touching the stone himself. Then came a young soldier, singing a merry song as he went along. A gay feather was stuck in his hat, and a big sword hung at his side; and he was fond of telling great stories of what he had done in the war. He held his head so high that he did not see the stone, but stumbled over it and fell in the dust. This put an end to his merry song, and as he arose to his feet he began to storm at the country people. "Silly drones!" he said, "to have no more sense than to leave a stone like that in the middle of the road!" Then he passed on, but did not sing any more. An hour later there came down the road six merchants with their goods on pack horses, going to the fair that was to be held near the village. When they reached the stone the road was so narrow that they could hardly drive their horses between it and the wall. "Did you ever see the like?" they said. "There is that big stone in the road, and not a man in all the country but that is too lazy to move it!" And so the stone lay for three weeks; it was in everybody's way, and yet everybody left it for somebody else to move. Then the king sent word to all his people to meet together on a certain day near his palace, as he had something to tell them. The day came, and a great crowd of men and women gathered in the road. Old Peter, the farmer, was there, and so were the merchants and the young soldier. "I hope the king will not find out what a lazy set of people he had around him," said Peter. And then the sound of the horn was heard, and the king was seen coming toward them. He rode up to the stone, got down from his horse and said: "My friends, it was I who put this stone here three weeks ago. It has been seen by every one of you, and yet every one has left it just where it was, and scolded his neighbor for not moving it out of the way." Then he stooped down and rolled the stone over. Underneath the stone was a round hollow place, in which was a small iron box. The king held up the box so that all the people might see what was written on a piece of paper fastened to it. These were the words: "For him who lifts the stone." He opened the box, turned it upside down, and out of it fell a beautiful gold ring and twenty bright gold coins. Then every one wished that he had only thought of moving the stone instead of going around it and finding fault with his neighbor. There are many people still who lose prizes because they think it easier to find fault than to do the work which lies before them.—Anon.

Stealing a Bear's Cubs.

It is perhaps rather amusing to steal a pair of whimpering bear cubs and carry them off, but in one case, recorded in Current Literature, the travelers who engaged in the pastime found the grief of the mother too real to allow them to persist in the fun. They were a professor and five seniors from an eastern college, and the scene of their adventure was the Seneca Indian reservation, near the line between Pennsylvania and New York. They came upon a couple of little cubs snuggled away in the bush, and scarcely realizing what they did carried them to their boat and covered them with a coat. Then they hastily pushed off and paddled up stream to be farther from the infuriated mother when she should discover her loss. The little fellows kept up a continual crying, and soon a plunge caused the travelers to look back, and there was the old bear puffing and floundering across in search of her babies. The almost human intelligence and solicitude she displayed made it no easy matter to persist in the abduction of the cubs. Pressing on ahead of the boat a few rods, she would plunge into the stream and intercept it, and when evaded and passed would take the bank again and repeat the attempt with increased cunning. Her actions were intensely human. She screamed and scolded, wept and moaned, her tears flowing freely, her lips and under jaw trembling. She hid her face in her paws, and then held them forth as if beseeching. Some of the party were for giving up the cubs, but others held out. The babies whimpered incessantly, and the mother's demonstrations of grief grew more touching. Her anger seemed to abate, but in its place came more plaintive tones. She showed no signs of abandoning the chase. At last it was decided to surrender the cubs, and the boat was pulled cross the bank opposite to the old bear. There the little ones were gently placed on the sandy beach, and the party hurried back to the boat. They were none too soon, for the instant they lifted the babies in sight the mother started across. She went to the cubs, nosed them over, searching for wounds, and then licked their glossy fur affectionately, crying meanwhile like a human mother weeping for joy. Then after reproaching the travelers furiously for a minute, she took both cubs up by the neck, and holding them by her great jaws, carried them off into the woods.

Faithful Elephant.

An old elephant taken into battle on the plains of India was a standard-bearer and carried on his huge back the royal ensign, the rallying point of the Poona host. At the beginning of the fight he lost his master. The "mahout" or driver had just given the word to halt, when he received a fatal wound and fell to the ground, where he lay under a heap of slain. The obedient elephant stood still while the battle closed around him and the standard he carried. He never stirred a foot, refusing to advance or retire, as the conflict became hotter and fiercer, until the Mahrattas, seeing the standard still flying steadily in its place, refused to believe that they were being beaten, and rallied again and again around the colors. And all this while, amid the din of battle, the patient animal stood straining its ears to catch the sound of that voice it would never hear again. At length the tide of the conquest left the field deserted. The Mahrattas swept on in pursuit of the flying foe, but the elephant, like a rock, stood there, with the dead and dying around, and the ensign waving in its place. For three days and nights it remained where its master had given the command to halt. No bribe or threat could move it. They then sent to a village, 100 miles away, and brought the mahout's little son. The noble hero seemed then to remember how the driver had sometimes given his authority to the little child, and immediately, with all the shattered trappings clinging as he went, paced quietly and slowly away.

A Remarkable Dinner.

To have eaten apples that ripened more than 1,800 years ago, bread made from wheat grown before the children of Israel passed through the Red sea, spread with butter that was made when Elizabeth was queen of England, and washed down with wine that was old when Columbus was playing barefoot with the boys of Genoa, is surely something to be proud of, and yet this remarkable "spread" was given by an antiquary named Gorbel, in the city of Brussels, in 1871. The apples were from a jar taken from the ruins of Pompeii—that buried city to whose people we owe our knowledge of canning fruit. The wheat was taken from a chamber in one of the smaller pyramids, the butter from a stone shelf in an old well in Scotland, where it had lain in an earthenware crock in icy water, and the wine came from an old vault in the city of Corinth. There were six guests at the table, and each had a mouthful of the bread and a teaspoonful of the wine, but was permitted to help himself liberally to the butter, there being several pounds of it. The apple jar held about two-thirds of a gallon, and the fruit was as sweet and the flavor as fine as though put up yesterday.

Lost King.

In olden times, when European kings were as plentiful as Kentucky colonels are today, it was not an exceptional occurence for a king to disappear and never be heard of again. In recent times, however, the people have been more careful of their kings. So when King Sebastian of Portugal disappeared in battle July 29, 1578, while fighting the Moors at Alcazar, there was great commotion. The Moors surrendered to the Portuguese a body said to be that of the king, but it was rumored that the Moors had the live king in custody. The surrendered body was buried with royal honors at Belem, but the faithful Portuguese persisted in waiting for the return of their king. Long after he would have died in the course of nature his countrymen longingly awaited his coming. Even up to this day the legend of the return of King Sebastian is believed by many, and on stormy nights credulous Portuguese citizens will wrap their cloaks about them and go outside and watch the storm, thinking that the king may appear in a cloud of fire and again rule over his people.

A Queer Insect.

A very curious creature is the surgical ant of Brazil. The native Brazilian, far removed, as he usually is, from doctors and surgeons, depends upon a little ant to sew up his wounds when he is slashed or scratched. Truth to tell, the average surgeon could do the job no better than these little insects. The ant has two strong nippers on his head. They are his weapons for battle or forage. When a Brazilian has cut himself, for example, he picks up an ant, presses the nippers against the wound, one on each side, and then gives the bug a squeeze. The indignant insect naturally snaps his nippers together, piercing the flesh and bringing the lacerated parts close together. The Brazilian at that moment gives the ant's body a jerk, and away it flies, leaving the nippers embedded in the flesh. To be sure, that kills the ant, but, as he has served his most useful purpose in life, it is well. The operation is repeated until the wound is sewed up neatly and thoroughly.

Composition on Breathing.

A boy, 14 years old, who was told to write all he could about breathing in a composition, handed in the following: "Breath is made of air. We breath with our lungs, our lights, our liver and kidneys. If it wasn't for our breath we would die when we slept. Our breath keeps the life a-going through the nose when we are asleep. Boys that stay in a room all day should not breathe. They should wait until they get outdoors. Girls kill the breath with corsets that squeezes the diagram. Girls can't holler or run like boys because their diagram is squeezed too much. If I was a girl I had rather be a boy so I can run and holler and have a great big diagram."

FETISH WORSHIP IN CUBA.

OBI MAN AND RUINS OF VOO DOO TEMPLE, PINAR DEL RIO.

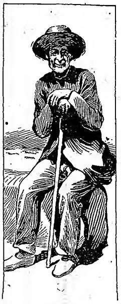
Not least of the tasks yet to be accomplished in Cuba, through the medium of an advanced civilization, is the elimination of the fanatical tendencies and customs from among the black population of the island. While superstition is an accepted characteristic of the African race, it seldom exists to a more inordinate degree than among the Cuban negroes, where fetishism is as prevalent as among the most barbarous tribes of the Congo region. This fanaticism has existed for centuries, steadily increasing with the growth of the negro element, and up to the present time utterly defying all measures tending to its extirpation. Even Spain's otherwise inexorable policy was unable to cope with a condition which had its origin in the minds of these, her lesser subjects, and her frequent efforts towards its expulsion only aggravated the evil. The half-savage black man might endure with equanimity his portion as a slave, but his oppressor as well might aim a blow at the life of his chattel as at his superstitions, for the influence of the latter over the average Cuban negro is supreme. Brute force has never yet been productive of mental reform, much less moral enlightenment. Hence the destruction, from time to time, by Spanish officials, of the tangible evidences of paganism in Cuba, and the physical castigation of its votaries, far from rectifying the condition, resulted in a moral corruptness infinitely worse than the original evil.

In a wild spot among the mountains of Pinar del Rio, which divide the cane-bearing lands along the north coast of the province from the great tobacco district in the south, are the ruins of an ancient fetish temple. Years have passed since the structure was utilized as a central place of worship by the slaves from the distant plantations; and yet to this day its fast-crumbling walls are jealously guarded by an aged Obi man, or native sorcerer. This old negro wields a strange influence over his countrymen for miles around, and his few wants are never left unattended. On the contrary, should he see fit to demand it, their utmost penny would be promptly brought and placed at his disposal—not from motives of veneration, but of abject fear. For to this crafty old individual is attributed the ability to bring about all manner of tribulation upon all who are so unfortunate as to incur his animosity. However, while by no means averse to extortion should occasion demand it, he is generally disposed to content himself with the barest necessities of life. Strangers rarely venture to the remote haunts of this ancient recluse, but the occasional traveler who chances that way must assuredly gather a strange impression from the desolated temple and its solitary, mysterious guardian. And to such a wayfarer as happens to speak the language of the island, and who has the forethought to deposit a few centavos in the withered hand of the magician, the latter will invariably unfold this weirdest of stories concerning the place:

In years long past, the great valleys on either side the mountain range were owned by two brothers, one of whom lived in the midst of his vast cane fields, and the latter among his rich tobacco lands on the other. And, strange though it may seem, the brother in the north was at enmity with him who dwelt in the south, for, notwithstanding the former's great wealth, he continually envied the other his prosperity and possessions. At that time the temple on the intervening mountain was a marvelous structure. Its tall, massive walls were covered outside with bright green plaster, while at each of the corners arose a square tower, likewise green without. At the top of each of the four towers sat a great green image, each of which was gifted with the power of a special plague. The one to the south represented a land crab controlling the plague of drought; that to the west a frog holding the fever plague; on the north, an eagle bearing the plague of war, and on the east a serpent fraught with the plague of sudden death. The inner walls of this grewsome temple were the color of blood, aside from which there were no embellishments, neither altar nor shrine. The high priest of the sect who worshiped here was a skilled Obi man, who alone controlled the four images on the four towers. When he spoke to the crab the land was straightway ravaged by drought; if he invoked the frog, the people were at once stricken with the fever; when he commanded the eagle, there speedily followed war; while the mere mention of a name to the serpent resulted in instant death to the bearer thereof. And the black people from the two great valleys alone knew the whereabouts of this temple and the source of the dire afflictions which from time to time smote the island. And it was the wont of these people to assemble on certain nights of each week in the midst of the temple to perform the rites of their sect, and to purchase exemption and favors from the omnipotent Obi man. For not only did their payment of tribute render them impervious to the plagues, but for additional sums they were enabled to have the same visited upon such of their enemies who were without the pale of the Obi man's protection.

Now, it happened that the brother who dwelt in the valley of the north became curious regarding the continued going and coming of his slaves; wherefore, he disguised himself one night and followed them to their mountain retreat. And learning here the secret of the four plagues, an evil impulse straightway entered his heart to have them all, one after another, inflicted upon his despised brother in the valley beyond. Therefore, biding his chance, he approached the Obi man and, first offering his tribute, after the manner of the slaves about him, besought the sorcerer to send the plague of drought upon all the tobacco lands to the southward. So prodigious a request, however, was not to be accorded the same readiness of favor as a minor plea; therefore, the Obi man thought to put the applicant off by demanding of him a fee such as no ordinary slave could command. But, much to his surprise, the required amount was immediately forthcoming, wherefore, the magician commanded the land crab, and the drought went forth as desired.

When the other brother beheld the great disaster that had been visited upon his lands he was sore distresed.



A FORTUNE TELLER.

Moreover, the time speedily came when famine brought his household face to face with want. Yet in the presence of his exigencies, he marveled that his slaves suffered no ills, and perceiving that they came and went at certain intervals he disguised himself, as had his brother, and followed them into the mountains. And it happened that as he reached the temple and mingled with the people therein the Obi man was in the very act of calling upon the frog to send the fever plague into his household. And he looked again and saw that the slave who desired this thing was none other than his brother disguised like himself. And when the afflicted brother understood the source of the deadly influences that were being brought against him, he fled in terror from the place, and going before the governor of the island, revealed to him the secret of the fetish temple and the baneful evils his brother was having brought upon him. So the governor sent forth his army to destroy the temple and to bring the offending brother to punishment. Now, it so happened that the army, in entering the country, passed through the persecuted brother's lands, upon hearing of which the evil brother in the north exulted greatly, believing it the result of the war plague which he had besought of the Obi man to bring into his brother's possessions. And that very night he again set out for the temple that he might cause his brother to be stricken with the final plague of death. But even as he reached the spot he perceived that a great commotion prevailed about the temple, for the governor's soldiers were in the act of demolishing the walls. But as yet one tower remained, whereon sat the green serpent. And the Obi man, who had been bound by the soldiers, seeing the brother from the north approach, and attributing to the latter's evil eye the dire misfortune that had come to pass, spoke his name to the serpent. And straightway the last plague which the wicked conspirator had intended should fall upon his brother was visited upon himself, and he fell dead before the wrecked temple. Moreover, declares the present aged guardian of the ruins, from that day the virtue departed from the cane fields in the valley to the north and entered the great tobacco fields of the south, which even until now are the richest in the island.

Neighborly.

Robert Southey, poet laureate of England, is still remembered and loved by the old people of the lake country who were once privileged to be his neighbors. All the memories of the dale that can now speak of him tell of one "who was not a man who said much to anybody except he kenned 'em, and then he wad nivver ga by wi'out passin' t'daay." The author of "Life and Nature at the English Lakes" talked with a number of the old inhabitants about the poet and scholar. "Vera kind he was," said one, "and weel thowt on, ye knaw. A partic'ler man to look upon, but not a man as iver cracked on with anybody a deal." "Remember Soothey?" said another. "Ay, bairn, wha cou'd forgit him? Sic a tall, slender man, wi' sic eyes and sic a head of hair—a vara partic'ler man" (meaning a very noticeable man) "was Robert Soothey." "He was a reg'lar church-gaer," remarked a third, "and he looved a halliday. He could gae out all wedders. If it were fine he would have a beuk in his hand he be gaan slow, and if it were wet he would step awa' grandly. There was no pride about Soothey. He moast always wore clogs, and all the bairns wore clogs, and he had a fawn-colored, all-round cwoat, and a cap with a neb to it; that was his rig; vara plain, you mind, but vara neat, but he never woro swallier-tapped cwoats, for a' they was in vogue." It is pleasant a thing that a man who is remembered by the world for his great talents should be best remembered in his own community as a kind neighbor and a good man.

Horse Was Last.

An amusing race was lately organized by a New York amusement syndicate. The starters were Sid, the largest elephant in captivity, ridden by his keeper, Bernard Dooley, and Ben Ali, camel, driven by his keeper, William Green; a bicycle, an automobile, and Australian Ben, a horse. After a preliminary canter it was arranged that the elephant and camel should start together, and that the automobile should pursue them after they had covered two laps, the horse and bicycle to follow at shorter intervals. This arrangement was found necessary because, when in line, the camel was scared by the motor car, and the horse also became very restive, while the elephant threatened to squash the cyclist with one of his forefeet. The race finished thus: Elephant Sid, 21 years old, 4 tons (Dooley), first; bicycle, Darby, 20 pounds (Schinneer), second; automobile, no name, 1,000 pounds (Honek), third; camel, Ben Ali, and horse, Australian Ben, also ran.

ONE CASE IN A THOUSAND.

How He Got His First Start in the World.

There is a gentleman in this city who is fond of telling the story of how he got his first start in the world, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. "Before I was married," he said, "I received a pretty fair salary, spending every cent of it as I went along. Then I fell in love, but, try as I would, I could not see how two could manage on what had scarcely been enough for me. We talked it over, she and I, and considered the question of ways and means. She thought we could manage with my salary, and we were both so desperately in love with one another that we were brave to the point of rashness, and were married. I did not care to assume the responsibility of making that salary go around, and so questions of finance were left to my wife. We lived modestly, but very comfortably, and gradually added pretty things to the little stock of furniture we had begun with, until at the end of five years we had all we had space for. Of course, my salary had increased in that time, but so had the family, and there were hundreds of demands for which we had made no allowance when we discussed the subject before marriage. One day, in the course of the day's work, I made the discovery that, if I had $1,000 to use immediately I could make several thousands before the week was out. That night I went home dispirited and discouraged. I began to think of the dog's life I was leading, living from day to day with no prospect of anything better as far as I could see, and by the time I had reached home I was cross and taciturn, but a good dinner put me in a better humor, and as we sat together in the dining room after the children had gone to bed I told the dear woman about the fortune that we had missed because I did not have a paltry $1,000. 'How soon will you need it?' she asked, when I had finished the story. I told her that the money would have to be forthcoming within the next three days, and asked her if she did not wish she had a fairy god-mother to supply the want. 'I will have it in three days,' she replied, confidently, and I took the answer as a joke and thought little more about it, but imagine my surprise on the third day when she handed me a check for the amount. There had not been a year since we were married that she did not save at least a couple of hundred dollars, and she had kept her own counsel about it, too, lending it in small sums to the best advantage. A thousand dollars may not seem much to you, but it was a mighty large sum to me in those days. I made the investment and made several thousand, and the first thing I did was to pay her back what she had lent me. The little bit of capital I then had was all I needed to make a start with, and from it has come all the money I have since been able to make."

Cock's Crow Saved Them.

A singular story is told of a gallant cock whose moral influence at a critical moment during the battle of St Vincent helped to save a British man-of-war from the hands of the enemy. The fowl in question formed part of the live stock of the Marlborough—a vessel which had suffered so severely that her captain was considering the advisability of striking his flag. The ship was entirely dismasted, while the chief officers had been carried below severely wounded and the crew, without anybody to cheer them up, were beginning to grow sullen under the heavy fire of the enemy, to which they were hardly able to respond. At this emergency a shot struck the coop in which the fowls were confined. The only surviving occupant, a cock, finding himself at liberty, fluttered up and perched himself on the stump of the mainmast and surveyed the scene of carnage around him. Then, flapping his wings in defiance, he began to crow vociferously. He was answered by three hearty and exhilarating cheers from the crew, who all had a good laugh, and with spirits thus renewed continued the action with a vigor that lasted until a turn in the battle rescued them from their tight position.—London Mail.

Port Mahon.

Port Mahon, in Minorca, has had a varied experience of conquerors. It was first captured in 1708 by Gens. Stanhope and Leake, who, it is said, intimidated the inhabitants by shooting arrows into the town, to which were attached messages threatening the defenders with labor in the mines in the event of continued resistance. In 1713 it was formally ceded to Britain by the treaty of Utrecht. In 1756 the neglect of duty for which Admiral Byng suffered death enabled the French and Spanish to retake it. The year 1763 saw it again ceded to Britain, but in 1782 it was surrendered once more to the Spaniards. Gen. Stuart captured it from them—this time without losing a man—in 1798, but in 1802 the peace of Amiens gave it back finally to Spain. Since then, however, the British Mediterranean fleet has repeatedly used it, and sometimes been in actual occupation of it.

A Flash from the Khedive.

A well-known Englishman, Nassau Senior, whose wife was a sister of the author of "Tom Brown's School Days," used to keep diaries in which he wrote down all the conversations he heard. On one occasion he was presented to the late khedive, who had been warned of this little habit. "Oh, yes, I see," said his highness, "Mr. Senior is the trumpet, and I am to blow down it."

DO BATHS REALLY PAY

QUEER CONUNDRUM HAS LATELY RISEN.

A Commentator Makes Bold to Say, That and Water Are a Positive Hindrance to Cleanliness—A Very Lively Discussion.

Writing of universities I am reminded of baths—which are apt to be small and ill-supplied with water at those places—and of a discussion anent them to which I listened the other day, says a writer in the Pall Mall Magazine. You remember (or you ought to remember) a passage in "Pendennis" in which Thackeray remarked on the inferiority of old buildings in the matter of baths and water. "Gentlemen, there can be little doubt that your ancestors were the Great Unwashed; and in the temple, especially, it is pretty certain that only under the greatest difficulties and restrictions the virtue which has been pronounced to be next to godliness could have been practiced at all." But it is by no means certain that connection between baths and cleanliness is so close and constant as Thackeray, in the pride of the "improvements" of which his generation boasted even more than ours, supposed to be the case. Somebody at this discussion said that baths were a luxury, a stimulus and a refreshment, but were not a cleansing process; especially did he deny this attribute to the cold tub of the morning. Another person went further (some one will always go further) and expressed the reactionary belief that baths were a hindrance to cleanliness, because they interfered with the natural action of the skin, which does the business more thoroughly. Water, he said, did not so much matter; soap was the enemy and the morning tub, if it were of the sketchy and soapless kind, was innocuous. As for me, I did not know what to think. I seldom do when arguments are going about. I remember that as an infant I was soaped all over continually, and I'm not aware of worse skin than other people—more interesting revelations. So that I will not give it as No. 1 of my "Hints to Mothers" that they should never have their babies washed. On the other hand, we see numbers of people in this and other countries who appear to be quite clean, but who would regard a bath as a novel and dangerous experiment. Man was originally amphibious—was he not?—and many of us have an instinct for cold water—many for hot, also. The actual practice of the morning tub, of which Pen and Warrington were so proud, came, I suppose, from Anglo-Indians, and it is possible that but for them it would not have occurred to us.

A MINE HERO.

He Risked His Life to Save That of a Fellow Workman.

Salt Lake Herald: Heber Franklin, a young man employed at the Clear Creek mine, is as much a hero as any man who ever braved death on the battlefield. Franklin sought not glory, but to save a human life. There was a fire in the mine. The men were called out. Then they were about to shut off the air in order to stop the flames, when it was learned that a lone miner was working deep in the mine beyond the point where the fire started and was then raging with growing strength. Here is the story of the subsequent events: Foreman Thomas immediately called for volunteers to go with him into the mine to rescue the man. Several attempts were made by different ones, but they were driven back by the flames, and the cry of "Powder" caused a hasty retreat. Finally Heber Franklin, a young man whose work keeps him on the outside, said: "I will go." And, accompanying Foreman Thomas, he pressed on through the fire and found the man working away tamping a hole, entirely unconscious of the danger threatening him. They succeeded in getting out of the mine safely, when the fan was shut off and the dip closed up. The rescue was an act of great bravery on the part of Franklin, as his work kept him on the outside and he was unacquainted with the exact lay of the land inside, and the danger of suffocation from black damp was great. He was the only man of the many standing by whose nerve did not desert him. It is stated upon good authority that ten minutes more of lost time would have resulted in the death of the miner who was at work and possibly a great loss to the company, as the supply of air could not be cut off while there was any hope of rescue, and this would have tended to feed the flames.

His Highest Praise.

Edward Terry tells of a pretty incident which occurred during a tour in Australia. "Do you know what I consider the most glowing tribute I ever received? The compliment came from a child. There was a crowded house, an intent audience, and humor had for the instant given place to pathos. You might have heard a pin drop, and I felt the tension of the house was at breaking point. The intense silence was broken by a childish voice—a girl's—who, turning to her parent, asked, in a broken voice: 'Mother, is it real?'"

He Was a Scholarly Athlete.

It is said that the pope owes much of his long and vigorous life to the healthy outdoor pastime he enjoyed when a boy. With his dog and gun he would tramp for miles over the mountains in pursuit of game. Nevertheless he was a studious boy, wrote Latin verses at the age of 11 and passed his examinations at the Roman college with such distinction that a special record was made of it in the college archives.

Your Chance of Life.

The French statistician, Dr. Livrier, says that half of all human beings die before 17; that only one person in 10,000 lives to be 100 years old, and that only one person out of every 1,000 lives to be 60.

The Saleslady's Romance.

"Yes, I'm in the necktie department now. I like it ever so much better than selling ribbons. Men are so much easier to suit than women. All you've got to do is smile at them and you can sell them any old thing. The women will linger over the whole stock and not buy 10 cents' worth—just as if a lady had nothing to do but show goods. Besides, I don't like the floorwalker in the ribbon department. The one we've got now is lovely. His name is Perkins—Horatio Perkins—and he's just as swell.

"And, say, can you keep a secret? He's—you won't tell a soul?—well, he's in love with me. No, he hasn't said so yet, but I can tell by the way he looks at me—never takes his eyes off me from morning till night. He's jealous, too, and that's a sure sign. You ought to've seen him yesterday when George came in to invite me to the bill poster's ball. George—he's my old steady, you know—well, he and I was standing there talking when Horatio—I mean Mr. Perkins—came along. He gave me an awful fierce look, but I never let on that I seen him, but just kept right on talking.

"Then he stepped right up to me and says, his voice quivering with suppressed emotion, he says: 'Miss Robinson,' he says, 'are you aware that there are half a dozen customers waiting for you?'

"I know he only said that so as not to betray his real feelings, because when I turned around there wasn't any six customers there at all. There was only four."—New York Journal.

The lord mayor's show is an annual theme for the newspapers. Very little can be said about it that has not been said again and again. It costs about £2,000, the banquet from £2,000 to £3,000. The show has sunk during the century to borrowing some of its splendors from the "property man." Thereby hangs a tale.

A certain lord mayor hired from the Surrey theater two suits of armor, brass and steel, with a couple of supers to go inside them. The manager of the Surrey stipulated, by the way, that the steel armor should not be used if the day be a wet or a foggy one. After the show the men in armor were taken to the Guildhall, remaining there several hours without food. No one, it appears, was able to rid them of their ironmongery.

Wine was given them, and the man of brass became intoxicated. The bystanders, thinking if he fell about that he would injure others as well as himself, tried to eject him. But he showed fight, and, to add to their further dismay, his companion in arms joined him. They were overcome at last only by sheer weight of numbers. Then the maker of the armor was sent for. He eventually succeeded in freeing the men, who were in danger of being stifled by the weight of their equipment.—Good Words.

Treating Insomnia.

So many people suffer from insomnia nowadays that it is a wonder they do not adopt the time honored custom of French kings and indeed of our ancestors generally, the "en cas" by the bedside, the meal of fruit or bread and cold chicken, put ready in case of wakefulness. Many a merry little meal might be eaten in the middle of the night, when thoughts crowd on the mind and care sits heavy. It is the wakeful digestion that claims its due and clamors to be fed. Our forefathers were wise, and many a hunter after old furniture knows the quaint little cupboard with a grated door which served for the night meal and is now sometimes labeled a cheese cupboard. A bedside book is of no use when the pangs of hunger make for mastery, but with a book and a "snack" one can contrive to pass some pleasant hours, even when sleep does not touch one's eyelids and the sweet boon of unconsciousness evades one's grasp.—New York Times.

Edible Birds' Nests.

The nests of the little swift (a kind of swallow), gathered along the rocky cliffs with so much difficulty and yet in such quantities on account of the Chinese demand, are formed of a salivary secretion which soon becomes firm on exposure to the air. It is a glutinous white substance with little red dots. They are clean, the nests being taken as soon as completed. The little swift, being repeatedly robbed, is at last compelled to eke out its waning supply of secretion with little sticks and grass and is thus enabled to lay its eggs and hatch its young, as only nests free from foreign material are merchantable.—"A Sketch of the Philippines" in Self Culture.

Horse on Him.

"Got a good joke on myself," said the man who has accumulated a little property by hard work. "I asked my wife what was the difference between me and a horse, intending to say that I was a forehanded man and the horse was a four footed beast. What do you suppose she said?"

"Give it up," said the other man.

"Said she guessed it must be the length of my ears."—Indianapolis Journal.

Like His Father.

"Charley, dear," said young Mrs. Torkins, "the baby is trying to talk again. It's wonderful how he takes after you!"

"What was he talking about?"

"I think it must have been politics. He started very calmly, but in a few minutes he was as angry and red in the face as he could be."—Washington Star.

Anaesthetics were known in the days of Homer, and the Chinese 2,000 years ago had a preparation of hemp known as "una yo" to deaden pain—something similar to our modern cocaine.

POISONED WEAPONS.

HOW SAVAGE NATIONS MAKE SURE OF DEALING DEATH.

Some of the Venomous Mixtures Used by the Barbarians Retain Their Life Destroying Properties For an Indefinite Time.

From the age of stone up to the time when the art of killing one's neighbor led to the discovery of powder and firearms primitive peoples, owing to the insufficiency of their weapons to cause prompt death, have invented means of giving them poisonous qualities. Poisoned weapons, whether they are arrows, knives, lances or what not, may get their fatal properties from either vegetable or animal poisons.

The South American Indians use curare; the natives of India, Indo-China, Borneo and the Moluccas employ, or rather did employ, the upas to poison their weapons; the negroes of the Sudan and the Kongo still make use of a poison extracted from different varieties of strophanthus called m'bannon or ine, according to the regions where it is employed: the people of South Africa, the Hottentots, the Bushmen, the Kaffirs and the Akkas, poison their arrows with the venom of divers serpents, the cobra de capello among others; certain tribes of equatorial Africa, the N'Dris and the Banjiris, use their arrows after long burial in decomposing corpses, to communicate blood poisoning, which results in speedy death; in Oceanica the natives of New Caledonia, the Hebrides and the Solomon group give their enemies lockjaw by soaking their arrows in marshes containing large quantities of the bacillus of tetanus.

The first three kinds of poison are practically of vegetable origin, though the local medicine men mix with their preparations red ants, snakes' venom, toads' eyes, etc. They are the characteristic alkaloids of plants, which serve as the basis of a deadly poisonous mixture. Curare, upas and m'bannon have as their principal elements plants whose species vary with the tribe, and which all belong to the strychnine family. The three last named poisons, except that of the South African negroes, are of microbial origin.

What are the value, duration and activity of these poisons? Curare keeps indefinitely. In 1757 in the course of experiments in physiology made in France with curarized arrows brought in 1752 from equatorial America by La Condamine, a fowl scratched with one of these arrows died in seven minutes. Among the Oniteto Indians, lumps of curare handed down from father to son have preserved all their poisonous activity, although covered with mold. The same may be said for the upas, which, kept in little sections of bamboo for seven or eight years, retains the same active qualities as when freshly prepared. Malay weapons, even those of steel, always keep their poisonous properties.

The black races that use ine claim that it will keep only a short time before it spoils. Now, ine, which is an aqueous maceration of strophanthus seeds, to which is added the juice of a fig or of a euphorbi, and generally also vipers' venom, becomes covered with mold at the end of a few weeks, but notwithstanding it has preserved all its toxic properties. Guinea pigs have been killed in a few minutes by being scratched with arrows whose points had molded. In fact, the vegetable poisons used by primitive peoples for their arrows keep indefinitely and always make effective weapons.

This is not the case with poisons of animal or microbian origin. As we have seen above, the Bushmen, the Kaffirs and the Akkas poison the points of their arrows with serpent venom, especially that of the cobra. At the end of two or three weeks their arms have lost all harmful quality. This is due to a single cause. The venom of snakes, which is preserved indefinitely in alcohol, becomes covered in air with a peculiar mold, which has not been studied hitherto and which removes all poisonous effect from the venom.

The poison used on the arrows of the N'Dris of the Upper Ubanghi is nothing else than the septic vibrio (microbe of blood poisoning), which dies in the air if it is not in the presence of decomposition. Thus those arrows are harmful only during a very short time. As for the arrows of the New Caledonians, which infect their victim with tetanus, authorities do not agree about the duration of their harmful action, although it is proved that the bacillus of Nicolaier cannot live except in a very moist medium and together with other bacilli, harmless or otherwise, such as the septic bacillus, which, as we have seen, dies in a short time.

Thus in all cases the poisoned arrows of the races that make use of vegetable alkaloids are much more to be feared than those of the tribes that employ poisons of animal or microbian origin.

A "Sure Thing" Bet.

Those who are unsportsmanlike enough to bet on a sure thing might try this: A bets that B cannot endure a piece of ice on his arm for two minutes, A to select a place between the fingers and the elbow. B bares his arm, and A puts a lump of ice on the pulse in the wrist. In 41 seconds usually the pain becomes so great that B gives it up. This catch originated on the London Stock Exchange. It is said that Guy Kickalls, the oarsman, is the only one who ever endured the pain two minutes.

A Denial.

"So," exclaimed Senator Sorghum indignantly, "that man told you my vote was for sale?"

"He said so in so many words."

"Well, you can go to him and refute the calumny. It's for rent once in awhile, but never for sale."—Washington Star.

The Army and Navy.

Have covered themselves with glory during the war. The Army and Navy vest pocket memorandum book published by the Northern Pacific is a compact digest of information relative to the navies and armies of Spain and the United States at the beginning of the war. It has a map of Cuba, illustrations of naval ships, glossary of navy and army terms, translation of Spanish words, etc. Send ten cents to Chas. S. Fee, general passenger agent, N. P. R., St. Paul, Minn., for a copy.

A Political Trick.

"There is a good deal of pure moonshine," said a local warhorse now out of harness, "in the faculty of remembering names and faces which is attributed to most successful politicians. In nine cases out of ten they have no abnormal powers of that kind, and their apparent feats of memory are very easily explained. Take, for example, the case of a political personage at a public reception. He is sure to be surrounded by a group of local leaders who know everybody in town. Presently a valuable constituent approaches. 'Colonel,' whispers one of the henchmen, 'here comes Mr. Blank. He's an active party worker and a great admirer of yours. He met you here last fall.'

"The personage catches on promptly. 'What does Blank do?' he whispers back.

"'He's a produce merchant,' replies the henchman. By that time the valuable constituent gets in range.

"'How are you, my dear Mr. Blank?' exclaims the notable cordially. 'I'm delighted to see you again. And how is the produce business coming on?'

"Poor Blank has spasms of joy. That the famous man should remember him so accurately makes him as proud as a peacock, and 20 spectators proceed to tell the story in proof of the colonel's miraculous mental gifts. Thus reputations are made."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

The Bishop's Label.

Bishop Huntington once went down to a town in Connecticut to perform a marriage ceremony. He arrived the day before the wedding, and he left at the same time the bridal pair did, although he was driven to a different railway station. As he passed through the station, carrying his travelling bag, he was aware that he was creating a sensation, but was totally at a loss to account for it. In the car he found that he was still the object of amused attention. The porter positively snickered as he passed his seat, and finally just as the train drew out he came up and assisted the churchman to remove his overcoat.

"What is the matter with you, my man?" asked the bishop. The porter's snicker broadened into a laugh.

"Ain't you done lef' the lady, sah?" he chuckled.

"Eh?" exclaimed the bishop in surprise. Then his eye fell on the side of his travelling bag which the porter had just turned round. There glued to it was a white strip of white satin ribbon on which was painted in large letters:

"Married this morning."

The facetiously minded best man had mistaken the bishop's travelling bag for that of the bridegroom, and a chuckling black porter worked late into the night removing that ribbon.—Washington Post.

When Coal Gives Out.

The Adirondack region abounds with streams, most of which can some time be made use of as sources of power for carrying on industries, running railroads and furnishing light and heat. Indeed, the great problem at present is not at all to find available heads of water, but to devise means of transmitting the power with the minimum loss for long distances.

It is impossible to believe that with the success of existing plants and the spectacle of practically unlimited power going to waste on every hand, to stimulate inventive genius, methods will not be devised before very long for overcoming this difficulty of transmission.

Whether it is by the discovery of some new conveyor or by using a succession of generating plants or by a process of storing the electricity and conveying it by freight or express or however, the new power is bound in time to come into practically universal use. If the difficulty of transmission is never wholly obviated, it may be there will be some regrouping of industries and communities in the near vicinity of important sources of water supply.—Gunton's Magazine.

The Cause of It.

A reflection not altogether without value to such feminine scribes as have not yet found their public is contained in a remark made at a recent dinner in London, where 200 literary women met one another. Says the London Outlook:

As the extremely well dressed crowd surged and swayed round the platform after the recitation which followed the dinner a young woman ventured to remark to one of the "old hands" upon the exceedingly prosperous appearance of several of the literary women.

"Bless you," was the quick response, "that is not literature—it is husbands!"

Things to Remember.

Never forget that women are made out of girls and that men are made out of boys; that if you are a worthless girl you are a worthless woman, and if you are a worthless boy you will be a worthless man, and the best educated men and women once did not know "A, B, C;" that all the things which you are learning had to be learned by them; that the efforts spent in making others happy will in some way add to your own happiness; that a life of usefulness and helpfulness is worth many times more than a life of pleasure.

Not Amusement.

"I am willing to do almost anything for amusement," panted the portly member of the Tourists' club, who had dragged himself half way up the mountain side and stopped to rest, "but this is a little too much."

"This isn't amusement," explained one of the other members of the club. "This is sport."—Chicago Tribune.

Print paper is rapidly advancing in value and as a result New York City papers find that it costs them $2000 a day more than formerly to issue their publications. It also effects country publishers, and as the Mapleton Enterprize correctly says those who are trying to run dollar a year papers will find their profits on the wrong side of the ledger.—Albert Lea Standard.

N. J. VERNON, Pastor.

One day a generation ago, says a Wisconsin exchange, a curious vehicle rolled into a Wisconsin town. Its wheels were solid pieces of wood sawed from a round log; its axles small unhewed trees, upon which rested a planed log bearing a box of clothing and a yellow haired bright-eyed boy, driving an indescribable horse. The boy was a Scandinavian emigrant, whose parents lived in a neighboring woods, and he had come to town with a few dollars and much determination to get an education. This was the beginning of the career of Knute Nelson, the chief of one of the political parties of Minnesota and one of its United States senators. It may be doubted if a single youth who starts to school this fall will do it with fewer material advantages than this son of Scandinavia. How many will climb as high?

Do You Hunt Deer?

"The license law is going to be strictly enforced," said executive Agent Bentner to a St. Paul Pioneer Press reporter. "Any man that wants to go after big game must get his license from the county auditor before he starts and be sure he takes it with him. The deputies have orders to arrest any one they find in the big woods with a gun and no license.

"Does that include the dog?" "No, sir. Nobody is allowed to hunt big game with dogs. The wardens have been instructed if they see a dog in the big woods with a hunter to shoot the dog on sight. There's nothing that worries a deer worse than being chased all the time by dogs. That's strictly forbidden."

The license are obtainable from any county auditor at a cost of 25 cents for residents of Minnesota and $25 for others.

Cavalry Horses.

A veteran cavalry horse partakes of the hopes and fears of battle just the same as his rider. As the column swings into line and waits, the horse grows nervous over the waiting. If the wait is spun out he will tremble and sweat and grow apprehensive. If he has been six months in service he know every bugle call. As the call comes to advance the rider can feel him working at the bit with his tongue to get it between his teeth. As he moves out he will either seek to get on faster than he should or bolt. He cannot bolt, however. The lines will carry him forward, and after a minute he will grip, lay back his ears, and one can feel his sudden resolve to brave the worst, and have done with it as soon as possible. A man seldom cries out when hit in the turmoil of battle. It is the same with a horse. Five troopers out of six, when struck with a bullet, are out of their saddles within a minute. If hit in the breast or shoulder, up go their hands and they get a heavy fall; if in the leg or foot or arm they fall forward and roll off. Even with a leg cut off by a jagged piece of shell a horse will not drop. It is only when shot through the head or heart that he comes down. He may be fatally wounded but hobbles out of the fight to right or left and stands with drooping head until the loss of blood brings him down. The horse that loses his rider and is unwounded himself will continue to run with his set of fours until some movement throws him out. Then he goes galloping here and there, neighing with fear and alarm, but he will not leave the field. In his racing about he may get among the dead and wounded, but he will dodge them if possible and in any case, leap over them. When he has come upon three or four other riderless steeds they fall in and keep together as if for mutual protection, and the "rally" of the bugal may bring the whole of them into ranks in a body.—Buffalo Horse World.

The easiest way to extract a splinter deep in the flesh of the hand or foot is by means of steam. A rather wide mouthed bottle is filled two thirds full of boiling water, and the injured spot is held close over the opening. The suction draws the flesh down, and a little additional pressure is used to assist the exit of the intruder. In a few minutes the steam extracts the splinter and the inflammation rapidly subsides.—Ex.

—Dr. Thomas is an up-to-date in all the different branches in his profession. Remember the dates, Nov. 20th and 21st.

Drink Buttermilk.

But few appreciate buttermilk. It would be a sorry day for the doctors and hogs if everybody ate and drank as much buttermilk as this writer. I give buttermilk considerable credit for the fact that I have never been so sick as to have a doctor come and feel my pulse and look at my tongue. I don't believe we would find half as much error and nonsence in our agricultural papers if all the editors would eat and drink buttermilk. Buttermilk clears the brain and cleans the blood. A noted physician said not long ago that buttermilk is "a true milk peptone." That is, milk already partially digested It is a decided laxative and nothing equals it in habitual constipation. It is a diuretic and is excellent for kidney troubles. It is the most refreshing and digestible of all the products of milk. Nothing is better in the treatment of diabetes. In some cases of cancer of the stomach and gastric ulcer buttermilk is the only food that can be retained. One of my neighbors spent money enough to go to the Philippines for doctors, drugs, etc., to cure his rheumatism, without getting any better. I told him a few barrels of nice buttermilk would drive rheumatism from his anatomy, and it was done with less than a barrel, worth about twenty cents per hundred pounds to feed hogs. I know of half a dozen in this county who lay the cure of their rheumatism to lopperet milk and buttermilk. Any of you who think your system needs a little beer, whisky, or tobacco try buttermilk instead (give it a good trial) and become happier and healthier. The only stimulants this writer takes in his old age are buttermilk and loppered milk, and my friends (and I too) are proud of me.—A. X. Hyatt.

A RECRUITING OFFICE

From the Chicago Daily Tribune: Beyond the remembrance of today, the tune and sentiment of "The Girl I Left Behind Me" have appealed to those whose share in war has been to sit and wait. In piping strains the one has appealed to a martial spirit which has made possible the romance of the other. "The Mother I Left Behind Me" has been left unsung.

But day after day, Mrs. Robert W. Humphrey, 3511 Dearborn street, sits out the long hours waiting and expectant of a dire something, she knows not what. Her youngest son is gone, and on the high front stoop of the little cottage or in its homelike rooms she sits with her worn fingers twining and intertwining as she looks and listens.

Leopold Humphrey, her youngest son, is a deserter from the United States army no less than he is a deserter from home. In the one the relentless shadow of militarism is on his trail. In the other, a mother's love is reaching out to him. Menaced by the one and yearned for by the other, he is gone, no one knows where.

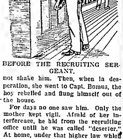
Yet in the government recruiting station in West Madison street "The Girl I Left Behind Me" is piped, and from the dingy stairway there are seen in fancy, the far-off, blue lines of the Philippines, from which are heard the thunders and the taps of war.

"But they should not have taken my boy," cries the old mother, helplessly. "They should have let me know. My youngest boy—only 17—they should have let me know—they should have let me know."

Sixteen years ago Robert Humphrey came to Chicago from Canada. Four boys, two girls and Baby Leopold were of his household. A carpenter by trade, he has labored in his grim, Scotch way. Two sons have become citizens of the United States, but he, doggedly, has stuck by his nationality and by the traditions of his native country.

"He never looked much after the boys," sobs the mother, brokenly; "they were mine—they never gave me trouble till now—five of them, nearly all grown and raised up in this big city and none of them bad. Oh, they ought to give my boy back to me!"

Often of late the boy had spoken of the Philippines and of the glamour of war. No one took him seriously until the other night, coming home, he showed the vaccination mark of the recruiting office on his arm. Tears and protests from his mother would not shake him. Then, when in desperation, she went to Capt. Bomus, the boy rebelled and flung himself out of the house.



BEFORE THE RECRUITING SERGEANT.

For days no one saw him. Only the mother kept vigil. Afraid of her interference, he hid from the recruiting office until he was called "deserter." At home, under that higher law which evolved the wondrous thing called mother-love, he was only a wayward son breaking a mother's heart.

"Why did he do it—oh, why did he do it?" was her cry. "He was only 17—neighbors who were here when we came will tell you so. They know it at the Webster school, too. But the captain says to bring the boy before I bring proof, and I don't know where he is."

But out of the whirl of West Madison street last Saturday afternoon the missing son and missing soldier gave himself up to militarism. Its glamour is in his eyes, even as he sits silent in the guardhouse at Fort Sheridan. To the old mother only the word "missing" is worse than "prison."

"Won't you ask the captain to send him back to me? They should have asked me first, but they let him tell a story there—and he never told stories before. I have been so proud of my children, too. Ask the captain, won't you? Ask the captain to let him off; he is such a kind man, I know he wouldn't hurt my boy. It is awful to have him go to prison.

"He didn't mean to desert. He was only afraid I would keep him from going—and he is so young! His arm is crooked, too. I didn't think they took boys with crooked arms. When you see the captain won't you plead for his old mother? I don't want him to go to war; I don't want him to go to prison. Don't you think they will let him come back to me?"

Sitting crouched on the stoop of her little home, the last view of the mother was of one silently wringing her hands. With the hope of mother-love and with the despair of one who fears and doubts the penalties of militarism, she waits. Somewhere and somehow, in the intricacies of a social evolution, he is lost to her, but above the voice of despair, blithe and buoyant, echo the staccato notes of "The Girl I Left Behind Me."

Capt. Bomus of the recruiting station has given rein to his sympathies for the old mother. But the name of the recruit is on the rolls of the United States army, and the papers have gone to Washington. If the boy is not of age he has deceived several individual experts. If he is of age he is a deserter. In either case his return may earn for him a court-martial and a prison sentence of one or two years.

"He looks the 22 years that he acknowledged to me," said the captain, speaking of the case. "One of the last things urged upon him was the fact that a court-martial would await him if he were married or were under age. He accepted the conditions, and only the department at Washington can deal with him now."

Married men under no circumstances and minors only with the consent of parents or guardians are admitted into the United States army. Eighteen years of age is the limit above which minors will be received, while 35 years is the other extreme for adults.

"We have few cases of anxious mothers," said the captain, "but anxious wives making inquiries are common. It is not always, however, that the wife's anxiety is due to affection.

"'I only wanted to know if he's good and gone,' is a common expression of one form of anxiety, and if we can assure the wife, she goes away happy."

Other wives, from affection or from the need of a husband's support, come to make trouble. If they are persistent, the case ends in the court-martial of the recruit for having enlisted under a false affidavit.

In these days, all day long the sidewalk in front of the recruiting station at 82 West Madison street is thronged with male specimens from the undercurrents of that thoroughfare. Halting and hesitation are read in many of the faces, both white and black. Desperation in others. In a few are the jaunty assurances that come only to the old-timer who has come up again for re-enlistment, and those in regimental blue, square-shouldered and erect, pass and repass in the conglomerate gatherings, the leaven that is making for the peopling of the Philippines with the bayonet and the sword of civilization.

HOUSETOP SCULPTURE.

Ruskin Said Some Severe Things About It—His Denunciation.

The extensive alterations which are proceeding at the Athenaeum club, and which include the addition of a story to its height, have been thought in more than one quarter to be likely to spoil the effect of the beautiful frieze, modeled after the Greek, that runs around the top of the building as originally designed, says the London News. There is, however, some misapprehension as to whether this is the club decoration which has won the singular fame of being denounced by Mr. Ruskin, for, in point of fact, it was not the Athenaeum at the corner of Pall Mall and Waterloo place that the great art critic had in mind, but a "service" club further along Pall Mall. The denunciation was made in the second of Mr. Ruskin's lectures on architecture, delivered in Edinburgh as long as the November of 1853. He was condemning as a grievous waste of money the constant habit of putting careful sculpture at the tops of the houses, and he went on to say: "A temple of luxury has just been built in London for the Army and Navy club. It cost £40,000, exclusive of purchase of ground. It has upon it an enormous quantity of sculpture, representing the gentlemen of the navy as little boys riding upon dolphins, and the gentlemen of the army—I couldn't see as what, nor can anybody, for all this sculpture is put up at the top of the house, where the gutter should be, under the cornice. I know that this was a Greek way of doing things. I can't help it; that does not make it a wise one. Greeks might be willing to pay for what they couldn't see, but Scotchmen and Englishmen shouldn't."

Dress Allowances of Royalty.

People sometimes wonder what sum is put aside for dress by the daughters of royal houses. An enterprising fashion writer tells us that before her marriage the duchess of Fife had a very small dress allowance—about $1,500 a year. Besides yachting and everyday dresses and all the usual costumes required by a girl of the upper class, royal princesses have also to wear the costly and elaborate dresses which their rank demands at the weddings of their near relations. They are, however, fortunate in having stores of beautiful laces, priceless furs, and marvelous jewels, all of which can be used again and again. On the whole, it may be asserted that a frugal princess may spend as little as $5,000 a year on her dress, while her more wealthy and extravagant sister may find her dress bills amount to ten times that sum. Age has nothing to do with the matter, for the queen of Italy spends far more than does her beautiful young daughter-in-law, the crown princess of Naples. The empress of Russia, who more than any other European princess is able to indulge her wildest fancies, dresses with the greatest simplicity. In the daytime she mostly wears tailor-made coats and skirts and in the evening favors the purest white materials.—Philadelphia Times.

Better Walk in Java.

A gentleman who has been traveling in Java thus writes about the Dutch colonial railways. He says: "Trains are used in Java, not on account of their speed, but on account of the long distances one has to cover. If you are in a hurry and you haven't more than five miles to go—walk. You may find some difficulty in keeping up to the train if it is going down a stiff gradient, but you will romp past it on coming to the slightest ascent. It is a solemn fact," he continues, "that once in the course of a mile walk along a highway running parallel with the railway line, I caught up to and passed a 'snell' (express train). Toward the end of the walk I entered a shop to purchase some cigars, and only after I had been in the shop ten minutes did the train pass me again."—Pinang Gazette.

A Misleading Apology.

"When you eat, be careful to leave off hungry," is advice often given at the dinner table, but seldom received in an obedient spirit. The caution was repeated not long since to a young man of vigorous appetite. "Pshaw," said he, "you might as well tell me to wash my face and be careful to leave off dirty."

COLD BLUFF.

And the Way It Worked Upon a Gang of Toughs.

New Orleans Times-Democrat: "A bluff is a valuable weapon sometimes," said a business man of this city who used to reside in California. "I had that fact firmly impressed on my mind one night while I was living in Frisco. I had gone down to the water front on some business, was detained until late and came back through a notoriously tough section known as the 'Barbary coast,' given over to dives, dance halls and the worst type of sailors' boarding houses. Very foolishly, I stepped into a particularly sinister-looking corner groggery to light my cigar, and the minute I got inside I recognized that I was going to have trouble. Half a dozen hoodlums were lounging in front of the bar, and before I knew it a couple of them were between me and the door. When a stranger happens into such a den alone the usual program is to hold him up and beat him to a jelly, and if he appeals afterward to the police there are plenty of witnesses to swear he was drunk and started the fight. I saw that was likely to be my fate, and resolved on a big bluff. Without paying any attention to the gang I pulled out my watch as if to see the time. It was a handsome watch, with a large diamond in the case. 'Say, what's dat stone in de lid?' asked one of the toughs, coming up close. 'Can't you see,' I replied, 'it's a diamond. Here, take a look at it.' With that I unhooked the timepiece from the chain and put it in his hands. Words cannot describe the astonishment of the crowd. The ruffians looked at each other and then looked at me, evidently nonplused. I was quaking inwardly, but I managed to return their stares unmoved, and finally the bartender beckoned to a fellow who seemed to be the leader, and the two had a whispered conference. 'Give de man his watch,' said the tough when he returned, and it was promptly handed back. As I was putting it on my chain he asked me to have a drink, but I declined and walked out, expecting every minute to get a sandbag on the back of my head. Without a doubt the gang thought I was a detective, and that I probably had a posse on the outside. They couldn't understand my promptitude in handing over the watch, and it certainly saved me from a slugging and may have saved my life."

Walrus Hide Expensive.

In front of a John street car, hanging idly on an iron rod, is a very peculiar piece of leather. From a short distance it has the appearance of a large, weather-beaten piece of planking, but on closer scrutiny it presents the rough, welted appearance of an elephant's hide, and a leather grain is discernible. An inquiry brought out the fact that it is an unusually good piece of walrus' hide. These hides are usually taken from walruses on the coast of Norway, and it is said that the best ones are English tanned. The tanning consumes from one to three years when properly done, and in process is similar to that used on horses or cow hide. The hides are eight to ten feet long, and four to six feet wide. Their thickness varies from seven-eighths of an inch to three inches. The three-inch hides are becoming much rarer than they were a few years ago, an inch and a half being a good thickness today. The average weight of "a side o' walrus" is 150 pounds, and the maximum about 220 pounds. The hides are sold by weight, but a pound of three-inch hide is worth about three times as much as a pound of one-inch hide. The present price of one-inch hide is about a dollar per pound. Walrus' hide is extensively used for metal polishing. It is almost indispensable to jewelers, bicycle factories or stove works where wheels of the hide, revolving rapidly, are used to remove mars and scratches and to polish the finer metal surfaces.—New York Mail and Express.

Cost of Innovation.

A Memphis family, which employs an old-time negress as a cook, recently had a gas range put in the kitchen. When the range was put in place the workman who put it there lighted the jets inside the oven, and then closed the doors. He opened them, turned off the gas and then, relighting the jets, explained to the old negress how the range was used. The jets cannot be seen when the doors of the oven are closed, and in the excitement of the explanation the workman closed them and forgot the lighted jets. The old negress, after hearing all he had to say, said: "T'aint no use ter tell me erbout hit. I'm gwinter use dis yere old wood stove what I'se cooked on so long." The workman laughed and went away, not thinking that the old cook meant what she said. She did mean it, though, and continued to use the old wood stove to cook with. When the head of the family that employs her received his gas bill fifteen days after the gas stove was put in he almost dropped dead. The bill showed that he owed the gas company $21. Investigation proved that the jets in the oven had been burning from the time the workmen left. The old cook had never opened the oven doors.—Memphis (Tenn.) Scimitar.

Wendell Phillips' Hair-Shirt.

Recalling his conversations with Ralph Waldo Emerson, during his first visit to America, Justin McCarthy writes in the Youth's Companion: "We talked about Wendell Phillips, whom I had already met in New York, and he expressed his regret that Phillips could not be prevailed upon to come to any of the dinners of the Saturday club, for he was so strong a devotee of total abstinence that he was unwilling to be present at a dinner when wine was drunk. I began to express somewhat emphatically my regret that a man so gifted and otherwise so genial should have such rigid views. Emerson smiled his sweet smile again and said, 'Well, well, I know how much Wendell Phillips likes pleasant and intellectual company, and so let us at least give him the credit of his hair shirt.'"

SUFFOCATE.

Do Certain Animals When Their Mouths Are Held Open.

Animals of the horse kind can only breathe through the mouth with great difficulty and effort, so that if their nose is obstructed they tend to suffocate. Even their vocal sounds are uttered through the nose as a rule, but when they do use the mouth, the cry is made with obvious effort, and is generally of a strident character. The horse's neigh is made by respiratory efforts through the nose, and is easy and spontaneous in character; but the scream it utters when in mortal pain is made through the mouth, and is labored and unnatural. The donkey makes a pleasant hissing noise through the nose when pleased, but its bray through the mouth is painful and labored. Large, open nostrils form an important feature in a thoroughbred horse, for from its inability to breathe through the mouth it is dependent on its nose for its "wind" when going at great speed. Much lower in the scale of life we find the frog, which suffocates when its mouth is forcibly kept open.

DEEP IN THE OCEAN.

At the bottom of the ocean the temperature is down to freezing and often below it. There is no light and the enormous pressure of a ton to the square inch in every thousand fathoms, or sixteen times more pressure than we endure.

Twenty-five hundred fathoms deep the pressure is thirty times that of an engine drawing a train. Ground sharks brought up from no more than 500 fathoms die before reaching the surface of the water.

The fauna of the deep sea are modified forms of those which live in shallow water today, and they have been driven down to ocean depths through the law of the survival of the fittest. In the battle for existence their stronger rivals triumphed in the surface waters, and those beaten and discouraged sunk below.

Of course, animals driven to these depths would gradually change in form. Down to 900 fathoms their eyes have become larger, so that they may see by the faint light. After 1,000 fathoms the eyes are huge or else disappear altogether, and enormous feelers take their place. At great depths eyes are of no use.

Taught His Dog to Pace.

Minneapolis Journal: M. B. Scott, a veterinary surgeon of Faribault, S. D., has a novelty in the shape of a wonderful pacing dog. So far as is known, this is the only instance on record of a pacing dog, though a trotting dog is not unheard of, and a man named Herry Ketcham, a Canadian, once owned a trotter whom he called "Doc." This dog, which was a pointer, he exhibited at race-tracks and fairs all over the country. He was said to have made $10,000 out of the animal. Dr. Scott's dog will race against either a horse or a bicycle, and seems to enjoy it, though he evidently regards it as a very serious matter. Gypsy, as the doctor calls him, can make very good time, and Dr. Scott has speeded him from a standing start to make a quarter of a mile in forty-five seconds, and the first eighth in twenty seconds. When he was teaching him to pace, Dr. Scott put small string hobbles on him in order to prevent him from breaking. Gypsy paced a little before the doctor bought him, though so little as to be of no consequence; but his new master thought he saw possibilities of the dog doing better, and began a course of careful and systematic training, until he obtained the present result. The dog is a pure blooded St. Bernard and weighs 140 pounds, is three feet high, measures six feet from the tip of his bushy tail to the end of his handsome nose and is about 4 years old. He races alone, without a driver, and, besides being a very fine animal, is a real curiosity.

Joey Had a Little Dog.

From the Youth's Companion: The teacher of a district school in Maine tells a story that reminds me of Mary and her little lamb, only it is of Joe and his little dog. Joe was a boy about 8 years old, and was devoted to a small, lank puppy. Out of school hours boy and dog were inseparable, and Joe apparently could not reconcile himself to the necessity of leaving the dog at home. For several mornings the teacher allowed the puppy to remain at Joe's feet under the desk. Then there came a day when the small dog could not be kept quiet, but frisked about to the delight of the school and the dismay of the teacher. "Joe," she said, firmly, "you must take that dog out." Joe looked at her mournfully, but picked up the pup, and, with its head against his cheek, started for the door. The boy's feelings were evidently hurt, but he said nothing until he reached the door, then, giving his teacher a reproachful look, with a pitying glance toward his dog, he said, slowly, "And he's named for you!"

Fantastic Shades for Lamps.

A gold bonnet of flowered silk shirred on wires and trimmed at the edge with lace is the latest thing in lamp shades. In place of the ballet girl with wide-spreading skirts, who protected the eyes from the flame, there are now shades ornamented with painted faces and wreaths, or fashion pictures and sporting prints of ye olden time upon a vellum background. The almost forgotten Parian porcelain and octagon-shaped cameo shades are again coming in vogue. "How do you like our new lampshade?" said a young woman to a man caller recently. After a prolonged stare at the pretty silk and lace contrivance, he said: "The last time I saw it I was dancing with it." It had been cleverly constructed from a pink silk lace trimmed ball gown.—New York Tribune.

DAIRY AND POULTRY.

INTERESTING CHAPTERS FOR OUR RURAL READERS.

How Successful Farmers Operate This Department of the Farm—A Few Hints as to the Care of Live Stock and Poultry.

Poultry Notes.

The time being near when many of our readers will be shipping poultry to market, it may not be amiss to call their attention to a few things the market demands. As most people are aware by this time the heads should not be cut off of fowls to be sent to city markets. Neither should the intestines or crops be taken out. Also the killing should not be done in the old-fashioned way of wringing the neck. The killing must be done by opening the veins of the neck or by an incision in the mouth that will allow the fowl to bleed to death.

* * *

Whether the bird is to be scalded or dry picked will depend on the market to which they are to be sent. If the trade is local scalding is still used and is probably preferred. Some people insist on having birds that have been picked after scalding. When the birds are to be turned over to shippers who intend in turn to send them to the city markets dry picking is in order. If the birds are to be scalded it is recommended to have the water near the boiling point but not actually boiling. This is supposed to make the feathers easy to pull without cocking the skin. As a matter of fact, we doubt very much if there is any particular rule that is popularly followed. Most of the fowls that are scalded are scalded in water that is already at the boiling point. There is of course great danger of allowing the birds to soak in the water. An expert advises to dip the birds in the water four times, and says that that is enough. The dipping should be done by holding the bird by the head and legs, so they will not be dipped into the water with the rest of the bird. Dipping in the head turns the color of the comb and affects the appearance of the eyes.

* * *

By proper feeding many of our fowls that are marketed about holiday time could be marketed two months earlier, while prices are better. Late in the fall so many fowls are thrown on the market that the prices go down to a point that gives little profit. The feeding of some stimulating foods early in the career of the chicks would have started a habit of growth that would have continued to have its influence all through the summer. Even at this late period the generous feeding of meaty cut bone will help the growth greatly. If that cannot be had, give dry cut bone, which can be purchased on any market. Feeding meat, where it can be had at low price, is certainly a good practice. Push the surplus birds along and get them out of the way before the market begins to fall. If more birds were fitted and sold in the late summer the consumption would be increased, and the total average price for the year would be better. As it is, many city families go without fowl during the season of very high prices. They do not make it up during the season of low prices. It is of no advantage to the farmer to have prices high at the time of the year when he has nothing to sell.

* * *

The legs and head of the fowl should be dry picked, and after the picking has been completed the fowl should be immersed for a few seconds in boiling water and afterward plunged into cold water. This is to give the body a plump, firm appearance. Those that follow the practice of dry picking, do the work while the bodies of the birds are still warm, as they find the picking much easier to do at that time. When they are to be picked for a long journey, or are not to be opened at once, the birds must not be packed till the animal heat has gone out of them. Turkeys should always be dry picked, as the appearance is very much better when handled that way than when scalded. Ducks and geese should always be scalded, and the scalding will have to be for a longer time, as it takes more time for water to penetrate and loosen the feathers of a water-fowl than of a land bird. Some farmers practice picking the geese and ducks before killing, so that the feathers can be saved in the best condition, but this is not advisable, as it leaves the flesh in an inflamed condition, which makes the fowls hard to sell on the market. Although chickens may be singed to take off the hairs, this should not be done with ducks or geese. On account of water birds having a large amount of oil in their skins, the application of heat gives them an oily appearance, which does not help their sale. The feathers on the head and upper part of the neck should not be picked off. After picking the other feathers the ducks or geese should be plumped in hot water after the manner of hens.

State Control of Milk Testing.

The growth of the custom of paying for milk various prices in proportion to its fat content has been rapid of late years, but the system is not yet universally adopted, says the New York Produce Review. Willful variations of the test must be totally abandoned, and those inaccuracies which occur by reason of improper machines or appliances must in some effective method be overcome. The most effective way to prevent inaccurate testing, which may occur willfully or by reason of faulty apparatus, would be by the enactment of proper state laws, compelling the registration by competent state authorities of the apparatus used, the license of those making the tests, and the provision of penalties for a false report of tests made. Laws touching upon some of these points have been enacted in Iowa and Vermont, with good results, and the matter is worthy of consideration by legislatures of all dairy states. In Vermont it appears that since the enactment of the law relating to the testing of milk and cream the State Experiment Station has tested 9,564 milk and cream bottles and 1,155 pipettes, and that of the old glassware, in use before the law was enacted, nearly 4 per cent was found to be inaccurately graduated. The effect of the law has been to make a material reduction in the percentage of inaccurate apparatus.

In Vermont those who test milk or cream for the purpose of determining its value are obliged to take out certificates; of those applying for certificates since the law was enacted 241 received their certificates while 31 were refused; thus nearly 12 per cent of those who wanted to do this work, and to whose ignorance or knowledge milk-sellers would have been obliged to submit for a just payment, were declared incompetent to perform such work reliably and prevented by law from inflicting the results of their ignorance upon the public.

The Roadster.

An authority on horses thus describes the roadster:

A typical roadster should stand from fifteen to sixteen hands high, weigh close about 1,100 pounds, be sound and straight in every way, have a good, solid color, a level head, bold and resolute, capable and willing to road twelve miles an hour or 100 miles in ten hours, and when put upon his speed will show a 2:30 gait or thereabouts. He should not only be able but willing to do whatever is asked of him, and this without resort to spur, boot or whip. Such an animal, moving along without paddling or straddling, is in great demand, provided he has been properly educated and abounds in nervous energy. Form, size, color, symmetry and substance are essentials in the make-up of a typical roadster, but they do not always insure the road horse. To these must be added a certain individuality that is always the result of intelligent breeding. It manifests itself in what we term nervous energy, the inherited ability to get up and get there. It is true that no class of horses are so difficult to breed up to a high standard of excellence as the roadster. We cannot produce him from animals that have only individual merit to recommend them. They must be descendants of families noted for their extraordinary qualifications along this line. To breed the draft horse, size and soundness are the main points to be taken into consideration; in breeding the race horse everything is sacrificed for speed; but in producing the roadster we must look well to every point of excellence that is to be found in the make-up of all other classes of good horses.

Bacterial Origin of Flavor.

Probably in no department of research is a greater amount of investigation going forward and valuable data and actual discovery being made than in dairy science; and while some of the discoveries have been of little or no value, a wonderful amount of useful and practical material has been placed in the hands of the dairymen, says Mark Lane Express. Among the new things announced, since it has been shown how nearly ferments and flavors in butter are associated, is that if certain acids are added to sweet cream it is not necessary to wait for the development of lactic acid bacteria in the cream, but that it could be churned at once, and churned quite readily, and the true flavor secured. Investigators have been at work on this problem, and an announcement of the results has been made. The most satisfactory result came from using hydrochloric acid diluted in twice its bulk of water, and adding this in small quantities to the sweet cream. Everything was satisfactory, except that the butter had no aroma, though it was pronounced fair and good by the judges. The butter kept well, and had a water content of 12½ per cent; but the low flavor was against it, though not a trace of acid was to be detected, or found by analysis. About the most important thing brought out was that butter seems to be fully dependent upon bacteria for true flavor, rather than the food, provided that the latter is wholesome and not of a character to impart obnoxious flavors to the milk, which after all could not be called butter flavor in any sense of the word.

To Prevent Bovine Tuberculosis.

The International Congress of Veterinary Surgeons, held recently at Baden-Baden, agreed to the following suggestions as to the prevention of tuberculosis among domestic animals: "1. The prevention of tuberculosis in cattle is urgently necessary. 2. The extinction of bovine tuberculosis by the owner (voluntary extinction) is practicable, and should be universally aimed at. Dangerously tuberculous animals should be slaughtered as soon as possible, and calves and healthy animals protected from infection. Voluntary extinction of bovine tuberculosis should be encouraged by the state disseminating correct views respecting the character of tuberculosis, its modes of infection, and the importance of tuberculin inoculation. Voluntary extinction should be supported by state grants. The best means hitherto known for the diagnosis of tuberculosis among domestic animals is tuberculin. Tuberculin should only be supplied under state control and to veterinary surgeons. 3. Prevention of bovine tuberculosis by the state is desirable. If undertaken with caution it can be carried out, will check the further increase of the disease, and gradually stop it. The prevention requires: (a) That veterinary surgeons be obliged to give notice of every case of proved tuberculosis encountered in practice. (2b) The immediate slaughter of dangerously tuberculous animals (particularly those affected with mammitis, tuberculosis of the uterus or intestines, as well as pulmonary tuberculosis), compensation by the state, and the prohibition of the return of buttermilk from the co-operative dairies to the farms before sterilization."

TRICKS OF CHOIR SINGERS.

Carrying on Conversation While Pretending to Sing the Service.

One of the English bishops has been complaining that he notices about many choir boys and men a want of reverence and of attention to the services that are going on, and he exemplifies this by saying that the choristers talk in song, and have a sort of "voluntary" of their own, wherein they drop the original words, and, to sacred music, chant, "I am so hungry, I hope we shall finish soon!"

But this is, in reality, a very old complaint, and the average stage manager is far more troubled by it than even are choirmasters connected with places of worship. The rows of chorus men and girls one sees on the stage carry on long and animated conversations about everything under the sun, and all to music. And all the time they indulge in the gestures they have been taught as appropriate to the scene, their thoughts are really with the themes of their musical chat, and thus it is that these gestures seem so wooden and artificial. And it is a fact that the great bulk of the chorus people engaged in the highest-class "Italian" opera, sing any gibberish they please.

QUALITY AND NEWS.

FAME AND EXCELLENCE ARE DETERMINING FACTORS IN SUCCESSFUL DEVELOPMENT.

One of the Important Functions of High-Class Newspapers.

In presenting interesting phases of scientific and economic problems, high-class newspapers frequently give information of as great value in their advertising columns as in those devoted to the publication of the principal events of the day; and when the fame of a product is extended beyond its natural limits into foreign lands, and a large demand created throughout Great Britain and her colonies and the principal seaports and cities of Europe, Asia and Africa, it becomes a pleasant duty to note the fact and to tell of the points of excellence on which so great a success is based. We refer to the now world-famed laxative remedy, Syrup of Figs, the product of the California Fig Syrup Company. The merits of this well-known excellent laxative were first made known to the world through the medical journals and newspapers of the United States; and is one of the distinct achievements of the press. It is now well known that Syrup of Figs is an ethical proprietary remedy, approved by the most eminent physicians everywhere, because it is simple and effective, yet pleasant to the taste and acceptable to the system, and not only prompt in its beneficial effects, but also wholly free from any unpleasant after-effects. It is frequently referred to as the remedy of the healthy, because it is used by people who enjoy good health and who live well and feel well and are well informed on all subjects generally, including laxatives. In order to get its beneficial effects, it is necessary to get the genuine Syrup of Figs, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only.

WHO DRINK WHISKY?

The Brightest, Brainiest Men in the World Indulge to Excess.

It is the brightest, brainiest men in the world, the leaders in public affairs, in churches, in business and in the various professions, who drink liquor to excess. It is such men who are sought after; who are made much of in a social way, and who, consequently, are tempted to indulge in liquor. When they discover that the habit has become a disease and that they cannot stop drinking, they feel the necessity of a cure for the disease.

The experience of twenty years has taught the public that the Keeley Cure is the only cure which science has discovered for drunkenness. There are many imitators and frauds, but none have a cure, although they will promise anything to secure a man's money.

At the Minneapolis Keeley Institute the class of patients is above the average in intelligence. Lawyers, doctors, ministers, architects, business men, etc., are found in every class. It is such men who realize the necessity for a cure and desire to stop drinking. The bums and sots, who live in the low resorts, do not go to the Keeley Institute for two reasons: a lack of funds and a lack of inclination to be cured.

In almost every large business concern it will be found that among the best men are those who have taken the Keeley Cure. Employers frequently find it to their advantage to send an employe to the Minneapolis Keeley Institute to be cured, therefore making him a more valued employe. Railroads frequently send their employes who are addicted to drink to the Institute.

A man will spend the greater portion of his earnings in the saloons if he is a convivial drinker. He makes a material saving if he takes the Keeley Cure.

The management of the Minneapolis Keeley Institute always make it a point to send literature in a plain envelope to any who will send their address to the corner of Tenth street south and Park avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

An Absent-Minded Bridegroom.

Robert Dewar, brother of Lord William Dewar, the British scientist, who was the first experimenter to liquefy air, is a remarkably absent-minded man. It is said that on one occasion he left his home early one morning and repaired to the house of a friend, in which there was a fine library to which he had access. That afternoon his relatives and friends searched the neighborhood in vain for him. At length he was run down in this library. By his side was a new suit of clothes.

"It's a nice man you are," ironically said the spokesman.

"What is the matter now?" returned Robert, irritably.

"Your bride and the preacher are waiting for you for two hours. Don't you know this is your wedding day, man?"

"I declare!" said the groom, "I'd forgotten all about it! Wait until I dress, and I'll go along with you."—Philadelphia Post.

A homely woman who is vain doubts the accuracy of mirrors.

MRS. PINKHAM says that irritability indicates disease. Women who are nervous and snappish are to be pitied. Their homes are uncomfortable; their dispositions grow constantly worse. Such women need the counsel and treatment of a woman who understands the peculiar troubles of her sex.

EVERY-DAY TALKS WITH WOMEN

MRS. ANNA E. HALL, of Milldale, Conn., was all run down in health and had completely lost control of her nerves. She wrote to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for advice. Now she writes:

"I wish to thank you for what your Vegetable Compound has done for me. It has helped me more than anything else. I suffered for a long time with nervousness, pains in back and limbs and falling of the womb; also had neuralgia in my head and could not sleep. I told my husband that something must be done, for I was nearly frantic with pain. Having read of the wonderful cures Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had performed, I determined to try it. I have taken it and am happy to say I am cured. I recommend it to all my friends and never tire of telling the benefit I have derived from its use. I have you alone to thank for my recovery."

MRS. ELLEN FLANAGAN, 1810 Mountain St., Philadelphia, Pa., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—Three years ago I was a sufferer from chronic dyspepsia, was irritable and cross, and can say that after taking seven bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was entirely cured. I take great pleasure in writing this to you and would be pleased to be interviewed by any one who is afflicted with that distressing complaint. I am very grateful to you."

Pyramidal Hat Box—Fumigating Shoe Last—New Radiophone—Man's Million Years—An Improved Electric Tramway—Liquid Air in Surgery.

The New Radiophone.

The wonders of wireless telegraphy were fairly eclipsed at the electrical exhibition recently held in New York, when a Boston inventor gave the first public demonstration of his "radiophone," and proved the possibility of telephoning without the use of wires. At one end of a long gallery was placed an arc light, behind it being a conical or parabolic mirror like that used upon searchlights. From each of the two main wires that supplied current to the arc, short wires ran to a transmitter, located in a sound-proof booth. Four hundred feet away was another parabolic mirror, bell shaped, aimed to catch the rays from the light. A ring bulb containing a pellet of carbonized fiber was fixed in this mirror at the point where the rays focused, and from the bulb extended a glass tube, connecting with ear-pieces. Through these, messages spoken into the transmitter could be distinctly heard. How did the sound travel? The explanation is simple enough. The arc light and the transmitter being connected, current was taken from the light in proportion to the resistance of the transmitter, this resistance varying in accordance with the vibrations of the diaphragm. The variations in the current of the light produced corresponding changes in the heat rays emitted, and these changes affected the receiver—the fiber in the bulb—producing vibrations in the column of air contained in the ear-tubes. Such are the terms in which the radiophone is described in Electricity. Put in the fewest words, the description means that the heat rays which travel along the beam of light answer the same purpose that sound waves do in the case of the ordinary telephone. How far speech can thus be transmitted has not been determined. Much depends on the power of the light. But if the radiophone can bridge space as the experiments seem to show, perhaps we are justified in assuming that some day it may even enable us to communicate with other planets.

Man's Million Years.

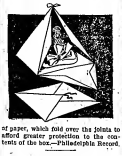
According to the conclusions of Mr. A. H. Keane, a well-known English ethnologist, the first creatures that could properly be called men appeared on the earth in what geologists know as the Pliocene period, somewhere about a million years ago. The precursor of man, Mr. Keane thinks, was some such ape-like creature as the Pithecanthropus erectus discovered by Dr. Dubois in Java a few years ago. Four varieties of men were developed: Homo Ethiopicus in Africa south of the equator, Homo Mongolicus in central Asia, Homo Americanus in the new world, and Homo Caucasicus in northern Africa. From these the existing races are descended. Whether man has existed a million years in the past or not, there is no apparent reason why he should not exist more than a million years in the future.

Fleeing from Electricity.

The rapid spread of electric tramways and electric light systems is driving magnetic observatories from the neighborhood of big towns and cities. The delicate instruments employed in such observatories lose their usefulness when extensive electric plants are in operation near them. One of the latest instances is that of the magnetic observatory of Vienna, which has been abandoned. The Austrian government has been asked to provide a new observatory situated at a distance from the capital.

Pyramidal Hat Box.

The box designed to contain a piece of woman's millinery consumes a great deal of room when not in use, and this constitutes a very important matter in many establishments located on thoroughfares where rents are high, as space is valuable, and then, too, such a box does not perfectly perform its functions, for the reason that the hat is not snugly contained therein. A pyramidal box for this purpose, which folds around the hat, and which also has the faculty of folding flat when not in use, has been recently patented, and is shown both in the extended and folded positions in the accompanying cut. The base of the box consists of a square, and what forms the sides are of triangular shape, the points being buttoned together when in use. Along the edges of these side pieces are strips of paper, which fold over the joints to afford greater protection to the contents of the box.—Philadelphia Record.



Progress of Science.

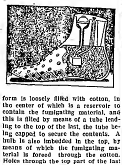
Few things better illustrate the recent progress of science than the first two sentences of Sir J. Burden Sanderson's recent Croonian lecture. "In 1867 I exhibited a number of diagrams of graphic records in evidence of the mechanical relations I then sought to establish between the movements of the heart and those of respiration in the higher animals. I have today to bring before you results which have also been obtained by a graphic method, which, however, differ from the other in that the records are written by light and not by pen on paper; that the time taken in recording is measured in thousandths of seconds, not tenths; and, finally, that the events recorded are not the movements of the chest or heart, but the electrical changes which are found to associate themselves with all manifestations of functional activity in living organisms, whenever these take place under conditions which admit of their being investigated. In the words of Galileo 'E pur si muove.'"

Eradication of Bovine Tuberculosis.

At the recent meeting of the international congress of veterinary surgeons at Baden-Baden the subject of bovine tuberculosis was discussed at length. Dr. Bang of Copenhagen, a great authority, referred to the abandonment of the attempt to eradicate the disease in Belgium and Massachusetts and deprecated drastic legislation on the subject. On his advice the congress passed resolutions favoring voluntary efforts on the part of owners of stock and the compulsory slaughter of cattle visibly affected with the disease. Dr. Bang was of the opinion that some twenty years hence it might be possible to go a step further than this and take more severe measures.

Fumigating Shoe Last.

A shoe tree which fumigates the interior of the shoe while it also holds it in shape, is a nice sanitary novelty for which an inventor of New York is responsible. The last is made of wood, in three sections, to permit of its insertion into the shoe easily. The forward and lower part of the last is hollowed out, the opening extending to the sole, so as to allow the bottom of the shoe to be acted on by the fumigating liquid. The interior of the shoe form is loosely filled with cotton, in the center of which is a reservoir to contain the fumigating material, and this is filled by means of a tube leading to the top of the last, the tube being capped to secure the contents. A bulb is also imbedded in the top, by means of which the fumigating material is forced through the cotton. Holes through the top part of the last permit of the fumigating of the uppers of the shoe as well as the sole.



Choking the Thames.

The work of keeping the mouth of the world's greatest commercial river, the Thames, open and free for ships of all classes, is not lacking in difficulty. The shifting sands continually encroach upon the channels of the great estuary, and the latest surveys show that the Duke of Edinburgh channel, which is at present the principal passage into the Thames for heavy vessels, has narrowed since 1882 from a mile and a half to about half a mile. "Its total obliteration, which seems by no means impossible," says Nature, "would entail a long circuit at the time of low water. The 'Middle Swim,' the main route for traffic between London and the north, has also contracted and shoaled much within late years.

Liquid Air in Surgery.

As in the case of the X-rays, it is possible that one of the earliest practical uses of liquid air will be in surgery. Already experiments have indicated that a spray of liquid air can be applied as a local anaesthetic, but the application should never be made except by an experienced operator. In a minute a small part of the body can be frozen as hard as ice, and surgical operations conducted with the aid of liquid air are attended with no hemorrhage. In the Medical Record Dr. A. C. White describes various experiments with liquid air, including the successful treatment of such diseases as sciatica, neuralgia and ivy-poisoning. Boils and carbuncles can be aborted with liquid air, and it is useful in the treatment of ulcers.

An Improved Electric Tramway.

The city of Tours, in France, has an electric tramway free from the unsightly trolley poles and wires. It is constructed on the Diatto system, the main cable running underground, and the current being transmitted to the cars by a series of contacts, level with the ground, between the rails. The cars are provided with an electro-magnetic device, suspended beneath, which, at each contact, lifts a metal pin dipping into a mercury cup and connecting with the main cable. The contacts are separated by a distance less than the length of the car frame, and thus a continuous current is supplied through them to the car motor as it moves along.

Sea-Water for Street Sprinkling.

The city of San Francisco is experimenting with the use of sea-water for street sprinkling. It is said that the salt in the water not only causes the particles of dirt to cohere, thus preventing the stirring up of clouds of dust when the wind blows, but also, by absorbing moisture during the night, tends automatically to dampen the surface of the ground. In short, sea-water, it is averred, has proved to be three times as effective as fresh water in suppressing dust.

Smokeless Fuel.

The president of the Society of Chemical Industry, at its recent meeting in London, advocated the direction of the very best technical skill to the perfecting of methods of manufacturing fuel briquettes from coke and pitch. Such fuel could be made smokeless, and with skill and enterprise it would be possible to make briquettes exactly suited for every purpose of fuel, from boiler firing to domestic cooking.

Paints and Disease.

Recent experiments in Germany have shown that bacteria die off more quickly on walls coated with oil paints than on those where lime, size or enamel paints, and various proprietary paint preparations are used. Prof. Loefler, in consequence of these experiments, has recommended the use of oil paints only for the interior of houses, and particularly for hospitals, schools and barracks.

True Economy

The difference of cost between a good and a poor baking powder would not amount for a family's supply to one dollar a year. The poor powder would cost many times this in doctors' bills.

Royal Baking Powder may cost a little more per can, but it insures perfect, wholesome food. In fact, it is more economical in the end, because it goes further in leavening and never spoils the food.

Royal Baking Powder used always in making the biscuit and cake saves both health and money.

You cannot, if you value good health, afford to use cheap, low-grade, alum baking powders. They are apt to spoil the food; they do endanger the health. All physicians will tell you that alum in food is deleterious.

MINNESOTA NEWS

A NEW BOAT.

Bowboat West Rambo Is to Be Replaced in the Van Sant Fleet.

The Van Sant & Musser fleet of boats, in which Capt. Van Sant of Winona is interested, will be increased this winter by a new boat, which will take the place of the bow boat West Rambo. The West Rambo is now on a trip to Muscatine with the Musser and a raft, and after that will go to Stillwater for another raft for Davenport parties. She will then go into winter quarters and be dismantled, preparatory of the building of her successor. The new boat will be one of the best bowboats on the upper river.

The bowboat Park Bluff, belonging to the same fleet, that was sunk recently on the lower rapids, has been raised and is again in commission. She had a hole eight feet by five stove in her side by coming in contact with rocks on the rapids.

Winona poultrymen have met with such success in sending birds to shows held elsewhere that they are planning to club together and send a big collection of birds to either the Illinois or Iowa state exhibits to be held in January. The poultry show to be held in Winona this winter will be bigger than anything before attempted.

EDEN VALLEY SENSATION.

Well-to-Do Farmer's Wife Runs Off With the Hired Man.

An unfaithful wife and an amorous hired man caused quite a shock at Eden Valley recently, when the erring couple returned to Eden Valley after having been away three days. The wronged husband, C. Schmidt, was for ten years the head of the leading mercantile firm in Eden Prairie, and only last month he sold out his share in the store. He and his wife lived on a well regulated farm a mile west of town, and had a family of four children, the eldest being nine years of age. A. C. Miller, the hired man and Mrs. Schmidt left Eden Valley the middle of last week, with Schmidt's rig. They assumed the relation of husband and wife, and so registered at hotels where they stopped. Mr. Schmidt feels the disgrace keenly, and will no doubt apply for an absolute divorce. The villagers gathered around the jail to the number of a dozen or more and gave Miller a good scare by threatening to hang him. They did it only to scare the fellow, who has made an open confession of his guilt. He will have a collections, as soon as grain and stock will be bound over to the grand jury

READY FOR ROBBERS.

Osseo Saloonkeeper Gives as Good as He Gets.

Nic Eckers, proprietor of a saloon in Osseo, was assaulted by armed men, who contemplated robbery, and were only thwarted by Eckers' determined resistance. Eckers started to go up stairs, carrying his money box from the saloon, a lantern in one hand and a loaded revolver in the other. As he was about to make the first step upward a man jumped from under the stairs and grabbed him. Eckers placed the weapon against the breast of his assailant and fired, and also fired a second time. A second man had appeared in the meantime, who forthwith shot Eckers in the right arm, near the shoulder. Eckers dropped his cash box and the men ran off in the darkness, but not until two more shots had been exchanged. Eckers had been assaulted and robbed before. The ball in his right arm has not been located. He had $10 in the box and $200 in his pockets. He believes the first robber is badly wounded at least, and, possibly, dead. His assailants are thought to be residents who were well posted as to his habits.

MUNRO ON COLLECTIONS.

Outlook Is Assuring, Despite a Backward Season.

W. J. Munro, who is in the implement business, has the following to say regarding collections in the southern part of the state: "Owing to the delays occasioned by the late harvest season and wet weather, and the consequent retarding of the important fall work, collections are slow and backward and a month behind the average of previous fall seasons. The outlook is, however, very promising, as the general credit trade is growing less each year, and the aggregate amount of indebtedness is smaller, in proportion as the volume of business increases. Instead of nine-tenths of the season's trade being outstanding on notes and accounts, as was formerly the case, probably less than two-thirds of the year's transactions up to date have been on the credit basis. As a rule, farmers have less to pay and more to pay with, hence the outlook for good collections, as soon as grain and stock can be marketed, is assured."

HE IS A NATIVE FILIPINO.

Francisco Roque Came to Minneapolis With the Thirteenth Regiment.

Francisco Roque, a sixteen-year-old Filipino, born in the Pampanga province forty miles north of Manila, is one of the curiosities brought back with the Thirteenth regiment. He is the guest of Fred Gregory, Company F, Minneapolis, to whom he is greatly attached.

The lad is quite large for his age, and has had a varied experience in his time. At the age of six he was taken into the service of a Spanish captain, and with him spent three years in South America. He speaks Spanish fluently, but has not as yet mastered English. He desires to learn this and then study medicine.

INJURED AT A FIRE.

An Old Chicago Landmark Destroyed —Loss, $120,000.

Chicago, Oct. 24. — A business block in South Chicago burned early yesterday, entailing a loss of $120,000 and painfully injuring twelve persons. Fourteen buildings were burned. An old landmark was destroyed in the burning of the Grand Central hotel. It was a frame building and was consumed rapidly. The guests had barely time to save themselves and fled for safety with little apparel. The persons who were injured received burns or sprains or bruises.

MANY LIVES LOST.

Victims of the Snow Storm in Montana.

Helena, Mont., Oct. 24.—Z. T. Burton, president of the Burton Land company and one of the prominent stockmen of Teton county, who arrived here last night from the blizzard-swept district, says that the bodies of eight sheep herders have already been found in this county, and fifteen other herders who are missing have been given up as lost. He says the loss of life will exceed twenty persons in Teton county alone. As near as can now be estimated 20,000 sheep perished in the storm in Teton county and about 10,000 in Chouteau county.

For four or five days last week snow came down almost unceasingly. At the town of Chouteau, county seat of Teton county, it was from ten to twelve feet deep in drifts and at least three feet on the level. The wind blew great guns nearly all of the time, but fortunately there was not a great fall in temperature. If there had been a clean sweep would have been made of the live stock of a vast section of the country. Numerous bands of sheep were completely snowed under and the cattle ranges are drifted badly. Though the storm ceased a week ago detailed reports of losses are not at hand, for the stockmen have not been able to visit all their camps. No alarm is felt because of the condition of the cattle, as they will pull through without much loss. The sheep cannot stand severe weather, and are very apt to pile up and smother. Stock and herders may have wandered into some of the coulies in the mountains, where the snow is tree-top deep, and, if they have, spring will reveal their bodies. A chinook has been blowing for a few days, which will prevent any deaths from freezing. Old timers in the section are agreed that nothing like the fall of snow has been seen in twenty years. It covered a wide scope of country in Northern Montana.

SWEDISH ACADEMY.

Outbidding Fergus Falls, Alexandria Lands the Prize.

Alexandria, Minn., Oct. 24.—Rev. J. Frendling of Vasa, Minn., Rev. Kronberg of Melby, Rev. Wahlquist of Holmes City, Rev. L. Johnson of Fergus Falls, Rev. Ryding, Nelson and Rev. Lee, the committee locating the Swedish academy, met here. Fergus Falls offered $1,360 cash and a site. Alexandria offered $5,000 cash. Alexandria was chosen. The site has not been selected. The committee has options on two desirable sites, one directly west of the depot on the north side of the railroad, and the other on the east shore of Lake Henry, half a mile from the depot. The building will be erected next summer.

START FOR 'FRISCO.

Forty-Fifth Regiment Vacates Fort Snelling.

St. Paul, Oct. 21.—The companies of the Forty-fifth regiment which has been quartered at Fort Snelling for the past two months yesterday started for San Francisco, from which point they will be hurried to the Philippines as soon as transports are available. The contingent, numbering 1,100, officers and men, will be joined in San Francisco by the remainder of the regiment which is now stationed at Vancouver barracks. Col. Dorst is commanding officer of the regiment.

They Will Save Their Hides.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Oct. 24.—A telegram from a reliable source at Pine Ridge agency states that the Sioux at that agency are deeply grieved over the prospective loss of the funds heretofore received by them from the sale of hides, but entertain strong hopes that the action of the Indian commissioner in ordering the discontinuance of the distribution of the hides among the Indians will, upon a statement of the facts in the matter, be revoked.

No Outbreak of Indians.

Deadwood, S. D., Oct. 24.—Judge J. H. Burns, who acts as counsel for the Pine Ridge Indians, has returned from a visit to the agency. He says there is no reason to expect an outbreak among the Indians on account of the hide matter. The Indians resent the action of the government in depriving them of the hides of the cattle, but the agent at Pine Ridge said he feared no trouble.

MONEY OF THE MASSES

SILVER DOLLARS TOKENS OF GENUINE PROSPERITY.

When They Circulate Freely Among the People Business Conditions Change for Better—Hard Job to Get Them Back Into the Banks.

More than three-fourths of the people of this country use silver coin for their daily and weekly business transactions, and it is attested by those who have made the observations that the same is the case in England, Germany, France and other countries. Moreover, we know positively that there is not a gold coin that is not incumbered with a view upon it for some public or private debt in the shape of principal or interest, and that all gold coin is under the dominion or control of the creditors. True, we make a showing of free gold, and we read in the newspapers of its being here and there, sometimes a man may receive a gold coin or a small quantity of gold coins, but he must quickly change them into silver to satisfy his necessities, and the gold drifts back again to the source whence it came, to wit, the coffers of the banks, to be by them distributed to certain, well-known central locations, to be again sent out and manipulated when a profit can be made upon it. This is the natural effect of the gold standard—the centralization and control of gold money, to be used as an export or import and for speculative purposes. Not so with silver, which, being debased by demonetization, can have no free egress and ingress because it is a base metal and is confined to the uses of the people in their daily and weekly transactions. We have in the United States in actual circulation in silver dollars and subsidiary silver only about 130 millions of dollars, and with this all our commercial transactions, both great and small, must be carried on. Of course, we have silver certificates of paper exceeding 400 millions of dollars, but they are not money because they are redeemable in silver dollars, which latter must be retained in the treasury for their redemption. There is no paper certificates representing our subsidiary silver, that is actual coin which is used in thousands upon thousands of transactions, and it is the only money that millions of people ever see or know anything about. In spite of its great necessity we have in circulation less than 60 millions of dollars of subsidiary silver, although the country now requires an amount exceeding 225 millions in the authority of the treasurer of the United States. This is a curious reason for the hilarity of certain statesmen who delight to repeat over and over again that the silver question is dead. Instead of being dead it is very much alive.

"But," says the average citizen, "I can take five silver dollars to the store and buy just as much goods, wares and merchandise as I can for a five-dollar gold piece." That is quite true so far as certain things are concerned, but when it comes to imported or "protected" goods, wares and merchandise, the difference between gold and debased silver lurks in the price that must be paid. The situation is the same as in the republic of Mexico, whose medium of exchange is entirely silver. Mexican money is all token money coined in private account according to a standard fixed by the government, practically a silver standard. Yet we can buy as much in Mexico with a Mexican silver dollar as we can buy in the United States with a United States silver dollar, notwithstanding the actual fact that two Mexican dollars can be had in exchange for one United States silver dollar.—C. H. Robinson, in "Living Issues."

Bryan at Chicago.

From W. J. Bryan's Chicago speech: "When we come to the Philippine question again they say, 'What can the administration do?' There were two months between the signing of the treaty and the breaking out of hostilities, two months lacking six days, and when we ask them what they were going to do they said they hadn't time to decide what to do—not time to decide what to do. Why, there are but two sources of government, force and consent. Monarchies are founded upon force, republics upon consent. Our Declaration of Independence declares that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. Is that doctrine true or is it false? If it is false, how long ought it to take us to decide what to do in the Philippines? We recognize the truth of that declaration when we went to war with Spain. We said the people of Cuba are and of right ought to be free. Why? Because they live near us? No. Because they are part Spanish? No. They were and of right ought to be free because they wanted to be free, and governments come up from the people. If they were and of right ought to be free, who can draw a line between them and the people of the Philippines? Where is the philosophy that entitles one to liberty and another to vassalage? You say you don't know what to do? If you find a pocketbook, and in it the name of the owner, do you have to count the money in the pocketbook before you know what to do with the pocketbook? If the doctrine set forth in the Declaration of Independence is sound then we can not rightfully acquire title by conquest. If the doctrine set forth in the Declaration of Independence is sound we can not rightfully purchase 8,000,000 of people at $2 apiece from an alien monarch, whose rebellious subjects we ourselves armed to fight against their monarch."

THREE QUESTIONS.

H. R. Hurst of Philadelphia writes as follows: Will you kindly advise me:

1. If Great Britain has a law whereby all gold purchased by that nation for coinage is to be paid for at a fixed price, viz., $20.67 per ounce, or its English equivalent?

2. If United States silver dollars are salable in London at the London price for United States gold dollars (of course deducting discount, freight charges, and other expenses), or at the London price for silver bullion?

3. Has a Japanese silver yen the same purchasing power in Japan as a Japanese gold yen, or is it simply exchangeable with gold as though it were bullion?

First. By the English mint law an ounce of gold is coined into £3 17s 10½d. In 1844 parliament enacted a statute requiring the Bank of England to receive all gold bullion offered for sale and pay for it at the rate of £3 17s 9d per ounce. The reason for this statute was that there was a delay averaging about sixty days in the coinage, which operated as a discount on the bullion, so that the average market price was about £3 17s 6d. The depositor at the mint either had to wait sixty days for his coin or sell the bullion to some broker at a loss of 1½ pence on each ounce. Hence the law. The bank was allowed the difference of 1½ pence as a partial equivalent for the delay in coinage. The effect of this statute was to fix the price of gold bullion at not less than £3 17s 9d an ounce.

Second. United States silver dollars do not sell at "bullion rates" in the European market. Very few of them find their way to England. When they do, if presented at the Bank of England to be converted into English money, they are discounted the same as greenbacks, the discount being sufficient to pay for their return to the United States and probably a small commission to the bank besides.

Third. The Japanese yen has not the same purchasing power that gold yen has. The gold yen is at a premium, and its purchasing power is in proportion to the premium. The business of the country is done almost exclusively with silver and paper. This is more especially the case since Japan adopted the ratio of 32 to 1. No money is coined at that ratio, however. It merely represents (as compared with the old ratio of 16 to 1 that existed up to 1898) the fall in prices of Japanese products since the change was made—50 per cent.

POLITICAL THEOLOGY.

Theology, morals and the gold standard seem to have grown in together like Siamese triplets, and, owing to a misconceived notion of that sacred sentiment once upon a time called "patriotism," they are fed to the dear people as a virtue, and the correct badge of distinction between a good American citizen and a wicked, fire-breathing anarchist. Is it justifiable for a man to do wrong that good may come of it? Aye, faith it seems so, and if he has once fallen into the way of wrong he is bound to continue therein until the final crash to preserve his honor! The doctrine leans a trifle away from what the average American was formerly taught at Sunday school, but as no less a personage than Brother McKinley is preaching it to the youthful and presumably innocent youth of our modern Sunday schools, we are fain to accept it as reformed doctrine, all the more as the superintendents are crying, like griped children for soothing syrup, for him to come and teach them the new doctrine. A whole volume of things might be written anent the theological view of the Philippine situation, but the truth is bad enough without being fanatical about it. If Mr. Jabez Goldbrick of Musquash, who, year after year, raises corn at a cost of 22 cents a bushel and sells it at 11 cents, feels that his honor is involved in the theologico-political moral situation in the Philippines, and is satisfied therewith, all we have the right to say is what the Frenchman said to his congregation: "May the Lord preserve and pickle you." It is a bald fact which detracts somewhat from the practical value of our system of education that a man who can inform the public how they can invest their money in the most expeditious way to lose it is more acceptable to the community than he who tells them how to avoid being swindled. It is not a pleasant task, nor is it a profitable one, to keep the dear people out of the clutches of the gold brick man or away from the shell game. It is usual to attribute the quality of infidelity to his preachments because he tarnished the shimmer of the crown of gold. We envy the audacity of the Presbyterian clergyman who declared from the pulpit of the Twenty-third street, New York, Presbyterian church: "No man can be an American citizen and a Christian." It may be that others incline to the opinion of the reverend gentleman, in view of the treaty with the Sultan of Sulu, who is allowed to practice polygamy and shoot Christians. Mayhap, the good-intentioned Filipino feels the same thrill when his conquerors permit an influx of Chinese cheap labor into the Philippines. Or, the Hawaiian may not gloat as he ought over the American flag when all kinds of European dregs are brought in under contract to compete with him. It may also be possible that some American citizens who are being absorbed, body and soul, by the gold standard, and forced to compete against demonetized silver, are not as hilariously patriotic as the pious devotees who rejoice at the combination of flag, Bible and killing.

The Bland-Allison Law.

From the time the first silver coins were struck under this law in 1878, the moneyed interests steadily circulated the report that as soon as the government paid out any of the silver dollars then the country would be upon a silver basis. This was a plausible fallacy. Its refutation is the fact that the Bank of France (which is practically a department of the government) has since 1873 paid out silver whenever it chose to and the country has remained upon a gold standard of prices. The reason this is so is that the quantity of silver money is limited. For the United States to go to a "silver basis" is for the dollar to have an exchange value equal only to that of 412½ grains of standard silver. In 1879 for the United States to have gone to a "silver basis" would have necessitated a rise in the general prices of commodities of 10 per cent, and it is manifest that this would not come about through the government's paying out silver money instead of paper money or gold; the government paying out silver money in France did not raise prices and would not have done so in the United States. In fact the bankers claimed, and properly, too, that as fast as silver money went into circulation, it did not raise prices above the level in other gold standard countries, for it drove out gold which, as bullion, was exported into those countries.

Things Getting Badly Mixed.

From the Cincinnati Enquirer: The administration has bribed the sultan of Sulu to "be good," and has permitted him to retain all of his many wives. The government of the United States practically pays the running expenses of the sultan's harem. Still, we hear something occasionally about ousting Congressman-elect Roberts of Utah, who has only three wives and asks no assistance in supporting them. This blessed country is getting mixed up in incongruities and inconsistencies.

POWER OF EYELID.

GIVES ALL THE EXPRESSION TO THE OPTICS.

The Eye in Itself Has Little to Do with the Art of Expressing Inward Emotions—All Done by the Lids—What an Oculist Says.

From the Cleveland Plain Dealer. There are no expressive eyes. The expression of the eye is really in the lid. The eye itself, independent of its surroundings, has no more expression than has a glass marble. A prominent English oculist makes this daring statement, and he defends his position with emphasis. "The eyes have no expression whatever," he says. "How do you explain the fact that the eyes of one person are more expressive than those of another" I am asked. They are not. The difference consists in certain nervous contractions of the lids peculiar to the individual. Observe for yourself and you will see that I am right. We will say that I am greatly interested in something, and my attention is suddenly called from it by an unexpected interruption. My upper eyelid raises itself just a little, but the eye proper does not change an iota in appearance. If the interruption is but momentary the elevation of the lid will be but momentary. If the surprise caused by an interruption is continued the lid may be raised even a little more, and, in fact, the whole of the forehead, including the eyebrows, is raised and wrinkled. But the eye remains the same. When a person is excited much the same emotions are gone through," continued the doctor. "His eyes are open wide, in cases of intense excitement, to their greatest extent, but the forehead is not wrinkled, and the ball of the eye is as expressive as a bit of glass. No more. Observe the face of one who laughs. You will see that the lower eyelid has no muscle of its own, and it is only by the contraction of the adjacent muscles in smiling or laughing that it is made to move. That is why there are many wrinkles about the eyes of merry persons. The expression of deep thoughtfulness is produced by the drooping of the upper lid. If the meditation is over a subject that worries the thinker the eyelids contract and the eyebrows are lowered and drawn together. This is true of a reflective mood. As to emotional moods, there is the expression of anger, for instance. The eyes, instead of closing, are open wider than they are normally, but the brows are closely knit. In expressing sadness the entire upper eyelid comes about half-way down and the folds of the skin collect there, giving the lid a thick, heavy appearance."

"No, can't say 't I ever did," he muttered thoughtfully, "less it wuz th' fall o' '32. Tur'ble fall, th' fall o' '32 in these parts. Hed snow th' las' week in August. All th' sheep friz. Reform Press Bureau.
ST. PAUL, Oct. 30, 1899.

What ails the Republicans, anyhow, that they are so much disturbed with Governor Lind's speech welcoming the Thirteenth? No criticism of the conduct of himself and staff can be made as to the parade or on the presidential grand stand. They are not to blame for having divided attention on the former, nor for having been courteously received on the stand, though sandwiched into the packing of the same that was done for partisan purposes. What did Governor Lind say, then, that was inharmonious or displeasing? He said of the volunteer, in all his campaigns, under Southern burning suns:

"The honor of the state was in safe hands. The confidence of the people was not misplaced."

Finally thanking the returning veterans for their service, Governor Lind referred to the "Presence of the president to greet you," and then appealed to the people not to let plaudits alone suffice, but to assist the volunteer in returning to the ranks of civil life, in which, said the governor, "they will need patriotic co-operation as well as the words of cheer and good will."

The governor also said that while it was an occasion for rejoicing, yet "to the thoughtful citizen it is also one of solemnity." The stage reached in our national development "eliminates the volunteer soldier from national activity and influence for the future." This was because the volunteer soldier, whose part in the development of the country's institutions has been to furnish most of the material for its history and the glory and traditions of our people, has fulfilled his mission."

"His mission, under the constitution," said the governor, "is to suppress insurrection and to repel invasion. With a country united in interest, and in spirit, with the same language, institutions and ideals, an intelligent and patriotic people, the possibility of a future insurrection cannot be conceived."

"We are the largest and wealthiest civilized nation," said the governor. "Last year's demonstration of our vast power, and the ability to instantaneously transform seventy millions of people into efficient, warlike activity, an activity more intelligently and successfully exercised than ever before witnessed, has placed our country beyond the possibility of invasion or attack. Nations, like individuals, do not court destruction. They will profit by Spain's example."

Finally the governor said:

By our growth and development the mission of the American Volunteer has come to an end. For purposes of conquest and subjugation he is unfit, for he carries a conscience as well as a gun. The volunteer soldier has always stood for self government, liberty and justice. With your generation he will pass from the stage of our national life. His fame and his example will continue the heritage of our people—the theme of story and song. May the spirit which has actuated him over guide our people and temper the strength of the nation which has outgrown him, with the eternal principles for which he has fought and died.

Now, which of all these declarations is the cause of criticism? Is it the appeal for assistance to the soldier, to find employment? Is it the tribute to his valor, or his proud part in the history and glory of the institutions of the country? Is it untrue that the constitutional mission of the volunteer is to repel invasion and suppress insurrection, and that with these forever assured against, the mission of the volunteer has ended? Ah, we know very well that the offense was in the statement that the volunteer is unfit for conquest, "BECAUSE HE CARRIES A CONSCIENCE AS WELL AS A GUN." But to criticise that is to admit that conquest is the purpose of the McKinley administration, now alas, reluctantly admitted by Republican apologists, nay, made plain by the president himself, in the very presence in which the lofty and patriotic sentiments of Governor Lind were delivered. Criticism of these declarations is admission of the intent and purpose of imperialism. Denial of their truth, is to undermine the foundation principles of the republic. Let the Republicans take whichever horn of the dilemma they choose.

Misled by the administration Twin City press, several country papers, including the Preston Times, Tracy Trumpet, Austin Transcript and others comment that Governor Lind "ignored" the presence of the president. This is entirely false, as the governor distinctly referred to the "presence of the president" as here to "join in the welcome to the Thirteenth." Welcome was the purpose of all. And the trouble with the goppites is that they wanted a political boom made of the occasion instead of a mere welcome. The only impropriety of the whole affair was committed by President McKinley, who made his welcome the stump speech for which the partisan management furnished the opportunity. That's the plain English of it all. Every goppite knows it.

The Thanksgiving proclamation, under imperialism, does not contain the words "liberty" or "freedom," for the blessings of which we are wont to give thanks. Moreover, McKinley declares we are on "friendly terms with every power on earth." McKinley has not only brought us a new Declaration of Independence and a new Constitution, but a new sentiment for Thanksgiving Day, dropping liberty from the catalogue of blessings, and boldly proclaiming falsehood.

"Stand and deliver," says Hanna, in a brazen faced demand, by circular, to every postmaster in the United States, to contribute money to carry the fall elections for Hanna. And to date Postmaster Lovejoy, Minneapolis, is the only official to publicly defy Hanna. Lovejoy's bald-headed boldness is doubtless due to the fact that he and Congressman Fletcher "stand in with McKinley," from the fact that they set up the pins for the partisan use of the Thirteenth occasion.

That great national organization, the Womens' Christian Temperance union, having denounced the un-American McKinley policy in the Philippines, it is in order to hear those women denounced as "traitors" and "copperheads," with such sundry other epithets as "women politicians," and "men in petticoats," by the goppite press. And yet the cause of Americanism is marching on.

Somebody who kept tab on the McKinley hypocrisy and cant of his recent tour, finds that he uttered the word "patriotism" 193 times, "The Flag" 176 times, and "providence" 108 times, in his published speeches. In the name of "Providence" he purchased the Philippino war from Spain. "Under 'The Flag'" he "assimilates" Filipinos with their native soil in the "liberty" of extermination. Disguised as "Patriotism" he gives the cue for all men to be denounced as "traitors" who still stand by the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution.

The difference: An expansionist believes with the McKinley of 1898, that "forced annexation is criminal aggression." The imperialist agrees with the McKinley of 1899, that foreign conquest and the destruction of liberty is American patriotism.

The downward slide of the Republican party from what it was a generation ago is the toboggan slide of Lincoln down to Hanna. And that's no lie.

Governor Bushell of Ohio makes the revelation as an act of justice that John R. McLean contributed to the payment of McKinley's debts on the solicitation of Mark Hanna. Yet Hanna's mud batteries are turned on McLean with all possible virulence. Nor has McKinley the manhood to stop them. What base ingratitude!

Three columns of reiteration of Senator W. D. Washburn's anti-trust attitude are published in the Cincinnati Enquirer of the 22d inst. "No man should be elected," he declares, "who is in sympathy with trusts." If the Republicans were wise they would substitute Senator Washburn for Knute Nelson as candidate for the senate next time, in doing which they might save themselves no end of trouble.

The Swedish Republican Union of Hennepin has banqueted, and with the aid of such prominent Swedes as Judge Steele, Captain Van Sant, Judge Collins, Bob Evans, Congressman Stevens of St. Paul, Jadam Beds of Morris and Clerk of Court Dar Reese, have agreed that the issues next year will be "expansion and sound money." 'Tis well. The hands of the clock might have had to be turned back, if the eminent Swedes mentioned had not acted so early.

The crack of the huntsman's rifle is heard in the north, and Game Warden Beatner has increased his force to prevent violation of the law. Moose can only be killed from Nov. 5 to 10, and deer only from Nov. 1 to 10.

Ground work is being done in Ramsey county, preparatory to sweeping out the corrupt Republican gangs in Ramsey and St. Paul. St. Paul will unquestionably be redeemed next spring.

And the waters are "moving" also in Hennepin. Mayor Gray's splendid administration of Minneapolis, is building up the allied reform forces on solid foundations.

Minnesota was represented at the National Dairy convention, Chicago, by Dairy Commissioner Bowler and Assistant Commissioner White. They found that the Minnesota department was clear up to the front with any of the states.

Insurance Commissioner O'Shaughnessey is out with his first annual report. It was delayed from lack of appropriations, the fault of the Republican legislature. That odoriferous body crippled about every department of the state government not in Republican hands.

Poor, miserable Aguinaldo was offered a colonel's commission, and so says First Assistant Postmaster General Heath, if he would desert his fellows and use his influence for submission. Yet McKinley says the government gives no bribes. And how about the Sulus?

"The United States pays no gold for peace," declared McKinley at Fargo. McKinley paid the polygamous, slave-holding Sulus as follows, per month:

To the Sultan	$250
Dato Rajah Muda	75
To Dato Attik	60
To Dato Calbe	75
To Dato Joakanain	75
To Dato Puto	60
To Dato Amir Haissin	60
To Hadji Batu	60
To Habib Mura	40
To Serif Saguin	15

Oh, yes, we can see the point. He paid for the Sulu harem in silver.

Casualties.

The German ship Erick Rickers struck Scilly Rocks in a thick fog and foundered. All on board were saved.

A $100,000 fire occurred in a five-story brick building in New York. It was occupied principally by commission men.

A bad wreck occurred on the Wabash road about four miles from Wabash by which one man was killed and one fatally injured.

There was an explosion in the kitchen of Mrs. Nellie Barber of Evanston, Ill., caused by powder placed in the firewood. While Mrs. Barber was preparing a meal the explosion blew the stove to pieces. ATTACK BY BOERS

IS MOMENTARILY EXPECTED AT LADYSMITH.

Kruger's Troops Gradually Closing Around the Town—City of Mafeking Bombarded by the Boers—Comparatively Little Damage Done—Water Supply Cut Off by the Boers—British Have a Slight Encounter With the Boers North of Mafeking and Retire—Casualties of Boers in Recent Engagements.

Ladysmith, Oct. 31.—The Boers are gradually closing around Ladysmith. They have mounted two big guns on Tinla Ingoni, 500 yards from the British camp. An attack is expected.

:o:

Ladysmith, Oct. 31.—Everything has remained quiet here yesterday and the water supply is being renewed. A number of resident civilians have been ordered to leave the town under penalty of arrest.

:o:

Pietermaritzburg, Oct. 31.—It is officially announced that the British troops who left Ladysmith on Friday to meet the enemy returned yesterday after a slight brush, the Boers retiring on Elandslaagte. Disquieting rumors are current regarding the Umovoti country, but the official reports say all is quiet there.

Big Force Around Ladysmith.

London, Oct. 31. — The Daily Mail publishes the following dispatch from Pietermaritzburg, dated Sunday:

"Patrols from Ladysmith report that there are four large Boer camps within a radius of ten miles extending in a semi-circle northeast of the town. Evidently the enemy is concentrating all its forces. Commandant Gen. Joubert is in supreme command. The British had several skirmishes with the enemy yesterday. Railway communication with Ladysmith is still intact. At Colenso a couple of Basutos were arrested for putting boulders on the railway. They confessed they had done this by order of the Transvaal authorities."

Mafeking Bombarded.

Cape Town, Oct. 31. — A dispatch from Mafeking, dated Oct. 23, says:

"A bombardment of the city was commenced by the Boers, a battery of three Krupp guns throwing seven, nine and twelve-pound explosive shells. At the beginning the marksmanship was erratic, but ultimately the gunners got the range and sent a number of shells into the town. Comparatively little damage was done. The British returned only one shot, which, being well directed, disabled one of the enemy's guns. After three hours the Boers sent an envoy to ask if the town was prepared to surrender. Col. Baden-Powell replied in the negative, but the shelling of the town was not resumed."

A later dispatch from Mafeking, dated Oct. 24, says:

The Boers are in possession of the water works and have cut off the supply. This occasions no anxiety because ample supplies are available in tanks and wells. During a sortie the British encountered the enemy three miles off to the north. The Boers had apparently been warned and returned our fire in earnest with a well handled machine gun. As our men had no intention of pressing an attack they retired immediately."

Boer Casualties.

Cape Town, Oct. 31.—A dispatch to the South African News from Pretoria states that Boer loss at Elandslaagte was thirty-six killed and sixty-four wounded. According to a dispatch to the Cape Times from Elandslaagte the natives state that the Boer loss at Reitfontein last Friday were at least eighty killed and 150 wounded. The same correspondent says that small Boer raiding parties continue their depredations among the villages and several farms have been looted. The rains continue and the volunteer camp is almost flooded.

More Troops Ordered Out.

London, Oct. 31. — The Household guard, it is announced, have received orders to form a composite regiment for South Africa, including the First Life Guards, Lieut. Col. Sir Lockhart, commanding, quartered at Windsor, and detachments of Second Life Guards, Col. Dundonald, commanding, and the Royal Horse Guards, Lieut. Col. Brocklehurst, commanding. The medical examination was begun yesterday and it is expected that the regiment will embark in about a week. Emperor William wired a farewell message to the Royal Dragoons, of which regiment he is honorary colonel, saying: "May you all return unscathed and well."

Anxiety in England.

London, Oct. 31. — The position at Ladysmith, although not alarming, is sufficiently dangerous to excite anxiety. Evidently the Boers are trying to repeat their Dundee tactics. Roughly estimated they have 17,000 men as against 12,000 British. Gen. Sir Stewart White has the better artillery, but his is of lesser range. The delay in the Boer attack is reported to be due to the non-arrival of Gen. Joubert's column. This has given the British a much needed respite after their recent exertions. Everything, it is now considered, hinges upon Gen. White's resource and judgment. Nothing is known regarding the progress of defensive works for the protection of Ladysmith.

British Looking for Officers.

Berlin, Oct. 31.—It is reported from both Hamburg and Metz that British recruiting officers are busy engaging German underofficers for service in South Africa, offering $80 per month.

Necessitated by a Famine.

London, Oct. 31. — The Exchange Telegraph company has a dispatch from Allahabad saying that the famine expenditure has compelled the Indian government to suspend telegraphic transfers and restrict council bills.

Argentine Money.

Buenos Ayres, Oct. 31.—The chamber of deputies has passed a bill fixing the conversion of paper money at the rate of 44 centavos, gold, per dollar, as soon as there is sufficient specie on hand to permit of such conversion.

GEN. YOUNG'S MOVE.

Is Being Made Under Great Difficulties.

Manila, Oct. 31.—Gen. Young, with the infantry, is advancing upon Cabanatuan under difficulties. The country is furrowed with rivers and deep ravines, the bridges over which have been destroyed; the mud is deep, rations are short and the transportation of supplies has been delayed by low water and the poor condition of the roads. There are sufficient stores, however, to keep the brigade. The insurgents for a long time have lived off the country, impoverishing it. The American horses are not yet accustomed to the native grass and a long bullock train has left San Fernando, carrying hay for the cavalry.

The Spaniards report that there are no insurgents at Cabanatuan.

The gunboat Laguna de Bay dispersed a force of rebels who were engaged in constructing trenches beyond Santa Rosa. The boat was fired upon by a party of insurgents bearing a white flag. She is now aground.

Numbers of Chinese are coming to Angeles from Tarlac, paying the insurgents for the privilege. It is reported that Aguinaldo and the Filipino congress are still at Tarlac. There are about five hundred insurgents before Angeles. They have been quiet for the past three weeks.

Two thousand insurgents are at Bamban, five miles to the north.

Gen. Bates has been recalled from San Fernando and ordered to sail for the southern islands as soon as possible.

IN SLICING UP CHINA

The Rights of American Citizens Must Be Respected.

Chicago, Oct. 31.—A special to the Times-Herald from Washington says: The United States has demanded from the governments of Russia, Germany and France assurances that in their division of China into zones of political domination or spheres of influence the trade rights of the citizens of this country shall be fully respected. These demands are pretty sure to be acceded to, and as soon as the necessary correspondence can be passed between Washington and the three European capitals it is probable that the desired assurances will be given by the governments named. In fact a tacit understanding to this effect already exists.

Complains of Prejudice.

Paris, Mo., Oct. 31.—Alexander Jester, who was indicted Tuesday for the murder of Gilbert Gates in 1871, was arraigned. He entered a plea of not guilty, and in the presence of the court signed an affidavit alleging prejudice against him in Monroe and Marion counties and asking for a change of venue.

Change for Admiral Cromwell.

Washington, Oct. 31.—Rear Admiral Cromwell, who has had command of the naval station at Havana since its establishment in January last, has been detached from that duty and ordered to Washington with a view to his assignment to duty as president of the naval retiring board, an office just vacated by Rear Admiral Schley.

Philadelphia, Oct. 31. — The Russian cruiser Variang, which is designed to be the fastest armored cruiser of her class ever constructed by the Cramps shipbuilding firm, will be launched on Tuesday with unusual display. Prominent Russian naval attaches and government officials are expected at the christening.

Rome, Oct. 31.—The pope celebrated mass in memory of Gen. Sir William Penn Symons. Some time ago Sir William visited Rome and had an audience with the pope. The pope sent a message of condolence to Lady Symons.

Strike Declared Off.

Charleston, W. Va., Oct. 31. — The strike of coal miners in the New River district has been officially declared off. The strike started six weeks ago for an advance of 5 cents a ton. The advance was granted by only thirteen of forty-five mines in the field.

Lost Two Men.

Toledo, Ohio, Oct. 31.—The schooner W. H. Rounds arrived from Buffalo yesterday and reported the loss of two men who, in an attempt to go aloft during a storm off Old Point, were blown overboard. Neither body was recovered.

Dies at Whist.

Chicago, Oct. 31.—While engaged in a game of whist in the rooms of the Chicago Whist club Isaac R. Holden, a wealthy retired lumber merchant, expired suddenly of apoplexy. Sixty members of the club were present.

Restitution Doesn't Explain.

Marion, Ind., Oct. 31. — The disappearance of $1,170 from the safe of the treasurer of the soldiers' home here has just been made public. The treasurer has made good the sum, but the mystery has not been explained.

Two British Cruisers.

Halifax, N. S., Oct. 31.—The coaling and provisioning of the British cruisers Tribune and Crescent has been completed and they are now ready to put to sea. They will probably sail for the West Indies.

Nineteen Business Places Burned.

Goshen, Ind., Oct. 31.—The business portion of Wakrusa, a thriving town nine miles west of here on the Wabash railroad, burned Sunday morning, nineteen business houses being destroyed.

REBELS REPULSED

FILIPINOS DRIVEN FROM STRONG ENTRENCHMENTS.

Gen. Young's Column Has a Brisk Fight in Which Two Americans Are Killed and One Wounded—A Wealthy Visayan Who Has Taken the Oath of Allegiance to the United States Is Accused of Organizing a Revolutionary Junta and Has Been Arrested.

Manila, Oct. 29.—Gen. Young's column, which left San Isidro yesterday morning at daybreak, moving northward in the direction of Santa Rosa, encountered the enemy strongly intrenched just beyond the Tubootin river. A brisk fight ensued and the rebels were repulsed. Two Americans were killed and one injured. Pursuit was impossible on account of the width and depth of the stream.

M. Ruperto Santiago, one of the wealthiest Visayans, who has taken the oath of allegiance to the United States, and who posed as a friend of Americans, has been arrested at Iloilo, while other Visayans are being watched. The prisoner is charged with organizing a revolutionary junta. Santiago owns sugar estates throughout the island of Negros. It is asserted that a council of ten and the manager of the junta met daily at Santiago's office for the purpose of engineering an extensive scheme of collections for an insurrection. One of Santiago's steamers was captured carrying supplies to the rebels. His arrest caused rumors of an outbreak of the natives of Iloilo and precautions have been taken to prevent trouble. A battalion of the Eighteenth regiment and the marines of the gunboat Concord form an expedition at Concepcion, Northern Panay, which is searching for the Concord's coxswain, who was lured ashore by a white flag and who is supposed to be a prisoner. They found the place deserted and burned every house as a punishment.

DECLINED BY OTIS.

No Necessity to Negotiate for the Release of Spanish Prisoners.

Washington, Oct. 29. — The war department has received the following from Gen. Otis:

"Insurgent government submitted application to send five commissioners to Manila to arrange difficulties attending release of Spanish sick prisoners and discuss peace conditions. Declined. No negotiations necessary, as we would gladly receive all Spanish prisoners at our lines, welcome them from their cruel captivity and labor for their welfare. Correspondence by mail."

RIVERA WAS FIRED.

He Refused to Resign When Requested.

Havana, Oct. 28.—Gen. Ruis Rivera, civil governor of the province of Havana, whose withdrawal from the governorship was cabled Thursday as a resignation, denies that he resigned. He claims that he was dismissed, and does not know on what grounds the dismissal was made. He admits that he said recently that he would resign in the event of two or three Americans he had recommended for office were not appointed, but he says he was dismissed through Senor Capote, secretary of state in Gov. Gen. Brooke's cabinet. Senor Capote, according to Gen. Rivera, sent a request asking for the latter's resignation, which he refused. Gen. Brooke, when asked about the resignation, declined to talk, saying he preferred that any explanation required be made by Gen. Rivera himself. Senor Capote said he requested Gen. Rivera to resign because he had become an obstructionist. Gen. Rivera refused to resign, saying he would wait to be dismissed, which was done.

CUBAN MINES.

Official Steps Taken to Collect Statistical Information.

Havana, Oct. 29.—Senor Dominguez Capote, head of the department of government, has ordered the governors of the provinces to furnish particulars of all mines within their jurisdiction; also to obtain from the mayors the number of cattle in each district. Col. Acea, at one time a member of the staff of the late Gen. Antonio Maceo, is starting a paper. It is to be called El Veterano, and is to be devoted to fostering "fraternity, union and concord." All the port captains of the island of Cuba have been placed under Capt. Lucien Young.

Several Alabama Candidates in the Field for Senator.

Montgomery, Ala., Oct. 29.—Col. J. D. Rouemeyer of this city and one of the most prominent members of the bar, yesterday announced his candidacy for the United States senate to succeed Hon. John Morgan. The contest for Senator Morgan's seat promises to be extremely warm. Senator Morgan is a candidate for re-election. Ex-Gov. William C. Oates is another avowed candidate. Gov. Johnston's announcement of his entrance into the race is expected daily.

Miners' Strike Ended.

Spring Valley, Ill., Oct. 29.—The big strike inaugurated by the 2,000 miners of the Spring Valley Coal company on Oct. 17 was brought to an end yesterday. All the demands of the organization were granted except that of weighing coal at the bottom of shafts, and that was not pressed by the union.

Reward Is Increased.

Atchison, Kan., Oct. 29.—The reward offered for the two Doniphan bandits, dead or alive, was yesterday raised to a total of $1,500, Anton Baun and Charles Fauster adding to the sum. Baun's son was killed by the outlaws.

Easy for Choynski.

Chicago, Oct. 29.—Joe Choynski defeated Steve O'Donnell last night in the fifth round of what was to have been a six-round bout. There was nothing in it but Choynski from the start.

Alexander the Great gave away so much spoil that one general asked him what was left for himself. "My hopes," was the prompt reply. In his last annual report, the president of Harvard cites the like generosity of a modern Alexander. In the last twenty-five years, Dr. Alexander Agassiz has expended from his private purse three-quarters of a million dollars on the Museum of Comparative Zoology, without making any communication on the subject to the president. Thus are the hopes of one of America's greatest scientists being realized through his son.

Surgery deals with unfavorable conditions, when it cannot secure the proper environment, with the same courage that it exhibits under favoring conditions. A city patient is tenderly borne to a hospital operating room, where every precaution known to modern science favors the case. Lieut. Peary, with frostbitten feet, is lashed to a sled and hauled to his ship. Amputation follows, under primitive conditions, and speedy recovery concludes a remarkable experience. Here, as in many another instance, the man under the knife, as well as the man behind the knife, is an important factor in making surgery successful.

The Hebrew Zionists, who recently held at Basle, Switzerland, a third annual council, have for their object the purchase of Palestine and its repeopling with Jews. Influential Zionists privately assert that sufficient money is already in hand for the purchase, and that the sultan would gladly sell. The serious bar to the plan is the fanaticism of the Turkish people, who regard Jerusalem as only second among holy places. Whatever may be the outcome, a marked change in some portions of the landscape of Palestine has already been effected by Jewish colonists. Lord Amherst, of the English exploration society, affirms that places which in 1810 he saw as desert land have been converted into gardens, vineyards and olive groves, and that quite generally Christians and Mohammedans are following the Jewish colonists' methods of agriculture.

Professor Adolf Dirr, an accomplished German scholar and linguist, has invented a system of shorthand symbols which will enable stenographers to report in any one or all the chief European languages as readily and correctly as they can in their respective mother tongues. This system, upon which Professor Dirr has been engaged for a long time, is explained in a volume which will probably be issued in a few weeks by a Paris publisher. Professor Dirr is master of some thirty languages, oriental included. His system has nothing whatever to do with "Volapuk," a dismal fad, which also was made in Germany, but which the professor has ridiculed. He has advised all people in search of a "universal language" to learn English, and he has given his reasons. English literature is the richest and greatest in the world. English is more generally spoken than any other language since the mishap at Babel. It is the universal language of commerce.

Lieut. Gilmore's party is still in Filipino bondage. An American naval officer writes from Manila that the captives are in a pitiable condition, destitute of clothing, without shoes or hats, and forced to provide for themselves out of the miserable allowance of four cents a day. Spanish accounts say that the lieutenant and fifteen American soldiers are guarded by 200 Filipinos. If it needs so many of Aguinaldo's men to guard these starved and sick Americans, the capture of a few more might seriously cripple the insurgent forces.

A girl in New York has started an endless chain with a house for Admiral Schley at the end of it. That is not the way the friends of the admiral would prefer, but the endless chain people are insuppressible by any means short of a riot or a term in the penitentiary.

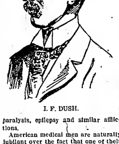
SAID TO BE A GREAT DISCOVERY.

Missouri Physician Called to Europe to Explain Goat Lymph Insanity Cure.

In response to invitations from prominent physicians and scientists in Paris and Berlin, Dr. B. F. Roberts, formerly of Greene City, Mo., has gone to Europe to explain his discoveries in animal therapy and to demonstrate the value of the goat's lymph treatment. There is no secret or patent or copyright on the lymph. The formula has been given to the medical profession, and Dr. Roberts' main work now is the instruction of physicians in its use. This is the remedy which effected the sensational cure in the case of Irvin Fuller Bush of Joliet, Ill. Mr. Bush is a wealthy man, who seven months ago was committed to an asylum as hopelessly insane. After all other known methods of treatment had been exhausted the goat's lymph was used, and today Mr. Bush is attending to his business affairs and is apparently as sound and perfect mentally as any man in the country.

Previous to this the lymph had received the indorsement of eminent physicians in all parts of the country, one of them being Dr. W. H. Hartwell of Vandeventer and Washington avenues, St. Louis, who says he is using it in his general practice with gratifying results. Its newspaper notoriety has been attained by the cure in the Bush case, and it is has therefore come to be regarded as a specific for insanity. Medical men say this is an error. The goat's lymph is not a specific or a panacea or a cure-all either in insanity or any other form of disease, and no such claims are made for it by the discoverer or any of the reputable doctors who use it. Its principal value is as a revitalizer, a restorer of lost functions due to advanced age, and in a number of annoying ailments, such as rheumatism, locomotor ataxia, paralysis, epilepsy and similar afflictions.



I. F. DUSH.

American medical men are naturally jubilant over the fact that one of their number has succeeded in solving a problem with which some of the most famous scientists in the world have struggled in vain for years. Prof. Koch of Berlin, Dr. Brown-Sequard of Paris, Dr. W. A. Hammond of Washington and others of almost equal fame have given the best parts of their lives to a study of this subject in various forms without material satisfactory results. They have accomplished just enough to convince themselves and the medical profession in general that they were working on the right lines so far as the idea of a lymph treatment was concerned, but were never able to reach the grand finals of being able to demonstrate its merits in a practical way.

During all the years that these famous men were experimenting, a quiet, country doctor in Missouri was reading the reports of their investigations, as printed in the medical journals, and trying to solve the knotty problems in his own way. For twenty-five years or so Dr. B. F. Roberts of Greene City, Mo., has experimented with the lymph treatment, and it is among his former patients in and about that little town that the strongest evidences of his success may be found. Dr. Roberts early became convinced that his illustrious coworkers were laboring on a false basis. The object for which all these men were seeking was the same—they sought to perfect a plan by which the vital force of healthy animals could be transplanted into the human system, with the purpose of curing or warding off disease and increasing the duration of life.

This is hardly the explanation that would be given by a medical scientist, but it is in the main correct and conveys the proper idea to the mind of the lay reader. Dr. Brown-Sequard, for instance, made what he called an elixir of life from living animals, while Prof. Koch obtained a lymph by the inoculation plan, graduating it by various transmissions, somewhat after the manner of securing the new types of anti-toxines. In all of these remedies, however, the one vital essential of cell life was missing, and it was this defect that prevented the accomplishment of great results at times when success seemed almost within the grasp of the daring experimenters. Dr. Roberts studied all of the systems closely, and then guardedly told a few of his medical brethren:

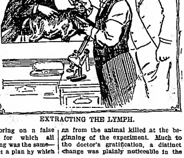
"What we need is not a preparation from a dead animal, nor a product of inoculation, but the transplanting of active cell life from a healthy animal direct to the patient."

This proposition was bolder even than that made by Jenner, and received as little consideration from the medical fraternity. The bare idea of a country doctor presuming to tell the savants of Europe that they were working on wrong lines was preposterous. Dr. Roberts explained his theory, and the professors shrugged their shoulders and smiled. But the Missouri physician labored on, and finally there came a time when it was admitted that his idea of the transplanting of active cell life might be the correct one.

"But, allowing that it is," argued the doubters, "what are you going to do about it? It is impossible to maintain life in these cells for any length of time after they are taken from the animal, and consequently you are no further advanced than other experimenters, who use the products of inoculation or extracts made from dead animals."

Dr. Roberts went ahead with his investigations. At first he experimented on various animals to satisfy himself as to their health, hardiness and general fitness for his purpose, and finally picked out the ordinary goat as being the most immune from disease. It is well known that the goat in its natural condition is absolutely unaffected by tuberculosis, glanders, anthrax and similar ailments, which attack all other grazing animals, and that it is well-nigh impossible to inoculate it with any of these diseases. Having satisfied himself that the goat was the animal he wanted, Dr. Roberts selected a number of young kids, averaging about 5 months of age, in order that he might have the additional benefit of youth in the cell life. From these kids he drew the lymph, taking it mainly from the thoracic gland. This lymph he injected hypodermically into dogs, which were later vivisected to note the effect of the treatment. In one case he took two dogs from the same litter, both being of the same age and well along in years. One of these dogs was killed. Its interior organs, bone structure, etc., showed plainly the marks of old age.

The other dog was subjected to the lymph treatment for some months, during which its general health was manifestly improved. It became more active, ate better, and outward evidence of the approach of old age disappeared to a great degree. Finally one of its legs was amputated, and the bone compared with a similar one taken from the animal killed at the beginning of the experiment. Much to the doctor's gratification, a distinct change was plainly noticeable in the structure of the bone, it having largely lost the peculiar signs of old age so readily discernible by anatomists, and assumed the characteristics of youth. These experiments were conducted to a point at which Dr. Roberts was satisfied he had mastered the principles of cell transplanting, and then he turned his attention to the discovery of an agent by which the cell life might be preserved and kept in its natural condition.



EXTRACTING THE LYMPH.

All this time the medical profession was kept fully informed on the progress of the investigations, but, being a simple, country doctor, and practicing in an obscure hamlet at that, Dr. Roberts received scanty attention from the scientists. It was absurd to expect him to succeed when much greater men had failed. Like many another man who has solved some immense problem in an humble way, while hundreds of distinguished scholars confessed themselves baffled, he was called a "crank." Even his patients who had faith in his pills and other prescriptions were at first unwilling to have the goat's lymph tried on them, and the good doctor had a hard time finding subjects.

DR. B. F. ROBERTS.

He got a few apparently hopeless cases, however, and before long the people of Greene City began to notice marked change in the condition of some patients who had hitherto been pronounced incurable. Men and women bowed and bent with rheumatic afflictions grew spry and active; several cases of locomotor ataxia, for which physicians declared there was no help, were greatly benefited, and a long list of other diseases were radically cured. The most notable effects were obtained in people of old age, who seemed to be rejuvenated and endowed with a new lease of life. At last, with ample evidence of the merit of the lymph treatment all about him in his own home, and presented in a manner which could not be challenged, Dr. Roberts suddenly became a man of importance in the medical world.

Patients flocked to Dr. Roberts' home at Greene City in large numbers, and his fame spread all over the world. Then came a demand from the medical profession for the formula of the lymph, and Dr. Roberts at once made it public. He did more than this. He invited physicians to come to his Missouri home and study the treatment so they might use it in their general practice. Among those who went were a number of Chicago men, including Dr. Joseph R. Hawley, professor of physical diagnosis in the Chicago Clinical school, and Dr. Hartwell of St. Louis.

Like most of their fellow practitioners, Drs. Hawley and Hartwell went to Greene City as doubters, feeling it was another trip after a will-o'-the-wisp such as the medical fraternity have been making at periods for many years. After a close investigation, however, they came back thorough converts to the new treatment. They investigated the entire process carefully, talked with patients who had been cured, obtained evidence that over 800 people had been treated without a single failure, and then said:

"Dr. Roberts, you owe it to the medical fraternity and to humanity to transfer your headquarters to some larger and more central point where you can reach more physicians. There are lots of doctors who cannot afford the expense of a trip to Missouri to study your treatment; there are thousands of sick people in similar plight."

Dr. Roberts did not hesitate. He had made his formula public when by retaining the secret he might have made millions of dollars. His first intention was to locate a laboratory in St. Louis, but it was finally decided to establish it at 3807 Prairie avenue, Chicago, with a branch in St. Louis under the direction of Dr. Hartwell, at Vandeventer and Washington avenues. Distinguished physicians are now coming from all parts of the United States to the laboratories to master the details of administering the lymph.

In one particular Dr. Roberts shows remarkable discernment. It is not every doctor that he will make acquainted with the process. There are some physicians yet in practice who affect to despise antiseptic precautions and kindred "new-fangled" ideas. To these men Dr. Roberts says:

"It would be useless for me to waste my time in making you familiar with the lymph treatment. A man devoid of common sense in this advanced age is too dangerous a person to intrust with the healing of the sick."

The lymph is administered in its natural state, just as it is drawn from the thoracic gland of a young goat, the maximum dose being fourteen minims, or drops, injected hypodermically in the arms and hips. At first one injection a day is given, and these are gradually increased in number in severe cases until the maximum of four is reached. Then, when signs of improvement are manifest, the injections are gradually reduced until, toward the close of the treatment, only one a week is given. Physicians have long known the value of lymph as a restorative agent. Dr. Roberts' discovery is mainly in the manner in which the life cells of the lymph are preserved. Only one lot of lymph is taken from a goat. The animal recovers in time and secretes more lymph, but the process is slow and it is cheaper and safer to get new goats for each operation.

His Revised Version.

A gentleman from a neighboring town in Mississippi told the following recently: "I walked into a small store the other day and found the proprietor lying on the counter just dozing off into a sleep. He roused himself on my approach and jumping to the floor quoted the familiar line—'A horse! A horse! My kingdom for a horse!' 'Where did you get that?' I asked. 'Oh, don't you know? That's what Absalom said when his horse ran under the tree and left him hanging by the hair to a limb. I thought everybody knew where that came from.'"—Memphis Scimitar.

A Romance of the Peerage.

The death of Lord Dunboyne recalls one of the romances of the peerage. The twelfth Lord Dunboyne was Roman Catholic bishop of Cork, when the peerage unexpectedly devolved upon him through the death of a nephew. Wishing to perpetuate the family and the title, he applied to Pope Pius VI. for a dispensation to retire from the episcopate and to marry. The reply he got from the vatican was couched in the severest terms of censure. He thereupon broke his vow of celibacy and married a Protestant young lady, afterwards publicly seceding from the Roman Catholic church. There was, however, no issue to the marriage, and shortly before his death, he was received back into the Roman Catholic church by the Rev. Dr. Gahan. The widow of the ex-bishop survived him for sixty years, dying in August, 1860, at the great age of 96.

Lighting the Red Sea.

The lighting of the Red sea seems at first to be a too practical infringement upon an ancient fairyland. But Sir Thomas Sutherland and other members of parliament interested in shipping are naturally anxious about the progress of the lighthouses with which the ports promised to bejewel the southern waters of the red sea.

Many Drunkards in France.

Dr. Laborde, a French physician, in a brochure on the subject, declares that, unless measures are taken at once to prevent it, the French working class in a few years will become habitual drunkards.

"The Card-Playing Duchess."

A queer story has reached London about the "card-playing duchess," whose fondness for the card table has earned her that appellation. It comes from a seaside resort, where the duke and duchess have a family mansion. Card parties on the lawn on Sunday afternoons are said to have been made a feature of the present country season, and as the lawn is visible from the high road, shocked churchgoers witnessing the spectacle have been moved to protestation.—Eastern Daily Press.

Would Apply to Either.

"Ah," she would exclaim, as she laid aside the little volume with the crazy-quilt cover, "it is so full of hidden meaning. It is written in such seeming mystery and yet is so clear and simple once you understand it." Her brother looked at her for a minute and then asked: "What are you talking about? A piece of poetry or a doctor's prescription?"—Washington Star.

LIFE ON ISLAND OF ST. HELENA

Inhabitants Happy and Contented and Crime Almost Unknown.

From the New York Times: Few people ever think of St. Helena except as a rock in the sea on which Napoleon lived a while miserably and then more miserably died. That the greatest of anti-climaxes was not the end of the little island's history is hard to realize, possibly because a poet or romancer would have made it the end, and a continuation is therefore more or less unnatural and absurd. Be that as it may, St. Helena has remained the abiding place of ordinary human beings who concern themselves very little about the colossal ghost generally supposed to be the island's only inhabitant, and the report to the English government just made by their governor shows that they have joys and sorrows exactly like those of the folks dwelling in places less tragically famous. For instance, the revenues of the island last year were £9,152, a decidedly comfortable sum, but alas! the expenditures amounted to £12,349, and that is an excess of outgo not comfortable at all. The governor says, however, that the bad balance was due to some extraordinary drains upon the island's resources, and that he anticipates a substantial surplus for the current year. A recent increase of the garrison and extensive improvements now making by the colonial and imperial authorities assure the immediate prosperity of the islanders. St. Helena has no public debt, but is paying off by small annual installments a noninterest-bearing grant of £5,000 made by parliament in 1871. The imports, chiefly foodstuffs and building materials, amounted last year to £62,985, and the exports, almost wholly potatoes to £4,391. Lacemaking has been introduced among the girls of the island with great success, and the governor is experimenting with the manufacture of brick and tile. The whalers have now entirely deserted St. Helena, the few ships engaged in that industry keeping far to the north or south. The total population of the island is 4,543. The governor hopes that winter visitors from England may be tempted by the salubrity of the climate to try St. Helena, which is superior, he says, in some respects to that of Madeira and the Canary islands. He says the people as a whole compare favorably with the English agricultural population; with few exceptions all can read and write, and the language is spoken with greater purity than in many districts at home. As a rule, the people are happy and contented, with little crime among them and much kindness in helping each other. Strangers are greatly impressed with the general civility shown by them to old and young.

Wedding Supper in Cairo.

After a Mohammedan wedding the bridegroom sees the face of his unknown bride for the first time in her apartment. As he enters the bride salutes him by kissing his hand. Her head is covered by a veil, which he removes, at the same time presenting jewels to her which are termed "the price of the uncovering of the face." He then spreads the veil on the floor and kneels on it while he says a prayer, the bride in the meantime standing on its edge behind him. At the close of the prayer they seat themselves on a divan, and an old attendant shows them in a mirror the reflection of their united faces. Supper is eaten by the happy pair alone, but not until the bride, after every device known to the bridegroom is used, can be induced to speak. Once she utters a word he claps his hands and supper is brought to them. Meat is not used at this meal because of a belief that it would lead to future bickerings between them. Eggs, sweets and fruits are served.

New Austrian Premier.

It is seldom the minister of agriculture is premier of a cabinet, as is now the case in Austria. Count Clary Aldringen, however, is one of the best-posted men on agriculture in the monarchy, and agriculture is the most important industry of the nation.

COOKING FOR MEN.

SCHOOL FOR TEACHING THEM THE ART.

Course of Instruction Sure to Do Lots of Good, Says a Boston Paper—Women Cooks Being Gradually Retired and Men Apply for Their Places.

One of the most interesting schools in cooking for the sick to be found anywhere is now at the Washington barracks, Washington, where Miss Elizabeth Stack is teaching the privates who have enlisted for service in the hospital corps the art of preparing food suitable for invalid and convalescent soldiers, says the Boston Transcript. This is a new idea. Hospital stewards have, of course, received instructions of this sort before, but the taking of the raw volunteers and drilling them in the niceties of cooking is something new. So successful has it been that the authorities at San Francisco have been directed by the war department to open a similar course of instruction for the volunteers there. Miss Stack has classes numbering in all about fifty, and they are taught in groups of about one-third that number. The course consists of twenty-four lessons and four reviews. The pupils are sturdy men, fresh from a great variety of occupations—cab drivers, barbers, stage carpenters, brick masons, teamsters, etc., and one man is a physician of five years' standing. The course begins with milk, and these men are taught processes of sterilizing and pasteurizing and the uses of milk in various stages of convalescence. Similar studies in water follow. Then come the broths and jellies, and after that the cereals. The possibilities of rice form a large chapter in the instruction, for it is taken for granted that at Manila this will be the most easily obtained of the cereal foods. As for hardtack, Miss Stack shows her pupils ten different methods of preparing it. The way the men take hold of the work is surprising. Most of them appear amazed at the possibilities in the line of scientific cooking, and where they have homes they usually announce that they will effect a revolution in cooking there upon their return. There is an economic side to this work, too. The hospitals are allotted 40 cents a day for each patient with which to buy milk and other food. The class is taught some of the principles of food-buying; what things will be of most service that can be procured within the limits of that sum. All this instruction goes on side by side with the regular army training for the hospital corps, such as the litter and the ambulance drills. Now men are enlisted direct for the hospital corps, while in the recent war all volunteers enlisted on the same basis and certain of them were picked out for this work. There is no difference in the requirements of the pay for this work than that of other privates. The corps get about the same class of men. Its services in the far east are bound to be in great demand, according to all accounts, and there is no estimating the amount of good which Miss Stack's course of instruction will do.

Facts About the Twelfth Century.

The nineteenth century closes with the year 1900. Immediately after midnight, therefore, of Dec. 31, 1900, is when the twentieth century begins. In other words, it begins with the first second of the first hour of the first day of January, 1901. The twentieth century will open on a Tuesday and closes on a Sunday. It will have the greatest number of leap years possible for a century—twenty-four. The year 1904 will be the first one, then every fourth year after that to and including the year 2000. February will three times have five Sundays—in 1920, 1948 and 1976. The twentieth century will contain 36,525 days, which lacks but one day of being exactly 5,218 weeks. The middle day of the century will be Jan. 1, 1951. Several announcements are made of changes to be inaugurated with the opening of the new century. The first of importance is that Russia will adopt the Gregorian calendar. This will be done by omitting thirteen days, the amount of error that will have accumulated after the close of February, 1900. The Russians will then write Jan. 1, 1901, instead of Dec. 19, 1900, or rather, instead of both, according to the dual system now in vogue in that country and in Greece. The other important announcement is that it is not at all unlikely that the astronomical day, which now begins at noon of the civil days, will begin with the civil day, at midnight. The present method of having the astronomical day to begin twelve hours after the beginning of the civil day is apt to be confusing. On the other hand, to have the former begin at midnight, just when astronomers are often busiest, will be to them somewhat inconvenient.

Irish Harvest of 1899.

A good general idea of the Irish harvest of 1899 can now be formed by the reports sent in from all over Ireland, and it may confidently be assumed that it is at least a good average one. The season was a peculiar one, which caused great anxiety amongst agriculturists, as though the early rain was favorable for farming operations, April and May were cold and harsh, then came June, with regular tropical weather, drying up everything too much, and causing consternation amongst green crop growers, but July and August were ideal months, which repaired most of the damage done by their predecessors. Altogether, however, Irish farmers have every reason to be thankful for what must be set down as a very fair all round harvest, while for two years in succession their English brethren have suffered severely from drouth.

Tea Service of Coins.

The Empress Frederick of Germany possesses a very curious little tea service. The tray is made of an old Persian halfpenny beaten out. The teapot was once a German farthing, and the tiny cups are made from coins of different German principalities.

Tammy, aged 5, was strutting around the house in his first pair of boots and being told his baby sister wanted to kiss him, said: "I'll just bet a cent that kid takes me for her father."

A RUSSIAN PANIC.

Leagues to Protect the Czar Against Revolutionists.

A wild panic seized the court circles at St. Petersburg after Alexander's death, says Prince Kropotkin in the September Atlantic. Alexander III., who, notwithstanding his colossal stature and force, was not an over-courageous man, refused to move to the Winter Palace, and retired to the palace of his grandfather, Paul I., at Gatchina. I know that old building, planned as a Vauban fortress, surrounded by moats, and protected by watch towers from the tops of which secret staircases lead to the emperor's study. I have seen the trap doors in the study, for suddenly throwing an enemy on the sharp rocks in the water underneath, and the secret staircase leading to underground prisons and to an underground passage which opens on a lake. All the palaces of Paul had been built on a similar plan. An underground gallery was dug round the Anichoff palace of Alexander III., and was supplied with automatic electric appliances to protect it from being undermined by the revolutionists. A secret league for the protection of the czar was started. Officers of all grades were induced to undertake voluntary spying in all classes of society. Comical scenes followed, of course. Two officers, without knowing that they both belonged to the leagues, would entice each other into a disloyal conversation, during a railway journey, and then proceed to arrest each other, only to discover at the last moment that their plans had been labor lost. The league still exists in a more official shape, under the name of Okhrana (Protection), and from time to time frightens the present czar with all sorts of concocted "dangers," in order to maintain its existence. A still more secret organization, the Holy League, was formed at the same time, under the leadership of the brother of the czar, Vladimir, for the purpose of opposing the revolutionists in different ways, one of which was to kill those of the refugees who were supposed to have been the leaders of the late conspiracies. I was of this number. The grand duke violently reproached the officers of the league for their cowardice, regretting that there were none among them who would undertake to kill such refugees, and an officer, who had been a page de chambre at the time I was in the corps of pages, was appointed by the league to carry out this particular work. Skobeleff, the hero of the Turkish war, was asked to join this league, but he blankly refused.

WOMAN REFUSES

To Live with Her Husband Because She Says He Is Homely.

New York World: Mrs. Jennie Goldfarb has given a novel excuse for refusing to live with her husband Samuel. She says that he is too homely for any woman to live with. Goldfarb who is a philosopher, admits that he is not an Apollo, but he also insists that his wife has never been known as a professional beauty. The Goldfarbs have had a good deal of trouble since they were married in 1890. It took Mrs. Goldfarb but a short time to discover that her husband did not come up to her standard of manly beauty, and she began to make things uncomfortable for him. Occasionally she went back to her mother. At another time Samuel in despair sent her to Europe, hoping that when she returned he would find favor in her eyes. But matters were still worse when she came back, and, according to a number of affidavits, in the possession of former Judge H. W. Leonard, Goldfarb's counsel, she positively refused to live with him at all. Goldfarb in the meantime had spent a small fortune on complexion beautifiers, hair restorers and other toilet luxuries. He became a Berry Wall in his dress. But his wife remained obdurate and finally, a short time ago, charged him before Magistrate Hogan with desertion. Goldfarb was sent—railroaded he says—to the island for six months. He gave a bond and was released. He at once sued for a separation, and "for such other relief as may seem just."

Destroys Young Lobsters.

That cod eat young lobsters is a fact established to the satisfaction of a writer in an exchange quoted by the Fishing Gazette. He says: "The codfish are feeding on the young lobsters to such an extent that it will not take long to exterminate them. Through the efforts of the United States fish commission codfish seem to have increased greatly in numbers. The fishermen around Block island and Watch Hill say that cod are growing more plentiful every year, and they say further that when dressing codfish they frequently find young lobsters whole inside of the larger fish. Evidently young lobsters are becoming a delicate morsel for some of their companions of the sea. There is a problem for the shellfish commissioners to solve in the artificial propagation of the lobster. Old fishermen about Watch Hill and vicinity tell me that when they haul their lobster pots now they get fifteen and twenty pounds where they used to get 100." The fishermen have no one to blame but themselves. When lobsters were plentiful they would kill the egg-bearing lobsters as nuisances and bait destroyers. If they had thrown them overboard the result might have been different.

To Explore the Pacific.

Prof. Alexander Agassiz, with a corps of men of science, and under the auspices of the United States fish commission, set sail from San Francisco recently in the steamship Albatross, on one of the most important scientific expeditions of recent times. An immense area of the Pacific ocean, including the Paumota, the Friendly, the Ellice, the Gilbert and the Marshall islands, and many unnamed groups of coral islets, will be thoroughly explored for the first time. The voyage will cover about 20,000 miles, and the explorations will include the life and phenomena of the sea from its surface to its greatest attainable depths.

Celestial Matches.

A young hopeful sat in the window a long time the other night during a thunder storm and contemplated the scene with a wise look on his face. Then he turned to his mother and said: "Mamma, the angels are scratching matches on the sky."

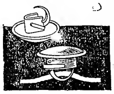
Mental Effects of the Weather.

Everybody probably feels that his or her mental condition depends, to some extent, upon the character of the weather. In gloomy weather we are apt to be depressed, and in fair weather exhilarated. When the atmosphere is stimulating, the mental and physical energies are enhanced. Starting from these generally recognized facts, Mr. Edwin G. Dexter has made a study of the effects of the weather on human conduct, the results of which are rather surprising. He shows, by a system of tabulation, that misdemeanors involving violence, such as assaults, are more common in bright weather, and that the same is true of suicides. On the other hand, mental errors, such as mistakes in bank figures, are more common in damp, rainy weather. His inference is that the excess of energy produced by a bracing condition of the air is responsible for more violence than is the "ugly temper" caused by bad weather, because the latter, while lowering the spirits, diminishes the activity of men.

Button Without Thread.



A detachable button, which can be fastened in an instant, without needle or cotton, and which has every appearance of a sewed one, and which will stand a great deal more strain, is a thing which will appeal to the man who lives in single blessedness.

This button has as an attaching device a metal hook, which, after being thrust through the material, is held firmly by a locking bar folding over the point of the hook, and held in this position by a spring.

Protection from Lightning.

A monograph on "Lightning and the Electricity of the Air," recently issued by the United States Weather bureau, affords some interesting information upon the question of protecting buildings from lightning. To what extent is it practicable to protect a building and to what extent is it profitable to attempt such protection when it is practicable? Before answering these questions it is necessary to convey a clear idea of the nature of the lightning flash. The old idea is that the flash, like the moderate current of electricity with which we are familiar, follows the line of least resistance, and can be diverted by a conductor of a certain size. In this view the lightning-rod is like a channel made to convey a flow of water, and a small channel will empty a large reservoir if given time enough. But the Weather Bureau likens the lightning flash rather to an avalanche, a landslide down the side of a mountain or the breaking of a dam—the whole force is exerted in one instant and there is no after current. The flashes, however, vary greatly in volume, some of them being mild affairs. And it is always true that a well-constructed and well-arranged lightning-rod will, if given time, silently convey away a vast deal of electricity, thus lessening greatly, if not preventing, the ultimate flash. It is on this account that lightning strokes are comparatively infrequent in large cities, where lofty spires and roofs drain overcharged clouds before the stratum of air between the cloud and the houses is strained to the breaking point. It follows from the avalanche-like nature of lightning that absolute protection of a building is impracticable unless the building itself—as being a steel structure—is itself a good conductor. But a very large measure of protection is within our reach. A chimney or church spire well provided with rods is almost perfectly protected and rods distributed to exposed points will reduce the risks of a wide roof area as much as seventy-five per cent. There is no definite "area of protection." The old rule was that a rod protects a radius equal to its height, and the rule may stand for want of a better, but as a matter of fact it holds good only with electrical discharges of moderate volume. Whether it pays in a particular case to invest money in lightning-rods depends upon circumstances. Sometimes the risk is so slight as to be neglected. The cost of the rods may be such as to render fire insurance preferable. But where the risk of being struck is very great—as in case of church spires and high brick chimneys—the value of the property threatened renders the lightning-rod a necessity. It may be said to be necessary also where the risk is less, as, for example, for buildings that contain a great number of persons—large summer hotels, large school buildings, asylums and expensive public buildings. A very costly building cannot be wisely subjected to a slight risk from lightning if protection can be obtained. The risk on farm buildings is greater than on any other class of buildings, but where their value is small it is usually preferable to rely on insurance for protection. As to the nature of the rod, it is stated that either iron or copper may be used, and iron is as good as copper, provided the section of the iron rod be enough larger to compensate for its inferior conductivity. A rod of iron weighing thirty-five ounces per foot is held to be equivalent to a copper rod weighing six ounces per foot. A flat conductor is recommended, on the ground that surface counts for more than section. Glass insulators are useless. The rod may be fastened directly to the building to be protected. The matter of greatest importance is the condition of the two extremities of the rod—a matter often neglected with disastrous results. A rod is perfectly useless—in fact, a source of danger—if its lower end is not carried down into the ground far enough to reach wet earth. It should be connected with a good-sized piece of iron buried at the lowest depth reached by the rod. The top of the rod should be pointed and plated for protection from rust. "It is ludicrous," says the Engineering News, "to run a rod down the side of a building and neglect the grounding, as is so often done, just as if the lightning were a dangerous bug which could be safely disposed of by being induced to crawl down to the bottom of the rod, and which might then be left to jump off as and where he pleased. The correct way of looking at it is to consider the rod as a channel down a mountain side to guide a possible avalanche. The larger the channel (or the less the total electrical resistance of the whole rod)—the more surely will the avalanche be confined and led through the channel provided for it."

Wonderful Illumination.

Niagara Falls is to be illuminated by electricity during the coming Buffalo Exposition. This will be the occasion of what will doubtless be a most brilliant and startling illumination. The idea is to erect a series of tall towers on both the American and Canadian sides of the river. On the top of these lofty spires huge electric searchlights will be placed in such manner that they may be played on any part of the Falls. The imagination may picture the dazzling effect that will be produced when a score of those powerful instruments of illumination are brought to bear upon the rushing waters as they tumble irresistibly over the rocky ledge into the depths beneath. A constant change of colors will be used in the manipulation of the searchlights, so that now the Falls will be like molten silver, again a flood of crimson, again as green as old ocean itself, and so on through the whole gamut of colors of the painter's palette. The astonishing effect will be still further heightened by the use of electric arc lights in the Cave of the Winds, which will give to the water as it falls in front of it a weird, phosphorescent glow. The power of this record-making illumination will be all within easy reach, as Niagara will itself be made to do all the necessary work.

Graphite's Many Uses.

One of the most familiar substances now named in industrial connections is graphite, and its differentiated uses and applications are really phenomenal. Not a single iron casting, says a writer in Brodstreet, is taken from its sand mold without the sand being first faced by graphite; not a gun projectile is cast but the steel is melted in a graphite crucible; not a tool, not a saw is made but from graphite crucible steel; every pound of nickel, of copper, of composition metal, of brass, is cast in some way the metal being reduced in a graphite crucible. Every printing house, for the perfection of its electrotypes, is absolutely dependent on graphite; every electrician and every department of electrical work comes under the same tribute. Graphite lubricates friction ways, and it is notably the most enduring paint pigment; the electric light, too, would shine much less easily but for graphite, the production of steel rails has an equally intimate relation to this mineral. Among its peculiar characteristics are its immunity from any effect by heat and cold, the highest and lowest extremes of either failing to influence it.

A Land Tide.

Recent observations with the seismograph at Mauritius have led to the suggestion that not only the ocean and the atmosphere, but even the land, may experience the effects of a daily tide running round and round the earth as it revolves on its axis. But while the tides in the air and the sea are due more to the moon than to the sun, the supposed "land tide" arises solely from the sun's action. Moreover, it is caused, not by the attraction of the sun, but by its heat. A wave of depression is supposed to follow the sun from east to west, caused by the extraction of moisture from the soil. At Mauritius it is found that there is a relative upheaval of the land to the west of the place of observation from morning until evening, and a relative depression on the same side, or an upheaval to the east, during the night.

A Handy Fixing Trough.

Here is a new, convenient and useful appliance recently invented for the dark room. It is a porcelain fixing trough, in which six plates can be accommodated at the same time. Any plate can be lifted out and examined by transmitted or reflected light without soiling the fingers or without any danger of dropping and breaking the plates. The six dippers are celluloid and are the quarter-plate size.

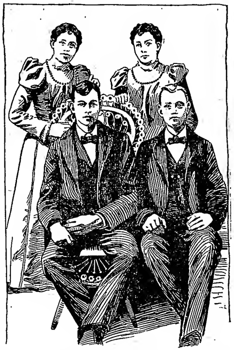
A Wide-Scattered Meteor.

One of the rare instances when the fragments of a meteor, whose explosion has been seen and heard, are discovered, occurred on the east side of Mount Bomba in British Central Africa on Jan. 25 last. Ten fragments, the largest weighing nearly six pounds, have been picked up. They were scattered over an area of country nine miles long by three broad. Many fragments which did not fall near dwelling places remain undiscovered. The noise of the explosion was heard ninety miles south of Zomba and seventy miles north of it.

CHOCTAW COURTING IS RAPIDLY RUSHED

Many of the Girls of the Nation Prefer White Men as Husbands and Receive Their Attentions Graciously.



TYPES OF CHOCTAW QUARTER-BLOOD GIRLS AND THEIR WHITE HUSBANDS.

Some quick love-making is now going on in the Choctaw Nation, Indian Territory. It is estimated that one thousand white men will carry off Choctaw brides between now and the first of next month. About five thousand white men have already won Choctaw brides, and the land and money that accompanies them.

The cause of the rush is a recent announcement of the Dawes commission that after the first of the month all persons not Choctaws by blood will not be enrolled on the citizenship list. This means no white men who marry Choctaw women will be allowed to share in lands and moneys of the Choctaw tribe. Hence quick love-making on part of civilized man.

The Choctaw girls are rather pretty and some are highly educated. Those who are not fullbloods refuse to marry Indians, hence there is a great demand for whites. Choctaw girls marry at the age of 17. Because of their 550 acres of land (equal amount being given to their husbands) no trouble is experienced in finding a suitable companion.

The complexion of these girls is a clear white. Their eyes and hair are black, as a rule, although some are perfect blondes. They are of a kind and loving disposition, and are said by the white men who have tried to make excellent wives.

To avoid tramps and degenerates marrying these girls, the Choctaw laws provide that all white men, before they can be admitted to the tribe, must produce recommendation of good character from the county judge of the county where they last resided.

It is said that some of the most beautiful and popular girls of the Choctaw tribe have received proposals of marriage from alleged French and English men of title, but because they refused to prove their ancestry were rejected.

It is a queer sight to go into a Choctaw town just now. At the hotels are stopping at least a dozen men whose sole business is courting Choctaw women, with the purpose of matrimony. Not long ago a Choctaw girl, just for fun, inserted an ad in a matrimonial paper. She received several hundred answers.

QUEER TROUBLE IN A LODGE.

Opposing Factions Rear Monument to a Dead Girl's Memory.

Fort Smith, Ark., letter: The removal of the remains of Miss Etta Kels and the tearing down of one monument and the substitution of another, followed by a street fight between prominent business men and the temporary hiding-out of an editor, is but a collective incident of a long-continued feud among the ladies of Laurel Grove circle, an adjunct of the order Woodmen of the World, which has a large membership in this city composed of the best people.

Whether the culmination will be in the courts or in a tragedy on the street is a matter of doubt, as one faction affirms its determination that the leader of the other shall go to the penitentiary, while the brother of the young lady, upon whom vengeance is sworn, is still hunting an editor who has tried to square himself by saying that while what had been published was true it was a great injustice to the young lady.

Miss Etta Kels was a popular saleslady in one of the leading dry goods stores of this city, and was killed instantly by the collapse of a brick building during the cyclone which swept over Fort Smith February 11, 1898. She was a member of Laurel Grove circle, whose constitution requires the lodge to erect a monument, to cost not less than $100, over the grave of each member dying in good standing, or, in lieu thereof, to contribute that amount toward the erection of a suitable monument to be erected by others. It has been a year and a half since Miss Kels died. She was in good standing, and all parties favored the erection of a monument, but dissensions arose in the lodge. Some withdrew, some were expelled, and some took no action at all. Miss Agnes Frizzelle was and is yet a prominent member of one of the factions. She is a woman of fine intellect, superior education and commanding presence. There were others, and contention ensued. After many weeks of "shall and sha'n't," Miss Frizzelle rose as a committee of the whole and declared the lodge disbanded, their charter forfeited, their rights lost, and with her following moved out. Coincidently with this action the other faction proceeded to expel all dissenters and revolutionists. Both factions then had lodges, both claimed the true succession, each charged the other with acting outside of the law, and both ordered a monument for Miss Etta Kels. A party, headed by Mrs. Westfall and Mrs. Dodd, got there first with their monument. They placed their order at home and beat Miss Frizzelle's party by nearly two weeks. When the second monument arrived it was without the knowledge of the other faction, which was preparing to have an unveiling with public ceremonies. Late in the afternoon of Tuesday of this week, Miss Frizzelle's party, with the necessary labor, went to the cemetery, took down the previously erected monument, set it aside, opened the grave and removed the remains to another lot and there erected the new monument. Persons who saw them at work paid no attention to them, supposing it to be regular. But a little girl who happened to know of the trouble saw what was going on and reported the fact to her friends, who in turn reported it to the officers and the morning newspaper, which later, without investigation, accepted the report as true and published it as an unparalleled act of vandalism, describing it as the desecration of a grave, and not publishing the fact that a second monument was erected in place of the one torn down. The report fired the city with indignation, which continued at good heat until the other side of the story was published, when it was learned that Miss Frizzelle, who had been charged with responsibility for the alleged outrage, was not the person who had done the work complained of, but that it was Mrs. Lefevre, the legal representative of the dead girl, and that she had been to the city clerk's office and secured a permit to remove the body to another lot and erect a monument over it, and that Miss Frizzelle had simply gone with her as a friend and adviser. The dead girl left $500, out of which Mrs. Lefevre proposed to supplement the lodge's appropriation of $100 and buy a monument worth $140, which is the price of the one erected in place of the one removed, which cost $100. Early next morning after the denouement, the mayor and chief of police went to the cemetery and found no evidences of any vandalism, but an exchange of monuments and a removal of the grave, as stated. Mrs. Lefevre showed a letter from the dead girl's aunt, which gave her authority to perform the work she had done, and said that the body was removed simply that it might be alongside that of the girl's mother, who died several years ago. The other faction was not satisfied with these statements, and insisted on going before the grand jury, which was in session. They were admitted, but after a few questions and answers the ladies returned to look for the individuals who had witnessed the vandalism complained of. They still insist that it is Miss Frizzelle, and not Mrs. Lefevre, who is responsible, and that they acted without any authority of the Laurel Circle lodge, and that the lodge will never pay $100 for any monument but the one they had erected. Mrs. Lefevre and Miss Frizzelle have published in one of the daily papers a formal notice to members of Laurel Grove circle and "all meddlers" not to trespass upon the grave of Miss Etta Kels. This notice will compel the abandonment of the unveiling ceremonies or the use of a monument standing embarrassingly alone.

TIRED NATURE'S RESTORER.

Varying Amounts of Sleep Required by Varying Constitutions.

"The old rule of eight hours' sleep is sheer nonsense," said a New Orleans physician, chatting after office hours to a New Orleans Times-Democrat man. "Natural sleep is something that can't be regulated by any formula. The body takes what it needs, be it much or little, and the necessary amount varies with the individual. In a general way, I would say that four hours is the minimum and ten hours the maximum for people in fair health. Either more or less is a pretty sure sign that something is out of gear—usually something in the brain. I have two patients who sleep only four hours and keep in tolerably good condition. Both are middle-aged men and neither of them works very hard. They are simply so constituted that nature can repair its losses in four hours of unconsciousness. In many other people nearly three times as long is required; the nerve cells work more slowly, why, nobody knows. The queerest case that ever came under my personal observation was that of a bookkeeper of this city, who used to sleep two or three hours a night through the week and on Sunday would catch up in a twenty-four hour nap. That is not exaggeration, but an actual fact, well known to all his intimates. He seemed to be able to store away nervous energy as a camel stores water. His general health during the twelve or fifteen years I knew him was excellent, but he finally died of an attack of pneumonia. All the lower forms of animal life require more sleep than man with one exception—that is the ant. So far as we know, the ant doesn't sleep at all. Its vital mechanism, once started, runs forever."

$70,000,000 for Amusements.

There are 5,000 theaters in the United States. More than 2,000 are fairly classible as legitimate, and over 1,000 more are devoted to vaudeville. The 2,000 others taper off in various ways. About $100,000,000 is invested in the 3,000 first-class legitimate theaters. That is an average of $33,333 each, which is low enough, some costing as much as $500,000 each. It is hard to compute the money paid by Americans for theatrical amusement. A conservative calculation is that the aggregate reaches $70,000,000 a year. Not less than one and one-half million persons sit in these theaters each week day night in the season of at least eight months.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Catching Whales by Electricity.

Electricity is to be used in killing whales. A dynamo is to be placed on a whaling ship. A big reel of insulated wire will be carried in a boat when a whale is sighted. One end of the wire is connected with the dynamo and at the other end will be a hard rubber stick attached to a piece of metal twenty-four inches long and one inch in diameter, sharpened at the end to penetrate the flesh of the whale. The rubber and metal rod will be used as a harpoon is now used. When near the big fish the harpooner will throw the electric barb. When it strikes the whale a current connection will be formed with the dynamo, the whale will get the full shock of 10,000 volts, and will be dead in a fraction of a second.

KRAPOTKIN IN THE SOLITARY.

Description of the Prison Room in Which He Was Confined.

From the Atlantic Monthly: My first movement was to approach the window, which was placed so high that I could hardly reach it with my lifted hand. It was a broad, low opening, cut in a wall five feet thick and protected by an iron grating and a double iron window frame, relates Prince Krapotkin. At a distance of a dozen yards from this window I saw the outer wall of the fortress, a piece of masonry of immense thickness, on the roof of which I could make out a gray sentry box. Only by looking upward could I perceive a bit of the sky, which was now faintly illuminated by the last rays of the sun. I made a minute inspection of the room, where I had now to spend no one could say how many years. From the position of the high chimney of the mint I guessed that I was in the southwest corner of the fortress, in a bastion overlooking the Neva. This room of mine was a casement destined for a big gun and the window was an embrasure. Sun rays might never penetrate it; even in summer they must be lost by the thickness of the wall. It was eleven steps from one corner to the other of the room, which held an iron bed, a little oak table and an oak stool. The floor was covered with painted felt and the walls with yellow paper. However, in order to deaden the sounds, the paper was not put on the wall itself; it was painted over canvas and behind the canvas I discovered a wire grating, behind which was a layer of felt. Only beyond the felt could I reach the stone wall. At the inner side of the room there was a washstand and a thick oak door, in which I made out a locked opening to pass the food through and a little slit, protected by glass and a shutter from the outside. This was the "Judas" through which the prisoner could be spied upon at every moment. The sentry who stood in the passage frequently lifted the little shutter and looked inside, his boots squeaking as he crept toward the door. I tried to speak to him. Then the eye which I could see through the slit assumed an expression of terror and the shutter was immediately let down, only to be opened furtively a minute or two later. But I could get no word of reply from the sentry. Absolute silence reigned all around; no sounds came from anywhere. I dragged my stool to the window and looked upon the bit of sky I could see. I tried to catch any sound from the Neva or from the town on the opposite side of the river, but I could catch none.

DEWEY IN AN EMERGENCY

How He Circumvented a Desertion Conspiracy After the Civil War.

One striking characteristic of the admiral is the readiness with which he meets every emergency, says Leslie's Weekly. He is resourceful as well as prompt in action. An illustration of this occurred during a cruise which Dewey took after the civil war, in the Mediterranean, on the old ship Canandaigua. The war fever had died out, and men frequently deserted. On men-of-war, boats cannot be lowered without an order, except in case of a man overboard. Several malcontents in the crew one night, therefore, raised the "man overboard" cry, lowered a boat and scuttled off into the darkness. Dewey was executive officer of the ship, and was called from his berth. Though even then particular as to dress, he didn't care about uniform when there was quick work to be done, and he appeared clad only in his night shirt. He rushed up to the quarter-deck in half a gale of wind and promptly took command in spite of his curious appearance. He knew his men thoroughly, and acted promptly in spite of the darkness. "Come back here, Jim Brown, Tom Robinson, and the rest of you," he shouted, and punctuated his remarks with three shots from his revolver. The shots, the ghostly figure on the quarter-deck, and the sudden use of their names startled the men into obedience, and they came sneaking back to the ship, while Dewey and his novel uniform retired once more below.

When Cossacks Go Fishing.

In the frozen rivers of the Ural mountains, in Russia, the Cossacks go fishing in large bands. They mount their horses and ride across the frozen river until they reach the spot where they know the current is strong. They then cut through the ice and make an open breathing-hole right across the stream, and let down a net extending from bank to bank, so that all the fish coming along from one direction must get caught in the net. They re-mount their horses and proceed to ride on the ice up stream four or five miles, and then they return at a good pace, stamping and galloping and rattling over the ice in the noisiest possible manner. The thundering of the horses' hoofs terrifies the fish, which swim away at full speed down stream, until they plunge in great numbers and in the utmost confusion, into the net, which is immediately hauled ashore, generally with a huge take.

A Curiosity of the Philippines.

"Among the queer things found in the Philippines are bamboo opals, a vegetable gem which is sometimes discovered by the natives in the stem of the bamboo," says a gentleman who has lived for a number of years in Manila. "Not one piece of bamboo in a thousand, however, contains a specimen, as the bamboo grown there, as elsewhere, is usually empty; but accident occasionally brings to light in the bamboo stem a small, flintlike material which presents the appearance of a perfect opal. These nodules are known to the natives as 'tobaeur,' and I have from time to time during my long stay on the islands seen several of these vegetable freaks of nature which reproduced the characteristic lines of the opal so faithfully that experts were puzzled to know the difference between the vegetable and the real specimen."

A Church Curiosity.

A church in which only two services are held during the year is surely a curiosity, yet such a one is to be found in the middle of a large field near the village of Towton, in England. It was originally erected as a memorial to Lord de Clifford, who fell in the battle of Towton in 1461.

EVOLUTION OF THE BICYCLE.

In Time, It Is Predicted, It Will Have Wings.

Like many other great successes in this uncertain world, the bicycle was of humble origin. It sprang from the wheelbarrow and no one blames it, says the Detroit Free Press. This is the reason that you can fall so far and be so long about it, when you are mixed up with one of these machines, no matter what price or what model. The velocipede, which the best authorities testify was a connecting link, was uglier than anything else except a three-humped camel trying to escape his keeper. The device will best be recalled as propelled by a small boy with a straw hat over his ears, his busy feet on the level with his chin and his shoulders settled down on his waist line. Then came the ungainly affair with an enormous fly wheel in front and a pitiful little baby wheel trailing. To drop from it was like falling off a load of hay and it forced upon short, fat men the indignity of mounting from a second-story window or a convenient shade three. Nearly all of those who were thrown from it and survived are miscellaneously maimed. But it is through such rugged stages that success is reached. The bicycle became a thing of beauty and a joy forever with pneumatic tires that are blown up as they deserve it, artistic finish, ball bearings, spring seats and an unaccountable disposition to participate in a scorch. At last they have thrown off their chains and have the highest degree of freedom attainable by things inanimate. They neither eat nor drink, but are always merry. They toil not, neither do they spin—when a policeman is looking—yet Solomon in all his glory could not have ridden one of them to save his life. They do not shy at firecrackers, a cow in the road or a locomotive whistle, it does not require two hands to hold them when an interested couple are going home, as it does a horse headed for the oats bin, and they will stand without hitching, wherever the bicycle thief permits. In time, it is predicted, they will have wings, and humanity itself aspires to nothing more desirable.

ANOTHER MEAN MAN.

Bachelor Who Gets Sewing Machine Agents to Do Mending.

"He's the meanest man that I ever had anything to do with," said the sewing-machine agent. "I received a note from him the other day saying that he desired to view one of our matchless machines with the view of purchasing it, if found to be satisfactory. In these piping days of competition it is a novelty for a sewing-machine agent to be invited to call and show goods, and when I had recovered from my surprise I promptly loaded a machine in my cart and started for the address the man had given. An old man met me at the door and invited me to bring the machine inside so he could more closely examine it. I did so, setting the machine up in the sitting-room, and calling his attention to its fine points. He was an attentive listener, and I talked with the confidence of a man who considered a sale certain. Finally, having exhausted all my arguments, he asked to see a practical test of the capabilities of the machine. I agreed, and asked him to bring me something upon which to work. He left the room, returning a few minutes later, his arms filled with damaged linen. I sat down at the machine and showed how easily rents and tears could be mended, making the garment as good as new and saving in a short time the price of the machine. The man seemed very much interested and kept handing me garment after garment that needed attention. I worked for two solid hours mending the old man's garments, and at last, having nothing else that needed attention, he commenced to find fault with the machine. Finally he told me that he guessed he wouldn't buy a machine right away. I was so mad that I didn't dare trust myself to speak, and I was glad afterward that I didn't, for when I learned the whole truth I realized my total inability to do the subject justice. That miserable old sinner, who happens to be a bachelor, had brought me up there merely to do his mending, and had no idea of buying a machine. He has worked the same game on other agents."—New York Sun.

Crediting Stamp Loss.

Washington Spe. New York Evening Post: A good idea of the enormous size of the postal business may be had by getting close to one of the big machine's smallest wheels. Take, for example, the crediting of stamped envelopes or stamps which have been accidentally destroyed or rendered worthless. This one duty occupies the entire time of six men. During the last quarter the books of the department show that Chicago was credited with 21 cases of such stamped envelopes, each containing 10,000. The losses come from many different causes. Often envelopes are misdirected. Sometimes they are burned or get wet. A method by which stamps are frequently lost is the grinding of a mail sack under the wheels of a train. This sometimes happens when an effort is made to catch a mail sack from a train going too rapidly. If the bag happens to slip, the pouch is pretty sure to be sucked under the cars.

Luggage Arrived First.

From the London Answers: As a train was moving out of a Scotch station a man in one of the compartments noticed that the porter, in whose charge he had given his luggage, had not put it into the van, and so shouted at him and said: "Hi, you old fool, what do you mean by not putting that luggage in the van?" To which the porter replied: "Eh, man! yer luggage is ne'er such a fool as yersel'! Yer i' the wrang train!"

Chicago's Queer Indian.

An Englishman of rank and money visited Chicago recently and with him came his private secretary, a young, fresh faced, jolly fellow just out of Oxford university. The secretary brought letters of introduction to a Chicago man from a well known London actor and an equally prominent man of letters. The Englishman came direct to Chicago, making no stop in New York. The secretary called upon the Chicago man to whom he had letters and who did a little entertaining, inviting three city friends to meet the private secretary at luncheon at a noted restaurant.

It was after the cigars were lighted that the conversation turned upon things American. The Chicagoans knew that the Britons were credited with believing that they could shoot buffaloes under the shade of the Auditorium and shoot grizzlies along the Skokie, but they were not quite prepared for what was to come. The little luncheon party had been waited upon by a coal black negro with crisp hair curled tight to his head. The secretary throughout the repast had eyed the attendant with interest. When the waiter finally had left the room, the English guest turned to his host and said:

"Mr. Nelson, it seems to me that I read somewhere that the American Indians had straight hair. The hair of the one who waited on us curls like astrakhan."—Chicago Tribune.

Married With a Dump.

The marriage customs of the Negulos are peculiar. The young man who seeks a bride first obtains the favor of her parents and then pursues her, catching her in his arms. She breaks loose and runs and does not yield until he has caught her several times. Finally he leads her in triumph to her home. Here her father drags the youth up a ladder to her floor of their hut. The mother drags up the maiden. They are then made to kneel, and the father pours over them a cocoanut shellful of water. He then bumps their heads together, and the ceremony is completed. They spend their honeymoon in the depths of the mountains and for five days and nights are lost to sight, after which they come back to everyday life.

There is another marriage custom which is worth describing. Instead of the youth and maiden being dragged up the hut ladder they are made to climb two saplings that grow near each other. Then an elder of the group grasps the saplings and draws them together until the heads of the young couple touch, with a kiss or a bump, according to the force used. This makes them man and wife.—Forum.

Taking Umbrage.

A few idlers (no very unusual thing) were lounging in front of the shop of the bailie of the burgh, among whom the laird espied the village Aesculapius, who was his political oracle, and thus addressed him:

"How's a' wi' ye the day, doctor? Ony political news?"

"Nothing very particular," replied the doctor; "only it is said that the Dutch have taken umbrage at"— Here the doctor got a touch on his shoulder from his shop boy, who acquainted him that a valuable patient was waiting for him, and he broke off abruptly from his political laird.

"Ta'en Umbrage!" exclaimed the laird. "Mercy upon us! Hae they ta'en Umbrage? Bailie, ken ye if it's a wa'ed town or no?"

"A wa'ed town!" said the bailie; "nae sic thing. It's a sugar island and ane o' the sweetest o' them. The article's up already, but ye shall hae a stane weight hame wi' ye at the auld price."—Cornhill.

An Expensive Knife.

An old man went into a cigar store where pocketknives are on sale. He had a fancy for one of the knives, but thought the price, 75 cents, too high. After a parley with the proprietor he concluded to wager 75 cents against the knife and play a game of poker. He lost the money and then that much again. He continued to lose until he lost $121, all the money he had, but the proprietor made him a present of the knife.

In the afternoon he returned, saying he was dissatisfied with the knife. He had paid $121 for it, but would willingly exchange it for a $1 article. The dealer kindly made the exchange, and the man went his way rejoicing. He had no money to trouble him, but he had a knife, and, after all, a knife is a good thing to have.—Arizona Republican.

RATHER EMBARRASSING.

The Sad Case of the Young Woman Who Wanted to Talk.

A most embarrassing experience was that of a certain West Philadelphia young woman who a few evenings ago attended a reception, in which a number of well known clubwomen participated. It so happened that among these were several who had found the matrimonial yoke an unwelcome one for various reasons and had obtained legal separation from their husbands. To one of these women, quite unwittingly, having just been introduced, the young woman, who is nothing if not vivacious and conversational, addressed the question:

"By the way, Mrs. R., don't you think divorce is wrong?" The woman, reddening slightly, replied:

"My dear, there are two sides to that question. Perhaps you have not heard my story."

The questioner, embarrassed beyond measure, stammered an excuse and walked away. To the first woman she met she confided her trouble, saying: "Oh, dear! I have just made a most unfortunate remark. You know Mrs. R.? Well, I spoke to her about divorce, and she's divorced, you know."

"So am I, my dear," was the smiling reply, and once again the young woman wished that the floor would open under her. She felt so bad that she went to one of the women in charge of the reception and, taking her aside, told her the whole story, asking her advice as to what she should do.

"Do nothing at all, Miss L.," was the reply. "I really don't think they have any horror of the subject so long as it's innocently called up. I know I haven't, and I, too, am a divorcee."

Whereat the conversational miss donned her hat, and, fearing to say another word, went home.—Exchange.

A CHILD'S FANCY.

Explanation of What Seems Precociousness In Imaginative Children.

"An active, healthy imagination is one of the happiest gifts a child can possess," is the theory advanced by Florence Hull Winterburn, the well known padiologist, in The Woman's Home Companion.

"If we watch an intelligent child, four or five years old, who believes himself unnoticed we will probably be astonished at the richness and fertility of the fancy which can give life and color to dull, commonplace things and weave whole stories and dramas around the simple toy that means nothing more to us than what it plainly stands for. But we will perceive that even his wildest romances found themselves upon many facts, for free and frolicsome as imagination may appear, it is subject to its laws. It deals with real things in a playful way. It embroiders, paints, molds, but it must have its material, its basis in actual life.

"What we call creative ability is really nothing but the power to reconstruct, perhaps to connect several separate plans or patterns into a whole which seems different from the original. The child is an artist who daubs on his colors boldly, without any sense of the absurdities he may commit, and so he often produces effects that surprise others as well as himself. Many of the acts that seem so precocious because we suppose them to be the outcome of a well considered plan are really happy accidents, not devoid of the merit of originality, but neither to be overpraised as work of genius. Childhood is one unbroken succession of experimentings."

A Much Abused Word.

The way certain words are misused and abused should appeal to one. It is a fact that if any word has tried to adapt itself to every possible and impossible situation "grand" is the one that has made the attempt. A person needs but walk about any city to be confronted with Grand hotels and Grand View houses. Sometimes it fits the house which it adorns, sometimes it seems but a sardonic attempt to make them seem the more forlorn. It rises to the sublime and describes the mountains, it descends to the level of everyday life and appears as a descriptive term when the weather is mentioned. On the lips of the milliner it lures on to her doom the woman who without the support of a friend is selecting a hat, and the "doesn't she look grand in that?" causes her to depart with the hat in her possession. One hears about "grand" dinners and "grand" times, but the last straw is when the shopwoman says. "That coat fits you something grand."—New York Sun.

A Musical Snake.

The Pittsburg Times is responsible for this tale of black snakes who loved music not wisely but too well. One of the ophidians became so proficient in musical knowledge that he crawled into a church with a number of companions, wiggled up on the organ bench, pushed up the lid with their aid, grasped with his tail the lever that started the water motor and proceeded to play the organ with his head, varying the performance by crawling over the keys. He scared the choir nearly into fits one Sunday by entering during service time.

One Bad Turn Deserved Another.

"Your experience in vaudeville, then, was not very pleasant?" Hi Tragerdy was saying.

"No," replied Lowe Comerdy; "at Oshkosh they threw rocks at each one of us as we came on for our acts."

"Pretty severe way of showing their disapproval."

"There is nothing," says Seneca, "however difficult or arduous, which the human mind cannot conquer and assiduous meditation render familiar. Whatever the soul demands of itself it obtains."

The Army and Navy.

Have covered themselves with glory during the war. The Army and Navy vest pocket memorandum book published by the Northern Pacific is a compact digest of information relative to the navies and armies of Spain and the United States at the beginning of the war. It has a map of Cuba, illustrations of naval ships, glossary of navy and army terms, translation of Spanish words, etc. Send ten cents to Chas. S. Fee, general passenger agent, N. P. R., St. Paul, Minn., for a copy.

Walking Up Stairs.

A physician who declared that few people knew how to walk up stairs properly was asked to describe how it should be done. He said: "Usually a person will tread on the ball of the foot in taking each step. This is very tiresome and wearing on the muscles, as it throws the entire suspended weight of the body on the muscles of the legs and feet. You should in walking or climbing stairs seek for the most equal distribution of the body's weight possible.

"In walking up stairs your feet should be placed squarely down on the step, heel and all, and then the work should be performed slowly and deliberately. In this way there is no strain upon any particular muscle, but each one is doing its duty in a natural manner. The woman who goes up stairs with a spring is no philosopher, or at least she is not making a proper use of her reasoning faculties.

"The habit, too, of bending over half double when ascending a flight of stairs is exceeding reprehensible. In any exertion of this kind, when the heart is naturally excited to a more rapid action, it is desirable that the lungs should have full play. The crouching position interferes with their action, the blood is imperfectly aerated, and there is trouble at once. Give the lungs a chance to do their work everywhere and at all times."—New York Sun.

Why There Was No Room.

When he was a young man, Senator Hale of Maine, like many young men who have later on in life made their mark in the world, was not without that egoism which is said to be an element of success.

On one occasion Mr. Hale was riding in an old fashioned stage coach with Senator and Mrs. Frye. The only other passenger was an Irish woman past middle life, rather comely of face, who wore enormous hoops, fashionable at that period. To amuse his fellow passengers Mr. Hale pretended to be much enamored of Biddy and would sidle up close to her as if he were about to put his arms about her, look unutterable things at her and entertained himself and his companions at the good natured creature's expense. Finally at one of the stations a man put his head in the door and asked if there was any room to be had inside the coach.

"No," said Mr. Hale. "All the seats are taken." Then turning to the Irish woman and looking into her eyes with great tenderness he said:

"There isn't any room in here, is there? We don't want any one else in here, do we?"

"No," said Biddy, with a delightful brogue. "My hoops are pretty large, and I see you feel pretty large, and there is no room here."—Detroit Free Press.

Note the Change.

In March, 1815, the Paris Moniteur announced the expected return of Emperor Napoleon from Elba. The first announcement of the Moniteur was far from polite, but as the little Corsican approached Paris a gradual change took place in its tone:

"The cannibal has left his den."

"The Corsican wolf has landed in the bay of San Juan."

"The tiger has arrived at Gay."

"The wretch spent the night at Grenoble."

"The tyrant has arrived at Lyons."

"The usurper has been seen within 50 miles of Paris."

"Bonaparte is advancing with great rapidity, but he will not put his foot inside the walls of Paris."

"Tomorrow Napoleon will be at our gates."

"The emperor has arrived at Fontainebleau."

Nansen and His Pole.

When Dr. Nansen visited Leeds, soon after his north pole expedition, a very amusing incident was witnessed. A large crowd stood outside the station to welcome him, two of his most ardent admirers being a couple of old men who kept waving their sticks and shouting themselves hoarse. When the celebrated explorer had passed in his carriage, there followed in his wake a wagon, dragged by horses, bearing a long iron pole which belonged to an electric tramway company. Directly the old men saw it the following conversation took place:

"Well, I'll be blowed, Bill, he's browt t'pole back wi him!" said one.

"Aye," said the other, "and we t'only two at's noticed it. They're all running after t'carriage, sitha. They're that ignorant—well, they can't tell t'north pole when they sees it."—London Answers.

Frost the Windows.

So many people in towns have to live in flathouses or houses in which the back windows are in such close proximity to those of their neighbors that a simple method of rendering the glass opaque, but not excluding the light, may be useful. The frosted appearance of ground glass may be nearly imitated by gently dabbing the glass over with a paint brush dipped in white paint or any other oil color. The paint should be thin and but little color taken up at one time on the end of the bristles. When applied with a light and even touch, the resemblance to frosted glass is considerable.

So Far as Appearances Go.

"Billy, do you think woman ought to smoke?"

"Well, she wouldn't look much uglier than she does chewing gum."—Detroit Free Press.

THE DOOR THAT OPENS.

Times When It Sends the Cold Shivers Down Your Back.

"Ever sit," said Mr. Gobliston, "late at night alone in a room, reading or studying, everybody gone to bed long ago, the house, the whole city, quiet, and see presently across the table on the other side of the room a door opening slowly? That's a hair raising experience. You don't know by what means the knowledge that it was opening was first conveyed to you, but you see it now, opening slowly and steadily and silently, and you get up and grasp the chair in which you have been sitting and stand up, with the table between you and him for further protection, and wait for him, but he doesn't come.

"Then you go around to the door. It has stopped now and is standing dead. It yields with no resistance except that of its own weight when you open it wider, and, holding to it, you look around the door jamb into the hall. Silence there, perfect and complete; nobody there; those were ghostly fingers, if any, that turned the knob. And so you shut the door securely and go back to your reading.

"Presently you find the door open again, but this time there is an air of vacancy about it, and now you realize what it all means. The hook of the catch bolt that you turn with a knob is worn off a little, rounded, or the metal frame around the socket into which the bolt enters may be worn, or both. Or it may be the door has shrunk or the jamb has drawn away from it, so that only the tip end of the bolt catches in the socket and has a constant tendency to work free. The slightest shaking or jarring starts it, and gradually it works itself clear of the socket, and then, if it happens to be hung just so, the door slowly opens.

"And there you are, and it is all very simple when you come to know about it, but it's never altogether agreeable You never really get used to the door that opens."—New York Sun.

THE HEATHEN CAN WAIT.

A Squatter's Idea of Where Charity Should Begin.

The other day an old squatter came to the city and attended divine services at a fashionable church. The old fellow listened with rapt attention to the sermon, occasionally nodding in approval or shaking his head in uncertainty. When a man with the contribution box approached, the squatter asked:

"What's up?"

"We are taking up a collection for the heathen, and as you seemed to be so much interested in the sermon I didn't know but you would like to give a few dimes."

"What's the matter with the heathen?"

"Why, he doesn't know anything about the gospel, and we want to raise money enough to send it to him."

"Wall, I tell yer, I don't think he'll spile afore mornin. I've got a hoss swap on han, an ef I ken get 'nuff boot rome aroun an we'll sorter look inter the matter."

"But, my friend, the heathen children need clothes."

"So does mine, by jingo. Bill ain't worn nuthin but a shirt for six months an haster stay outen perlite society. Ike's got a vacancy in his britches bigger yer hat, an Jack haster stay under the house when a stranger comes, 'case he got his clothes scorched durin hog killin. Come roun arter the swap, fur I don't think the heathen will spile afore mornin."—Arkansas Traveler.

Fishing For a Drink.

A guide who has done more or less plug fishing on Mooselookmeguntic lake says he can get a drink of nice, cold water when he is anchored on a lake, provided the water is deep enough. For deep fishing it is customary to sound for a clay bottom before casting anchor, and our informant claims that he can sound to secure a cool drink. He ties a weight to the bottom of his coffee bottle, and with the string tied also to the cork he drops it to the bottom; then by a quick jerk pulls the cork, the bottle fills with cold, clear water, and he has only to pull it in.—Phillips Phonograph.

NEW YORK WORLD.
THRICE-A-WEEK EDITION.
Practically a Daily at the Price of a Weekly.

The striking and important events of the last year have established the overwhelming value of The Thrice-a-Week World to every reader. For an almost nominal sum it has kept its subscribers informed of the progress of all our wars and, moreover, has reported them as promptly and fully as if it were a daily. With our interests still extending throughout the world, with our troops operating in the Philippines and the great Presidential campaign, too, at hand, its value is further increased.

The motto of The Thrice-a-Week World is improved. It strives each year to be better than it was the year before, and public confidence in it is shown by the fact that it now circulates more than twice as many papers every week as any other newspaper, not a daily, published in America.

We offer this unequalled newspaper and The St. Hilaire Spectator together one year for $1.65.

The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2.50.

REPORT OF THE GRAND JURY.

To the District Court in and for the County of Red Lake, State of Minnesota.

The Grand Jury assembled in said court on the 23rd day of October A. D., 1899, having been in session five and one-half days, has examined into many cases and deems it for the good of the citizens of the county to make public mention of the following matters:

Your Grand Jury recommend that in future all petty misdemeanors committed within the bounds of cities and villages in the county be prosecuted in the justice courts and by the officials of such cities and villages.

Having inquired into many matters connected with the liquor traffic in our county we recommend to county, city and village officers as well as citizens in general, that a strict watchfulness be preserved to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors to minors and also that the law of closing on Sabbath days be strictly enforced.

The Grand Jury desires to call attention of the city, village and county authorities and citizens generally to the bad effect upon our committee which is caused by the existence of houses of ill-fame among us and we deplore the fact that evidence of the guilt of certain prostitutes has been concealed from this jury.

Evidence has been found by this Grand Jury tending to show that the making and filing of false affidavits in our courts of justice is not unknown and it is recommended that the justices of the peace and all other magistrates carefully supervise the conduct of attorneys in such matters.

In cases brought before the Grand Jury, all good citizens should be willing to testify frankly and fully, but your Grand Jury deplores the disregard of public welfare shown by some of our citizens in with-holding evidence of the whole truth in such matters.

Adopted by the Grand Jury October 28th A. D., 1899.

Nels K. Anderson,
Foreman of the Grand Jury.

Miles of Postage Stamps.

C. F. Jenkins in the Scientific American, says that during the year 1898 the United States Bureau of Printing and Engraving issued 2,500,000,000 of the common red two-cent stamps, enough to go almost twice around the earth.

Stacked one upon another they would pile up 150 miles beyond our atmosphere, equal in weight to two of our big locomotives, and would keep the frost off the city of Washington.

If these stamps worked in relays, each taking the letter as far as allowed by the postal regulations, the message would be carried beyond the most remote star; and, at the fastest speed at the disposal of the postal authorities would occupy millions of times the age of the earth in transit.

Fifty Thousand Enumerators Must Gather the Census in a Month.

In June of next year the people of the United States will be counted for the twelfth time since the establishment of our government. "It will require about fifty thousand enumerators," writes Clifford Howard in the November Ladies' Home Journal, "to take the census, and their work must be finished in one months time, or by the first week of July 1900. That means that about seventy-five million people must be recorded in thirty days, or at the rate of two and a half million a day. The rate will be even greater than this, however, for in towns and cities of eight thousand inhabitants the enumeration must be completed within two weeks. The enumerators will not be permitted to have any assistance in the work; it must be done by them in person, except in such sections of the country as contain a great many foreigners, where the employment of interpreters will be allowed, as otherwise it would be next to impossible to secure the necessary data. The enumerators will be paid for their services in accordence with the amount of work they are called upon to do."

Hogs Killed by Soapsuds.

A recent bulletin from the Cornell Experiment Station shows that waste from hotels caused deaths in swine herds, and that the cause of death was the soap powder used in dish washing. This powder contained fifty per cent carbonate of soda. When fed to pigs in quantities ranging from one-half of one ounce to five ounces daily, sickness and death followed with some of the symptoms which are sometimes seen in hog cholera.

It will not be a surprise to any who are at all familiar with the good qualities of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, to know that people everywhere take pleasure in relating their experience in the use of that splendid medicine and in telling of the benefit they have received from it, of bad colds it has cured of threatened attacks of pneumonia it has averted and of the children it has saved from attacks of croup and whooping cough.
